The first marriage in the town of Sunnyside was that of Mr. Stobie to Miss Carrie Morris, the ceremony taking place December 2, 1894. Carrie Morris was born April 22, 1878, in the state of Missouri, her parents being Nathan and Jane (Lipssett) Morris. Mr. Morris is a wheelwright by trade and is one of Sunnyside's well known citizens. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Stobie has been blessed with three children, all of whom are living: Mary, born in The Dalles, Oregon, May 21, 1896; Lena, born February 14, 1898, and William, born November 30, 1899, at Sunnyside. Mr. Stobie has two sisters, Mrs. Cora Mathieson, living near Sunnyside, and Mrs. Alice Hay, residing at Denison, Texas. Mr. Stobie holds a membership in two fraternities, the Modern Woodmen and the Order of Washington, and is a believer in the principles of the Democratic party. Mrs. Stobie is a zealous member of the Christian church. In 1902, Mr. Stobie superintended the grading and seeding of six hundred acres of Sunnyside land belonging to S. J. Harrison. Forty acres of raw farming land, several business and residence lots and a comfortable five-room cottage in Sunnyside constitute Mr. Stobie's property interests. He is an energetic, capable young business man whose reliability and genial qualities have won for him the best wishes of all, and business success.

JOSEPH A. RUSH, the farmer-citizen of whom we now write, is a man of substantial attainments, who has won the position of affluence and influence he now occupies by his own, unaided efforts supported by an indomitable will and urged forward by laudable ambition. His valuable estate, upon which he resides, lies a mile and a half east of Sunnyside. A Hoosier by birth, Mr. Rush was born in St. Joseph county, Indiana, January 13, 1862. His parents, both of whom long ago passed over the dark river of death, were Benjamin and Catherine (Livengood) Rush, natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively. When Joseph was ten years of age his parents removed to Iowa, and in that state and Indiana he received his education. When seventeen he left school and worked with his father on the farm during the ensuing four years or until he was of legal age. He then commenced to do for himself, following agricultural pursuits. Iowa was his home until April, 1902, but in that year he bade adieu to the rolling prairies and rounded hills upon which he had lived so many years, and took up his abode in the Sunnyside valley, purchasing the Harrison place, which consists of one hundred acres of highly improved land. Mr. Rush further improved the place and added materially to its comfort and appearance by doing some building. He now has a modern eight-room residence, barns, feed mill and other outbuildings, making it one of the best improved farms in the valley.

Mr. Rush and Miss Etta E. Cuffell were united in marriage in 1881, Iowa being the scene of the ceremony. She is a native of that state, having been born there March 28, 1861, to the union of Albert and Rebecca (Newton) Cuffell, who still reside in Iowa. The father was born in Ohio, the mother in Indiana. Mr. Cuffell is a prosperous farmer. The household of Mr. and Mrs. Rush contains four children, the first three of whom were born in Iowa, the last in Yakima county: Faye, April 24, 1884; Albert, March 16, 1886; Edna, January 30, 1890, and Beulah, October 12, 1902. Mr. Rush has three sisters, Mrs. Lydia Throckmorton, Mrs. Cinderella Bowen and Mrs. Alice Icher, living in Iowa, and two brothers, Lewis, in Yakima county, and Allen in Iowa. Mrs. Rush's brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Martha Cagley, Mrs. Caroline Price, R. Winfield and Mrs. Mary A. Slaght, living in Iowa; Henry, in Hillyard, Washington, and William S. and Albert J., residents of Minnesota. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rush are members of the Progressive Brethren church. Mr. Rush is a Republican. Besides his Sunnyside farm, he owns three acres of orchard within the city limits of Sunnyside, on which he has a one thousand three hundred dollar residence; a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres in Yakima county, and a half section of timber land in Kittitas county. He also owns about thirty head of fine milch cows, and for the past two seasons has sold each fall between one hundred and fifty and two hundred head of hogs. Mr. Rush considers that the Sunnyside country is one of the garden spots of the west, and there intends to make his permanent home. He is a successful farmer and business man, energetic, persevering and capable, and a man of unquestioned integrity, who is a bulwark in the community.

HONORABLE HENRY DOUGLASS JORY.

James and Sarah (Budd) Jory, the parents of the prominent Yakima county citizen whose name appears at the beginning of this biography, were members of that heroic band of pioneers who toiled across the continent in 1847, enduring all the hardships of exposure, starvation and traveling through a wilderness inhabited by murderous Indians, for a home in the famed Willamette valley. The brave young pioneer was born in England in 1821, and previous to his immigration to Oregon, was an Illinois farmer; his equally brave wife was born in Michigan territory in 1828. In the Willamette valley James Jory settled upon a donation claim—a whole section of land—and upon this old homestead he and his aged wife are still living. The old homestead, situated near Salem, is the birthplace and boyhood home of Henry Douglass, who was born April 18, 1850, while yet the Northwest was barely awakening to its new life. The young Oregonian attended the schools of his neighborhood until sixteen years old; then for five years assisted his father in improving the farm. Upon arriving at his majority he settled upon a homestead in Sherman county and was there engaged in general farming with fair success until 1888. That year he sold his place and moved into Crook county, living in that frontier region, farming, mining, teaching and merchandizing, five years. One year he was engaged in organizing Farmers' Alliance granges and Industrial unions. In August, 1894, he came to Yakima county with his family, arriving with a crippled team and two dollars and fifty cents in money. The first year he was employed in farming for others, but in 1895 he purchased land near Sunnyside and cultivated it until December, 1902, when he removed to his present home above the Sunnyside canal. He did this for the purpose of experimenting with the unirrigated soil of the valley as grain soil. Should he be successful in demonstrating this, hundreds would doubtless follow his lead in wheat farming above the ditch.

At Wasco, Oregon, May 6, 1883, Mr. Jory and Miss Almira Laughter were joined for life. She is a native of Illinois, born January 1, 1867, to William and Sarah (Beals) Laughter. Her mother is also a native of Illinois, and now lives in Yakima county; the father was born in South Carolina, and is now dead. Seven children have resulted from the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jory, all of whom but one are living at home: Mrs. Althea Herim, living in Yakima county; Melvin, Edith, Harmon, Ernest, Clyde and Elfie, the last three having been born in Yakima county, the others in Oregon. Mr. Jory is one of a numerous family, his brothers and sisters being: Phebe, Thomas, John, Mrs. Mary Reynolds, Mrs. Elizabeth Swayne, Mrs. Mattie Myers, Arthur (deceased), May and Percy (deceased). Those living reside in the states of Oregon and Washington. Mr. Jory belongs to three fraternities, the Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen and the Order of Washington. As a Socialist, he has been and is prominent in political circles. In 1896 he was elected state representative from the nineteenth district on the Fusion ticket, defeating his opponent by a majority of two hundred and forty-eight votes. His record in the legislature is that of a faithful, honest law-maker, consistent with his reputation as a scrupulously honorable and conscientious man and good citizen. Both himself and wife are active members of the Methodist church. Mr. Jory owns two hundred acres of farming land, well equipped with machinery, buildings and stock, and is fortunate in possessing the confidence and sincere esteem of his fellow men.

JOSEPH A. WALLACE, whose home is seven miles northwest of Sunnyside, on rural free delivery route No. 2, is one of Yakima county's well known hop raisers. His first experience in this industry was gained in the Puyallup valley, where he settled in March, 1882, and in that pioneer hop raising section of Washington he lived for seventeen years, success crowning his energies. In the year 1893 Mr. Wallace, with keen foresight, purchased arid land in the Sunnyside region and gradually developed this property until it was in suitable condition to become his home in 1899. He was born on the peninsula of Nova Scotia, June 12, 1848, his parents being Andrew and Ann (McPhee) Wallace, also natives of that faraway settlement. The father was born in 1820, and died near Puyallup; the mother was born January 15, 1827, and is at present living near Sunnyside. The young Nova Scotian received his education in the schools of his native province, leaving school when fifteen years old and engaging in mining and lumbering. In 1873 he crossed the boundary and settled in Wyoming, where he remained two years. Returning to Canada, he followed farming five years, but met with so little success that he again crossed the border and this time became a permanent resident of the United States. First he settled near Walla Walla, engaging in the lumber business. Two years later he removed to the Sound, and in that region lived until he came to Yakima county.

In 1870 he was married to Miss Amelia Burris, born in Nova Scotia October 14, 1848, and there reared, educated and married. Her parents, William and Mary (Fisher) Burris, were also natives of Nova Scotia. Mr. Burris, now dead, was born in 1818; Mrs. Burris was born in 1829 and is still living in Nova Scotia. Mrs. Wallace has one brother, Clark, living in Massachusetts, and two sisters, Mrs. Esther Logan and Mrs. Belle Peterson, also residents of that state. Mr. Wallace has only one brother, Norman, who lives with the subject of our sketch, and one sister, Mrs. Mary Spooner, residing near Puyallup. There are two children—Charlotte A., born in Nova Scotia, July 31, 1871, and Andy B., born in Puyallup, June 23, 1888. Both are at home, the latter being an unfortunate sufferer from a pleura abscess. Mr. and Mrs. Wallace are active members of the Federated church, recently organized at Sunnyside. Upon political questions, he is in sympathy with the Republican party and is a zealous supporter of President Roosevelt and his policies. His sixty-acre Sunnyside ranch is well improved, ten acres being in hops, seven acres in orchard and about forty acres in alfalfa. He is also heavily interested in stock, owning fully one hundred head of cattle and a small bunch of horses. Mr. Wallace also retains possession of his twenty-acre farm in Pierce county, the tract being highly improved and having a fine residence, and of the property in Puyallup known as the fair-ground place. From the foregoing it will be seen that he has accumulated a goodly holding of property in the Northwest, all of which is yearly increasing in value. Mr. Wallace naturally takes a position among the leading influential citizens of the Yakima country and is regarded by all who know him as a man of honor, ability and progressive ideas along all lines.

WILLIAM H. NORMAN. The prosperous farmer and mechanic whose biography is herewith presented is one of Michigan's native sons, the descendant of two doughty pioneers of the Peninsula state. He was born in Allegan county, November 19, 1857, and there reared to manhood. His father, Robert Norman, was born in England in 1818 and came to Michigan in 1852 at a time when its scattered settlements were almost lost amid the gigantic pine forests which stretched from shore to shore of the Great Lakes. Settling in Allegan county, with only an English shilling in his pockets, but with plenty of energy and pluck, the young Englishman entered upon the work of home building. For years he threshed all the grain of his neighbors, using a flail, and finally, despite many setbacks in the way of sickness and accidents, succeeded in improving his land. He early met with an accident which rendered him a cripple for life, one of his legs being crushed by a rolling log, necessitating the use of crutches. His wife was also born in England, the date of her birth being 1824, and her maiden name being Mary A. Hazelden. She is still living in Michigan. They reared a family of ten children and accumulated a sufficient competence to keep them in comfort during their old age. Robert Norman was a very religious man, beloved by his neighbors for his sterling qualities. For fifteen years he belonged to the Baptist church; then withdrew and joined the Methodist denomination, of which he was a member at the time of his death.

William attended the public schools of Allegan county until he reached the age of fifteen, leaving his studies at that time to assist his father. During the last five years he was in school the persevering lad was able to recite only about two days in each week, but kept up with his classes by studying at night after work. At seventeen he left the old home to make his own way in the world, engaging in carpenter work and other odd jobs until 1883, when he secured a farm and settled down to agricultural pursuits. Until he was twenty-one years old he divided his earnings with the folks at home. Eight years he remained on his farm, prospering and gradually accumulating a little property. However, in December, 1891, he left Michigan for the undeveloped northwestern states, located in Yakima county and purchased his present farm, that tract then being the farthest removed from settlements of any land sold by the canal company. Mr. Norman applied his careful training in agriculture to the improvement of his Yakima home, and today has one of the most valuable estates in the valley.

His marriage to Miss Myrtil M. Gatchell, also a native of Michigan, was celebrated in Calhoun county, 1883. She was born in that county October 10, 1861, the daughter of William and Anna (Born) Gatchell, her father dying when she was a child. Mrs. Gatchell is still living. The Norman home sustained an irreparable loss November 3, 1902, when she who had made a home possible and brought happiness and cheer to a loving husband and devoted children passed out of this life to the eternal world beyond. Of the children, Louis R. was born in Michigan and is an electrician in Seattle; Lloyd J. and his sister, Lyla M., were born in Yakima county and live with their father. Mr. Norman has three sisters, Mrs. Mary A. Anway, Mrs. Lois James and Mrs. Jane Brown, and two brothers, James and Alfred H., all living in Michigan. Mr. Norman is affiliated with the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen, and thoroughly believes in the principles advocated by the Republican party. His ranch consists of one hundred and five acres, sixty-four of which were added to the original place, all under cultivation and having good farm buildings. Seventeen acres are set out to orchard. Mr. Norman also has a small interest in the Odd Fellows' hall at Sunnyside. He is a man of integrity and keen abilities, who occupies a high position in the esteem of his neighbors and has many loyal friends.

GEORGE F. BARNES. One of the most progressive and popular citizens of Sunnyside is the subject of this biography, who has the confidence of his fellow men to such an extent as to be chosen in 1902 as one of their councilmen, and in that capacity is still serving. He came to Sunnyside three years ago from Warren, Minnesota, finding the meat business of Sunnyside in a very primitive condition. He purchased the building devoted to that business, and a corner lot, and immediately commenced to supply the public with the best meats obtainable and to build up a reputation for strict integrity. So successful has he been that he has now let the contract for a two-story brick building thirty by fifty feet, the lower floor of which he expects to occupy with one of the best shops in the county, the upper floor to be devoted to offices. Mr. Barnes was born in Horicon, Wisconsin, February 25, 1855, to the union of Jonathan H. and Sarah (Sutton) Barnes. Jonathan H. was a native of England, born in 1823; Sarah Barnes was born in Quebec, Canada, in the year 1820. Both parents long ago crossed over life's great divide. As a child two years old, Mr. Barnes was taken to Steele county, Minnesota, by his parents, there attending the public schools until he was nineteen years of age. Three years longer he helped his father on the farm; then went to Marshall county, Minnesota, in 1879, and settled upon a homestead, which he cultivated with fair success until 1885. Following this experience he went to Minneapolis and engaged in the meat business with a partner, A. Campbell; afterwards buying him out and conducting the business alone. Two years and a half later he sold the business and returned to Marshall county, opening a shop at Warren. He was a citizen of Warren until February, 1901, when he came to Sunnyside, bringing his family out the following April. The business has prospered exceedingly and is rapidly growing.

The marriage of Mr. Barnes was celebrated in Waterloo, Iowa, in 1886, his bride being Miss Lucy E. Dix, the daughter of William A. and Sarah (Richardson) Dix. Mr. Dix, now dead, was a native of Vermont; Mrs. Dix, born in 1831 in Massachusetts, is still living. Mrs. Barnes is a native daughter of Illinois, born in Will county, 1859. She has two sisters, Mrs. Hattie Dix, living in Iowa, and Mrs. Emma Wells, of the Sunnyside valley, and one brother, William C., a resident of Iowa. Mr. Barnes has three sisters and one brother—Mrs. Alice A. Martin; Minnie W., in Minnesota; Mrs. Ellen C. Searl, in Sunnyside valley; and Charles E., in Minnesota. Six children, all born in Minnesota, constitute the junior portion of the Barnes home—L. Bernice, born in 1887; Maude R., in 1890; A. Judson, in 1892; J. Howard, in 1894; Myrtle, in 1896; and Alice E., in 1898. Mr. Barnes is affiliated with two fraternities, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Modern Brotherhood of America. He is active in political affairs as a member of the Prohibition party. For fifteen years he has been identified with the membership of the Methodist Episcopal church and is an active religious worker. Besides his establishment in Sunnyside, Mr. Barnes owns the property on which it stands, seven and a half acres inside the city limits, on which he has a very commodious and comfortable home, a business building and lot which he rents, a half interest in another two-acre tract of city property and real estate in Warren. He has recently begun to raise thoroughbred, registered Jersey cattle and already has several head of registered stock. Mr. and Mrs. Barnes are prominently identified with the social life of the community, and are highly esteemed for their many commendable and congenial traits of character. Mr. Barnes is a citizen of recognized strength in the county and community.

EDWARD J. YOUNG. A representative American is he whose biography is gladly accorded a place in this volume among those of the men who have taken a part in the conquest of central Washington and the development of its magnificent natural resources. Of American descent and birth, he has been trained by American institutions, imbibed the vigorous, aggressive, enthusiastic spirit of the nation, helped to advance its civilization into pioneer regions, and finally has given his life into the keeping of Old Glory to battle on foreign soil for his country's honor. He was born in Oakland county, Michigan, August 16, 1868, to the union of James W. and Harriet (Goodnow) Young, natives respectively of Pennsylvania and New York. James W. Young is still living, at the age of seventy-four, as is also his wife, upon their farm near North Yakima. The mother was born in 1840. On the great peninsula of Michigan Edward J. Young spent his childhood and early boyhood, leaving that state when he was thirteen years old and accompanying his parents to Missouri. There he finished his education in the public schools and, after spending three years on the farm with his father, at the age of twenty came to the Northwest, stopping first in Yakima county. The country proved so attractive to him, however, that he went no farther, but determined to try his fortunes in that region. For a time he worked at agricultural pursuits; then took a course of study in a Seattle business college. Upon his return he followed various occupations, principally farming. In October, 1891, with commendable zeal and keen foresight he filed upon a quarter section of sage-brush land, which has since become one of the most valuable tracts in the Sunnyside region, adjoining, as it does, the growing town of Sunnyside. Mr. Young did not make any extensive improvements upon his place until quite recently, for in 1898, as a member of Company E, First Washington volunteers, he responded to President McKinley's call to arms and went away to the Spanish-American war. His previous training in the state national guard served the young soldier in good stead, for during his eighteen months of service he received four promotions and, whereas he had enlisted as a corporal, he was mustered out in October 1899, as first lieutenant of his company, and received the special commendation of his captain for bravery and faithful service. As a soldier, he participated in the Philippine campaign and was in the battles of Santa Ana, San Pedro Macati, Manila and other noted engagements in which the First Washington took part. Upon his return to America he began improving his Sunnyside land, and now has one hundred acres under cultivation.

Lieutenant Young was united by the sacred ties of matrimony to Miss Gertrude C. Cline at Sunnyside, June 17, 1903. Miss Cline was born in Iowa, November, 1878, and came to Yakima county with her parents, W. H. and Margaret (Maddock) Cline, pioneers of the Sunnyside valley. Their biographies will be found elsewhere in this volume. Mr. Cline is one of the most prominent citizens in the county and is a man of high standing. Mr. Young has four sisters—Carrie S., Mrs. Mary Dow, Ethel and Janie, the married sister living in Oberlin, Ohio, and the rest being teachers in Yakima county; also a brother, Harvey L., living in North Yakima. Mr. Young is a member of the Presbyterian church, his wife a member of the Episcopal. As a Democrat he is active in political matters, and recently received the nomination for councilman of Sunnyside. Lieutenant Young and his bride are social favorites in the community, and he is looked upon as a capable, industrious citizen with the quality of character that augurs well for his future.

JOHN O. NATTERLUND, living until recently four miles west of Sunnyside on rural free delivery route No. 2, was a prosperous and highly respected Yakima county farmer, whose native land is Sweden. Probably but few residents of the county have traveled as extensively as has the subject of this sketch. Mr. Natterlund was born November 16, 1863, his parents being Olof and Katherine M. (Johnson) Natterlund, born in 1825 and 1828, respectively. They lived and died across the water, where the father was engaged in agricultural pursuits. The son John attended the schools of Sweden until he was fifteen years old; then assisted his father upon the farm until 1886. In that year he bade farewell to his home and made the long, dangerous trip to Australia, where he worked in the mines during the ensuing three years. Following this experience he entered the sheep business, in which he remained a year. A trip to the old home followed and a visit of two years in Sweden. However, in 1892 he again left Sweden, coming to the Pacific coast of the United States. After a few months' residence in Skagit county, Washington, he came to Yakima county, the date of his arrival at the latter place being November, 1893. Here he bought land under the Sunnyside canal and engaged in farming. In 1897 he filed a homestead claim to an adjoining quarter section, seventy acres of which he now has under cultivation, and upon this ranch he is now living.

Upon his return to Sweden from Australia he became engaged to Miss Brita Haggblad, to whom he was united by marriage in 1892. Mrs. Natterlund is a daughter of Erik and Katherine (Johnson) Haggblad, born August 15, 1861. Her parents are dead. Mr. Haggblad was born in 1825 and his wife in 1823. Mrs. Natterlund's brothers and sisters are: Hans, John, Erik, Christina and Mrs. Katherine Forslund, all living in Sweden. Hans is a merchant, John is a clerk and Erik is a farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Natterlund have been blessed with the following children: Anna V., born in La Connor, Washington, September 30, 1863; Nellie M., Yakima county, November 15, 1895; Esther K., Yakima county, December 12, 1897; Ebba C., Yakima county, September 17, 1901; and Lillie M., Yakima county, August 16, 1903. Both Mr. and Mrs. Natterlund are devout members of the Swedish Lutheran church. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically takes his stand with the Republican party. His property interests consist of his valuable homestead, all of which he soon expects to have in cultivation. Mr. Natterlund is recognized as a man of integrity and industry and one of the progressive farmers of the Sunnyside country.

ORIN S. PRATT. That misfortune cannot crush a man into dire poverty if he is possessed of ambition, energy, fortitude and ability is well illustrated in the case of the man whose name commences this sketch. He has triumphed over many vicissitudes—some of them great ones—and is at present one of the Sunnyside valley's prosperous and progressive farmers, living five miles west of the commercial center bearing that name. He is a native of Iowa, born October 29, 1857, his father and mother being George and Harriet (Sisson) Pratt. The father was born in New York and immigrated to Iowa in its early life as a state. He enlisted in the army when the Rebellion broke out, and while in the service of his country died at Helena, Arkansas, in 1863. The mother is a native of Indiana and is still living at the ripe age of eighty-two, in Kansas. Orin S. was educated in the public schools of Iowa, leaving school when sixteen to aid his mother in the cultivation of the farm. He remained with her until he was twenty-two years old, at that age leaving his Kansas home to farm his own land. He resided in Kansas until 1888, when he removed to Hood River, Oregon, and during the succeeding eight years was engaged in logging. Then he took up his abode in Clarke county, Washington, setting out a large prune orchard, which proved a complete failure. With no money to speak of and very limited resources he left The Dalles in October, 1898, and walked to Yakima county. On the Yakima reservation he leased land and sowed it to wheat. The entire crop was lost besides the expenses connected with the work. Next Mr. Pratt leased an alfalfa ranch in the Sunnyside region, but this experiment did not result successfully. However, nothing daunted, in 1899 the indomitable farmer bought twenty acres of land under the Sunnyside canal, and followed this purchase by another one involving an adjoining twenty-acre tract. This time his efforts were crowned with success, and he has recently added by purchase eighty acres more to his holdings. The original forty-acre farm, all under cultivation, is his present home. He moved his family to this home in April, 1900. However, misfortune has visited him once since he has lived on this farm—the last time, he hopes—for September 10, 1903, his house and contents were destroyed by fire, entailing a severe loss upon the plucky pioneer. With characteristic energy he has grappled with the situation, and is apparently as uncompromising with fate as ever. He has rebuilt, erecting a modern dwelling.

Mr. Pratt's marriage took place at The Dalles, in 1900, his bride being Mrs. Emma Coate Shearer, a native of Ohio, born June 14, 1862, to Moses and Elizabeth (Brown) Coate, also natives of the Buckeye state. Mr. Coate was born in 1815 and died in 1900; Mrs. Coate was born in 1822 and is at present residing in Ohio. The paternal grandparents were English; the great-grandfather on this side of the house, Marmaduke Coate, having been exiled from England on account of his Quaker beliefs. His estate is now in litigation. Mrs. Pratt's brothers and sisters are: Ezra, a minister of the Church of Christ, living in Cincinnati; Pethana, living with Mrs. Pratt; Elwood, in Ohio; Samuel, in Missouri; Mrs. Susanna Brandt, in Ohio; and Mrs. Martha Benson, also residing in Ohio. Mr. Pratt has seven brothers and sisters—Mrs. Sarah Sednecks, Mrs. Letitia Hunter, Mrs. Julia Creider, Daniel, James and Wilson, all residents of Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Pratt have four children—Walter L. Shearer, Blaine Shearer, Raphael Shearer and Earl Shearer, all born in Ohio. One child, Lillie B. Shearer, is dead. Both husband and wife are members of the Brethren church. In political matters, Mr. Pratt is a strong Republican. Besides his farm in the Sunnyside, he owns' one hundred and twenty acres of slightly improved, timbered land in Skamania county.

THOMAS S. COOPER. The man whose life story we shall briefly narrate in these pages is a native of the Pacific coast, the son of two early American pioneers of California, and himself a native child of that section of the United States, born before the admission of California as a state and about the time that vast region was ceded to the United States by vanquished Mexico. His birthplace is Sonoma county; his birth occurred January 8, 1848. The father, James Cooper, a Scotchman born across the Atlantic in 1796, came as a ship's carpenter to California in 1845. For many years he was engaged in the hotel business, but for a time previous to his death in 1856 he was engaged in farming. Sarah (Bigelow) Cooper was born in Wisconsin in 1812 and died in California at the age of sixty-four. The son Thomas was educated in the public schools of California, and engaged in farming, which he followed successfully in his native state until 1893. From time to time he visited relatives in Yakima county, and such an impression was made upon him by this section that he determined to remove hither. So in 1893 he filed a desert claim to four hundred and eighty acres and a timber culture claim to a quarter section, all in the Sunnyside region. However, on account of the great difficulty he met with in getting water on the land and making other improvements, he allowed others to take the land and purchased twenty acres from the Yakima Investment Company, adding to it from time to time until he now has one hundred and seventy-five acres, of which eighty are in cultivation.

Mr. Cooper has several brothers and sisters—John R., a farmer of Sonoma county; Mrs. Barbara Campbell, also living in Sonoma county; Mrs. Emma McDonald, of Grayson, California, whose husband served as state treasurer about 1893; Purdy J. Flint, a half-brother, one of Yakima's most prominent citizens; and Granville Harris, also a half-brother, engaged in the livery business in Sonoma county. Mr. Cooper also has two children—Raymond, born December 10, 1890, and Edna, born May 11, 1892, both living in California. Naturally a man interested in public affairs, he is active in politics, being a Republican. Besides the fine Sunnyside ranch he possesses, Mr. Cooper owns city property in Yakima City, five hundred thousand shares of stock in the Clarabell Consolidated Mining Company, operating in Ferry county, near Republic, and a quarter interest in the Grand View mine of the same district. Mr. Cooper has had a long and interesting experience in far western life, and were it possible to accord the space several pages could be filled with accounts of his various adventures and travels. His life nearly spans the growth of the Pacific West under the dominion of white settlers. As one of those pioneers and a man of strength and high standing in the community in which he lives, his biography is well deserving of a place in these records.

DAVID E. WOODWELL, at present engaged in agricultural pursuits upon his farm four miles northwest of Sunnyside, has had a career of varied and interesting experiences extending from Maine to California and from Washington to the island of Cuba, following at different times the occupations of sailor, merchant, printer, editor and farmer. Born March 31, 1849, at Newburyport, Massachusetts, the son of David T. and Mary N. (Haskell) Woodwell, he is a member of a distinguished New England family. Of his father, who died March 27, 1884, in his native state, at the age of sixty-four, a local newspaper said: "Honorable David T. Woodwell, of the Woodwells of ward one, shipbuilders for generations, and himself brought up to the trade, carried on that business; later was in shipchandlery and hardware, also in other commercial enterprises, and accumulated a competency. We knew him, as all knew him, to respect him for his industry, persistency in what he undertook and his solid integrity. Nobody questioned his word or the purity of his motives. His life was throughout a decided success. He filled many positions of trust and honor; was in all branches of the city government—school committee, common council and board of aldermen—was a representative and senator in the legislature (five years service); a director in the Ocean bank; and active in politics, religion and public improvements." The mother of subject was born in Massachusetts in 1824, and is still living in Newburyport. After attending school until he was sixteen years old, David E. entered the employ of a wholesale and retail grocery firm, but two years later went as cabin boy on one of his ships to Cuba. In 1869, he went west to Omaha, arriving about the time the railroad reached that frontier town. From there he went to Des Moines, clerking and surveying. A trip home followed, during which he entered his uncle's newspaper office at Worcester and learned the business. Upon the latter's death, he left Worcester and entered a printing office in Newburyport, where he remained until 1873. He then crossed the continent to California, operated an apary there for a time, and returned to Massachusetts, where he was married. In 1881, he removed to Illinois and in that state followed farming and newspaper work eight years or until 1889, when he again crossed the continent, locating in North Yakima. In that city he entered the service of the Yakima Republic as a printer and remained in its employ most of the time until 1896. Four years previously, Mr. Woodwell purchased twenty acres of land under the Sunnyside canal, his purchase being the first in the Sunnyside district. From year to year he has made improvements on this tract, until now it is all under cultivation and one of the finest farms in the country. On account of poor school facilities, he did not remove his family to the place until August, 1902, though he himself was there much earlier.

His marriage took place in Salem, Massachusetts, in February, 1881, his bride being Miss Julia H. Smith, one of Newburyport's native daughters, born September 22, 1850. Enoch W. and Elizabeth (Donnell) Smith, the parents, were born in Newburyport, 1825, and Brunswick, Maine, 1827, respectively. Mr. Smith is dead; Mrs. Smith is living in Salem, Massachusetts. Mr. Woodwell has five brothers, William H., living in Hampton, Connecticut; Louis E., Elbridge G., Frank A. and Herbert N., living in Newburyport, and one sister, Mary, also living at the old home. Mrs. Woodwell has one sister, Mrs. Ida Edwards, residing in Salem. There are three children: Arthur H., born in Illinois, December 1, 1881, an electrician in Spokane; Mabel F., born in Illinois, April 20, 1886, and Lena T., born in North Yakima, May 9, 1891, both daughters at home. Mr. and Mrs. Woodwell are attending the Congregational church. He is a Republican and takes an interest in politics as in all other public affairs. Mr. and Mrs. Woodwell are highly esteemed by all who know them and possess many warm and loyal friends, attracted by the true worth, hospitality and congenial natures of this New England family.

WALLACE GOODSSELL. No man in the whole Sunnyside country is more public-spirited or energetic than he whose name initiates this article. He has won, by his good works, a warm place in the hearts of his neighbors and fellow citizens and his loyal friends are numbered by the score. Mr. Goodsell is a native of Macoupin county, Illinois, born September 14, 1850, into the home of Charles and Cloe J. (Howard) Goodsell. His father came from Connecticut, where he was born in 1827; the maternal ancestry were inhabitants of Massachusetts, and Mrs. Goodsell was born near Boston in 1832. Both parents long ago joined the great silent majority. When Wallace was ten years old, his parents moved to Minnesota, where the father pursued his trade of ornamental carving and wagon making. In the public schools of Hennepin and Wright counties the young man received his education, which was later supplemented by private instruction in commercial studies. At the age of eighteen he entered a general store and for seven years devoted himself assiduously to mastering the business, following this service by opening a store of his own in 1876. He successfully conducted this until 1888, when he sold the property and removed to Spokane. He was engaged as a traveling salesman for three years thereafter or until 1891, when he bought one hundred and ten acres under the Sunnyside canal. Subsequently he sold this tract and in April, 1901, purchased sixty acres three and a half miles west of Sunnyside, upon which he now lives. It is all under water and in cultivation, making it a most valuable farm.

At Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, in 1875, Mr. Goodsell was united in marriage to Miss Leah M. Barnett, who is now living in Spokane. One child was born to this union, Charles H., at Howard Lake, Minnesota, in November, 1877. He graduated from the Washington Agricultural College at Pullman in 1901, and is now following the profession of a mining engineer. Mr. Goodsell had one brother, George, and a sister, Mrs. Mary Miller, both of whom are dead. Fraternally, Mr. Goodsell is connected with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons; politically, he is a man of pronounced Republican views and an active worker in the party's behalf. As previously stated, Mr. Goodsell is an unusually strong man in public affairs. He it was who, in the face of an almost united and general opposition, fought successfully for the establishment of a free rural delivery route between Zillah and Sunnyside, which resulted in the abandonment of two post-offices, Outlook and Riverside, in whose establishment he was the leading factor. The free delivery scheme had been tried by individuals before the government stepped in, and had been far from satisfactory. It was Mr. Goodsell, also, who led successfully the movement which induced the Northern Pacific to establish a siding at Alfalfa and secured the establishment of a ferry at that point on the Yakima river, thus saving the Outlook settlement at least seven miles of railroad travel. When it was found that the current of the Yakima river was so swift as to make the operation of the ferry impracticable, Mr. Goodsell took the lead in securing the construction of one of the best bridges on the Yakima to take the place of the ferry. Always unselfish, practicable, capable and honest, he has indeed contributed his share toward the development of his county and home and has won a most enviable position among his fellow citizens.

GEORGE A. IDE, who was, until the establishment of rural free delivery route No. 2, the postmaster of Outlook postoffice, is one of the well known, respected and successful ranchmen of the Sunnyside region. His farm lies five miles northwest of the town of Sunnyside, and is one of the prettiest, best improved little places in the county, consisting of seventeen and a half acres, three of which are set out in orchard, and the remainder in alfalfa and other farm products. A comfortable ten-room residence, good outbuildings and gardens give the place a most inviting appearance. The son of Harvey A. and Elizabeth (Drew) Ide, he was born October 2, 1849, within sight of Vermont's famed Green mountains. In that state his father came into being in the year 1827, and there, also, the mother was born, four years later, and is still living. However, Vermont did not remain the family home long after George's birth, for in 1852 they traveled by ox conveyance to Fillmore county, Minnesota, and in that wilderness founded a new home, amidst the pineries. The father, whose trade was that of a shoemaker, engaged in farming. When seventeen years old George entered a cooper shop, and for fifteen years was engaged in that occupation, being foreman after his first year's work. During this time he and his father purchased land in Swift county, upon which George A. moved in 1881, remaining there until 1894. In 1885 his father died. The farm was sold in July, 1894, and after carefully looking over Washington, Mr. Ide concluded to cast his lot with the people of Yakima county. So he purchased his present place and removed thereto. July 24, 1897, he was appointed postmaster at Outlook, and held that position until relieved by the government accepting his resignation recently.

Mr. Ide was married in Fillmore county, Minnesota, February 23, 1873, to Miss Ella J. Cade, the daughter of John and Susan (Brey) Cade, natives of England. They immigrated to America about the middle of the last century, settling in Wisconsin, where Mrs. Ide was born in 1855. Both parents are dead. Mr. Ide has one sister, living in Walla Walla, Washington. Mrs. Mary McGrew, the wife of a prominent farmer and banker, who has served in the Washington legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Ide have six children: George C., born September 23, 1877; Ethel E., March 7, 1881; Mary A., March 14, 1884; John, October 15, 1886; Roy, October 17, 1890, and Nellie, June 28, 1897; all born in Minnesota, except Nellie. Mr. Ide is affiliated with the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and on national political issues is a supporter of the principles advocated by the Republican party. Besides cultivating his farm, Mr. Ide is well known in commission circles, buying, it is said, more hay in Yakima county last season than any other man. He is one of the solid men of the county, a man of correct principles, capable and always interested in anything tending to advance the morale or business interests of the region in which he lives.

ANDREW CRESTENSON, who lives on rural free delivery route No. 2, four miles west of Sunnyside, is one of the pioneers of that region, having settled there in 1892. He is of Norwegian descent, and was born in Norway, April 28, 1846. His parents, Christen Anderson and Engrid (Oleson) Anderson, born in 1822 and 1812, respectively, came to America in 1858, settling in Yellow Medicine county, Minnesota. They lived seventy-five miles from a railroad, and were among the earliest pioneers of the county. The mother died there in 1884; Mr. Anderson is still living. When twenty-four years old, Andrew began farming on his own account, and continued to be a resident of Minnesota until 1880. At that time he removed to a homestead in North Dakota, forty miles from the railroad, and cultivated this place during the succeeding ten years. Coming west to Washington in 1890, he first spent two years on the Sound, then, in 1892, came to Yakima county and purchased the place on which he is now residing.

Mr. Chrestenson was married while a resident of Minnesota in 1870 to Miss Anna Oleson, the daughter of Ole Schelrud and Emma (Johnson) Schelrud, natives of Norway. Mr. Schelrud is still farming in Minnesota, at the ripe old age of eighty-four; Mrs. Schelrud died in 1869, at the age of forty-eight. Mrs. Chrestenson was born June 24, 1842, in Norway. She has several brothers and sisters: Emma, John, Ole, Gunhilo, Carrie, Lewis and Helga, living in Minnesota, Wisconsin and North Dakota. Mr. Chrestenson has two brothers, Ole, living in Minnesota, and Christen, also a resident of that state, both being farmers. Mr. and Mrs. Chrestenson have five children, all born in Minnesota: Christian A., born August 15, 1872; Ole and Mrs. Emma Anderson, twins, born October 21, 1874; Albert, born January 17, 1877, and Julius, born July 30, 1885. Mr. Chrestenson is well posted on the political questions of the day, and has taken his stand with the Socialist party. He was reared as a Swedish Lutheran. The ten-acre garden spot he owns and lives upon is one of the best improved little places in the valley, and is producing as much income to its owner as many eastern farms of many times that size.

CALEB W. TAYLOR, one of Sunnyside's pioneer contractors and now one of its thrifty farmers, living three miles west of Sunnyside City, was born in Warren county, Ohio, November 28, 1848. Samuel and Patience (Frybargar) Taylor, the parents, were born in Indiana, May 22, 1817, and Germany, December 12, 1816, respectively. Both are now dead. The subject of this biography attended school in Ohio until he was twelve years old and completed his education in the common schools of Iowa, his parents removing to that state in 1860. Upon leaving school he assisted his father on the farm, remaining with him until his death, September 26, 1875, after which the young man took charge of the place and managed it until the division of the estate in 1880. Then he engaged in farming in Davis county, remaining there four years. However, in 1885, he temporarily abandoned agriculture and entered the hardware business at Eldon, Iowa, but was in this business only eighteen months, selling the property and immigrating to Seattle, Washington. While a young man at home he had learned the carpenter's trade, and in the new Washington home he took up this occupation. In the spring of 1894, Mr. Taylor came to Yakima county and located at Sunnyside, where he was engaged in building and contracting until the spring of 1903. At that time he purchased one hundred and twenty acres of land under the canal, forty acres of which he deeded his son. He is now busy improving and cultivating the remaining eighty.

The marriage of Mr. Taylor to Miss Martha Pickens, the daughter of Smith and Julia (Lee) Pickens, was celebrated in Iowa, October 10, 1879. The bride was a native of Iowa; her father, a Virginian, is still living, a resident of Ohio. The Taylor home was inexpressibly saddened in April, 1891, when the loving wife and mother passed away, after a lingering illness of more than three years' duration. Four children were left to mourn their loss, all of whom are living at home: Emmett R., born in Iowa; Nora Arena, born in Iowa, February 12, 1882; James C., born in Iowa, September 26, 1883; Grace, born in Iowa, June 21, 1885. Mr. Taylor has one sister, Mrs. Mary E. Mangum, living in Council Bluffs, Iowa; and three brothers, Jacob F., an Oklahoma farmer; William V., a resident of Eldon, and Samuel A., residing in Seattle. His fraternal affiliations are limited to membership in one order, the Odd Fellows; politically, he is a Republican. The family are united with the Christian church. Twenty-six acres of the farm are now under cultivation, excellent buildings have been erected, and the remaining acreage is to be improved as rapidly as possible. Mr. Taylor commands the respect and best wishes of his neighbors, of all who know him, and is a man of strength in the community.

FRANK WINSOR. The subject of this biographical sketch is a native of Missouri, which has, perhaps, furnished a larger percentage of Western pioneers than any other state in the union. Born July 3, 1858, he is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Winsor, the father having been a lawyer and farmer and a native of Pennsylvania. The mother gave up her life that her son, Frank, might live. He was educated in St. Louis, Missouri, leaving school at an early age to work on the farm. In 1880, he purchased a farm in South Dakota and successfully cultivated it during the succeeding thirteen years. Then, however, he sold his property and came to Yakima county, buying a tract of land under the Sunnyside canal. This he has improved and it now constitutes one of the best farms under the canal.

He was married in St. Louis, Missouri, in 1879, to Miss Leah Brown, the daughter of Thomas and Sarah E. Brown, both natives of England; the parents are now dead. Mrs. Winsor was born in Illinois, in 1858, and died in her forty-fourth year, leaving to mourn her loss, besides a devoted husband, four children: Mary E., born in Missouri, April 10, 1881; Clark, born in South Dakota, June 1, 1883; Sylvester, November 15, 1887, and Frank, also born in South Dakota, February 14, 1891. All are living at home with their father. He has one brother, Sidney A., living in California. Mr. Winsor is a staunch believer in the principles promulgated by the Democratic party and takes an active interest in all elections. He is a zealous member of the German Baptist Brethren church, better known as the Dunkard society. Mr. Winsor's property interests consist of his fine forty-acre improved farm, all under water and in cultivation, eight acres being devoted to a select orchard, and a band of sixteen cattle. The farm has excellent buildings upon it. As a progressive, reliable citizen he is known to the community and as a man of generous impulses and loyalty he is known to his friends.

FRED MANSFIELD, living five and a half miles northwest of Sunnyside, bears the enviable reputation of being one of the most popular farmers in the Sunnyside valley—a reputation due largely to his generosity in both private and public affairs and the high degree in which he possesses the virtues of industry and perseverance. Coming to Yakima county in 1891 with just one dollar and seventy-five cents, by faithful, patient toil he has accumulated a property worth at least five thousand dollars and taken a position among the successful men of the county.

Mr. Mansfield came from that good old state, Missouri, whose sons are scattered far and wide over the west and are everywhere among the west's leading citizens. Kirksville is the place of his birth, and December 17, 1865, the date. His parents, William and Jane (Smith) Mansfield, are natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania, respectively, and are still residing in Missouri, where Mr. Mansfield is engaged in the hotel business. Fred Mansfield was educated in the public schools of his native state, completing his education at the age of sixteen. The next five years he spent on his father's farm, after which he went to St. Joseph and worked at various pursuits until 1888. Then he traveled in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and other states, finally arriving in Washington during the year 1890. That year he was employed on the Sound, crossing the Cascades to Yakima county in 1891. In 1895 he purchased land under the Sunnyside canal and in the years subsequent to that date Mr. Mansfield has devoted himself to improving this property. Thirty acres of the place are in clover, of which he has been cutting an average crop of five and a half tons per acre per annum—abundant testimony to the soil's fertility. Seven acres are set out to orchard. Recently he completed a fine residence on his farm. He has one sister, Mrs. Grace Arbethnot, and one brother, Walter, both living in Kansas City, Missouri. In political affairs, Mr. Mansfield takes an active interest, voting the Republican ticket. It is said of him that he has never refused to use his hands, his name or his purse when asked to assist in promoting public improvements or enterprises essential to the best interests of the community. Mr. Mansfield is one of the substantial, progressive citizens of the county.

ALBERT L. YAKEY, another Ohioan who has won success and position among his fellow men in the Yakima country, resides in Sunnyside, and follows agricultural pursuits upon a splendid little farm situated near-by. Like many another citizen of that region, he came to the county with practically nothing except his talents, ambitions and energies, and what he has accumulated since has been won through developing the latent resources of the country around him. Born at Senecaville, Guernsey county, August 3, 1854, he came into the home of Peter H. and Isabella (McBerney) Yakey, of German and Irish descent. His father was born March 4, 1820, in that same village, and is at present a retired farmer, living in Indiana. For many years he served as county judge. Mrs. Yakey, also a native of Ohio, died when Albert was four years old. He accompanied his father to Trenton, Missouri, in 1860, and in that community was reared, graduating from the public schools in 1879. Subsequently he was granted a teacher's certificate, and during the next eleven years he followed the profession of pedagogy. In 1890 he removed to Washington, locating near Seattle, where he was engaged in carpenter work and logging for four years. The year 1894 witnessed his arrival in Yakima county. At first the family picked hops; then Mr. Yakey leased a farm, and was doing fairly well until the hard times crushed him. With commendable courage, however, he struggled along, gradually getting into better financial condition. In 1899 he bought forty acres of land in the Sunnyside region, and this he quickly placed in cultivation, and has farmed since that year, meeting with excellent success. Recently he has added to his holdings in the Sunnyside region another twenty acres, now in crop.

September 9, 1880, in Missouri, he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth L. Wallingford, a daughter of George W. Wallingford, who was unfortunately scalded to death at Raton, New Mexico, in a railway wreck. Mrs. Yakey was born in Iowa, September 15, 1865, and is the descendant of Iowa native pioneers, her father having been born there in 1834, and her mother about the same year. The latter is now deceased. Mr. Yakey has one sister, Mrs. Cassie M. Saddler, a widow, living in Newark, Indiana; Mrs. Yakey also has a sister, Mrs. Nettie M. Stombaugh, of Lincoln, Nebraska. Five children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Yakey: Ethel, a stenographer, born in Missouri, August 8, 1881; Berl, born in Missouri, January 31, 1883; Myrtle, born in Kansas, in May, 1885; Frank H., born in Missouri, in May, 1889, died March 6, 1898, and Jennie, born in Washington, in May, 1893. Mr. Yakey is quite prominent in fraternal circles, being connected with the Odd Fellows, as secretary of Sunnyside lodge, No. 149; with the Modern Woodmen, and with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, as recorder of the Sunnyside lodge. He has been an Odd Fellow since October, 1879. In politics, he is identified with the Republican party. He is a man of high principles, excellent abilities and such qualities as command the esteem of his fellow citizens.

FRANK S. VETTER. One of Sunnyside's youngest, and at the same time most successful and popular business men, is the citizen whose name appears at the beginning of this sketch. He is an excellent representative of the type of young Americans which is boldly and energetically pushing its way into our national life and making the nation ring with its strong, vigorous blows for progress and expansion along every line of human endeavor. George and Florence (Tupper) Vetter, prominent pioneer residents of the Sunnyside region, whose biographies will be found in this work, are the parents of Frank S. The father is an ex-mayor of Sunnyside, and was recently appointed postmaster of that city. Both father and mother are natives of Chicago, Illinois. While residing in Peoria, Illinois, Frank S. was born, the date of his birth being July 2, 1882. From Illinois the family soon removed to Aberdeen, South Dakota, where the father was engaged in wheat raising for twelve years, and in this state Frank began his education. When a lad of twelve, his parents immigrated to Washington, and settled upon land in the Sunnyside country. The family lived on this farm until 1898, when Mr. Vetter was appointed postmaster at Sunnyside. The young man's school education terminated in that town when he was eighteen years old. Three years of clerkship in a general mercantile store followed, his resignation taking effect September 16, 1903. With keen foresight the young business man saw an opportunity to do better in another line, and so purchased the property and business of John Cady, on Sixth street. Shortly after this purchase, Vetter's restaurant, confectionery and bakery were opened to the general public; the enterprise met with encouraging success. Later Mr. Vetter bought the old Cady hotel and residence, which have been transformed into a well-equipped hostelry. His places of business are being patronized by an increasing trade, and further improvement, perhaps expansion, may be expected in the near future. Ordinarily men of Mr. Vetter's age are regarded as too young to safely conduct a large business alone, but he has demonstrated a capacity for management extremely rare for one of his years, and appears to be suited by nature for his present occupation. He is connected with the Modern Woodmen and its auxiliary fraternity, and is an active Republican. Mr. Vetter commands the respect and esteem of the community in which he lives, and possesses many loyal friends, both young and old.

WILLIAM THOMPSON STOBIE, Sr. But few, if any, citizens of the Yakima country have had more varied or exciting lives than has the man of whom we now write, who is at present residing in Sunnyside. Of Scottish descent, he was born in Perthshire, Scotland, November 20, 1844, to the union of James and Elizabeth (Thompson) Stobie. At the age of two he crossed the ocean with his parents to Canada, where the family settled upon a farm. The father had followed farming only a few years in Canada, before his death occurred; Mrs. Stobie lived until 1888. While in his eleventh year, the subject of this biography left home and school, because of excessive punishment at the hands of his teacher, and apprenticed himself to a blacksmith in Ottawa, under whom he spent four years learning his trade. He then crossed the border into New York state, and there became employed as assistant in a glass factory for a time. Returning to his trade, he worked at that occupation until February, 1863, when he enlisted in Battery K, First New York light artillery, and in this battery served his adopted country until mustered out at Elmira, New York, in July, 1865. Because of his ability as a horse-shoer, demonstrated by shoeing Captain Stoking's horse, he was assigned to the division blacksmith shop as foreman and appointed an artificer, a rank equaling that of sergeant. He participated in many famous battles and skirmishes. After the war he conducted a blacksmith shop three years at Rotterdam, New York, but in 1869 sold it and moved to Missouri, where he first followed his trade and later entered the horse business, buying and selling. Drifting into handling racing stock, he followed the circuits two years. While thus engaged, he rode the famous old English horse, Blackjack, who was never beaten, and often met the noted James and Younger boys, whom he characterizes as honorable and gentlemanly in their treatment of him. In 1871 he removed to Kansas and followed his trade two years, but upon the Black Hills mining excitement reaching Kansas, he again laid aside the hammer and anvil and started for the mines. At Cheyenne, Wyoming, his party was driven back by the Indians. Then Mr. Stobie visited Denver, conducted a blacksmith shop two years at Idaho Springs, but was again whirled away in a mining excitement—that of the Leadville district in 1878. He established the first freighting company between Leadville and Weston, operating until the railroad reached Leadville. Next he went to Pitkin, Colorado, with the pioneer six-mule team that reached that camp, occupying seven weeks on the trip. His next experience was in railroad contracting on the Rio Grande in Colorado and New Mexico. After four years of this kind of work he visited Dakota, Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas, farming some in the latter state, but finally being driven away by the grass-hopper hordes. Railroad work in Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, Oregon and Washington followed this experiment. In 1891, he came to Yakima county and entered the service of the company constructing the Sunnyside canal, remaining with this company until the great waterway and many of its laterals were completed. He bought sixty acres of land under the canal in 1894 and immediately moved upon it and began improving it. His residence was the best one in the district at the time it was built and he claims the honor of raising the first crop of alfalfa produced in the Sunnyside region. Also Mr. Stobie was given the first mail contract for carrying the mails between Mabton and Sunnyside, and erected the first livery barn in the latter place. Thus it will be seen that he was among the leading-pioneers of his community.

Mr. Stobie was married in New York, November, 1866, to Miss Mary J. Martin, a native of New York state, born in the year 1848. Her parents, Hugh and Margaret Martin, both dead, were natives of Ireland. Mr. Stobie has three brothers living, Peter, James and Joseph, and two sisters, Elizabeth and Mrs. Amelia Anderson. To this union were born three children: Mrs. Cora Mathieson, of Sunnyside; Mrs. Alice Hay, who lives in Texas, and William T., junior, a prosperous citizen of Sunnyside. Mr. Stobie was married a second time in Denver, on April 27, 1877, to Miss Dorothy Thurmann, daughter of Adolphus W. and Mary E. Thurmann, natives of Germany. Mrs. Stobie was born in Germany, and came to the United States in 1868. Mr. Stobie is interested in political matters and is to be found in the ranks of the Republicans on all national issues. He now owns one hundred and forty acres of fine land, all in cultivation, and about thirty head of select horse stock, some of which are registered. It is his intention to engage in breeding blooded animals, for which industry he is surely well qualified. In 1879, while with a small party of homeseekers in Colorado, which had started out from Georgetown, Mr. Stobie met with a most exciting adventure. When about one hundred and fifty miles out, near the boundaries of Utah and Colorado, the party encountered a band of five hundred Indians, who ordered their return to the settlements. The chief and several of his sub-chiefs were invited to supper, and during the night all but two of the whites escaped in the darkness; the two who refused to leave were killed. Mr. Stobie himself drove one hundred and twenty-five miles without stopping and for sixty miles was closely pursued by the redskins. Friendly whites finally interfered and drove back the Indians. The doughty pioneer has at last found his haven of rest in the beautiful, thrifty Yakima region and is now numbered among Sunnyside's esteemed and successful citizens.

OLIVER R. FERRELL. The popular and successful Yakima county stockman who forms the subject of this biography came to the Yakima country a quarter of a century ago, and has personally participated in the rise and decline of that region's once master industry—stock raising. Between the years 1878 and 1880, he rode the ranges of Klickitat county; in 1880, he came with his parents into Yakima county and two years later entered the service of Washington's cattle king, Benjamin Snipes, for whom he worked most of the time during the next ten years. Then he engaged in cattle raising for himself and, with the exception of the first winter, has been unusually successful since that time. He still has one of the largest bands in the region, but is reducing its numbers steadily because of the lack of range. Few know the Yakima country as well as he, for he rode over most of it when the population was only a few hundred scattered inhabitants and the larger cities were either non-existent or mere hamlets. Mr. Ferrell was born in California, November 5, 1864, the son of John and Julia (Sheldon) Ferrell, natives of Ohio, born in 1833. Mrs. Ferrell is dead, but her husband is living at the ripe age of seventy-two, residing with his son George. The biography of this honored old pioneer will be found elsewhere in this history.

Oliver R. attended school in California until he reached the age of thirteen, when he accompanied his parents to The Dalles, Oregon. In 1880, he came with them to the Yakima valley, the father settling where Mr. Ferrell's ranch lies, seven miles southwest of Sunnyside.

Oliver R. Ferrell was united in marriage to Miss Adelia Switzler, November 3, 1867, on Switzler island, in the Columbia river. She is the daughter of John B. and Mary (Smoot) Switzler, natives of Missouri, who are at present living in Walla Walla county, where Mr. Switzler is a well known stockman. Mr. Switzler was born in 1842; his wife in 1850. Mrs. Switzler is a cousin of Senator Reed Smoot, Utah's noted Mormon. Montana is the birthplace of Mrs. Ferrell, the date of her birth being April 16, 1867. She has one brother, William, an Oregon stockman, and two sisters, Mrs. Minnie Sharpstein, the wife of a Walla Walla lawyer, and Eva, who lives with her parents. Mr. Ferrell has six brothers and sisters: Mrs. Louise Adams, in Yakima City; George, a ranchman living near Mr. Ferrell; Francis, a resident of North Yakima; Mrs. Kate Gibbons, at The Dalles; Mrs. Elsie St. John, in Everett, Washington, wife of the principal of the public schools there, and herself secretary of the State Federation of Woman's Clubs; John, also a Yakima stock raiser, living near his brothers. Mr. Ferrell is a Republican in his political sympathies, and fraternally, is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen. They have one child, Mary Thelma, born February 25, 1904. Mrs. Ferrell is a prominent member of the Episcopal church, in the work of which she has been active for years. Among Mr. Ferrell's vivid recollections is that of his experience during the hard winter of 1889-90, one of the severest on record in Northwestern history. There was considerable snow, the cold was intense and stockmen found themselves short of feed in February. Then it started to thaw, leading the worried stockmen to turn out their cattle. Snipes & Allen released about two thousand five hundred head below Prosser, and hardly were they on the range before winter resumed its icy blasts. The first of March Mr. Ferrell and other employees went down to see how the cattle were getting along and found five lonely steers. The rest had perished. More than seven hundred and fifty dead cattle were found in one canyon, as high as fifteen being in a bunch. The blow this was to stockmen can better be imagined than told. Mr. Ferrell owns three hundred acres of fine valley land, of which one hundred and fifty acres are in hay, three hundred head of cattle, a considerable number of horses, and small stock and a comfortable, modern home. The first frame house built below Union Gap stands on his place. Mr. and Mrs. Ferrell possess a host of warm friends and well wishers and as a man of strict integrity, energy and progressive ideas, Mr. Ferrell is one of the respected citizens of the county.

ANDREW GREEN, one of the Sunnyside valley's prosperous agriculturists, residing five miles southwest of its commercial center, is a native of the Empire state, his birth having occurred in Rensselaer county, August 2, 1833. His parents, both of whom are now dead, were William D. and Anna (Belden) Green, the former born in Rhode Island, the latter a native of Massachusetts. William D. Green was a farmer by occupation, and upon the old New York homestead Andrew spent the early years of his life. His schooling was ended when he arrived at the age of seventeen. After assisting his father a year in the farm work, the young man spent three years in the saw and shingle mills of New York, then entered the pineries of southern Michigan, locating at Big Rapids. For twenty-four years he was engaged in cutting the timber around him and sawing it into lumber, shingles, etc., meeting with fair success in the once master industry of the beautiful peninsula. In 1881, however, he removed to North Dakota and commenced raising wheat. Five North Dakota winters convinced him that the climate of that region was uncongential, and in 1886 he became a resident of the Kittitas valley, Washington, settling at Thorp. There he worked at the lumber business until 1893, in which year he filed a homestead claim to the quarter section now his farm.

Mr. Green was married to Miss Donna M. Harrison, the daughter of James and Rebecca (Brown) Harrison, at Clarkston, Oakland county, Michigan, September 30, 1863. She is also a native of New York, having been born in Jamestown, May 12, 1834. James Harrison, born in 1801, in Bridgeport, Connecticut, was a distant relative of President W. H. Harrison; Mrs. Harrison was born, February, 1809, in New Hampshire. Mrs. Green has the following brothers and sisters: William H., living in Jamestown, New York; Andrew J., a California jeweler; Mrs. Rebecca Dexter, Minneapolis, Minnesota; Mrs. Ellen N. Rawson, Jamestown, New York; Mrs. Eliza Green, Edwardsville, Kansas; and Mrs. Mary C. Mason, Seattle; Mr. Green has two brothers, George W., in Spokane; Lewis H., Edwardsville, Kansas; and one sister, Mrs. Amanda A. Mason, Big Rapids, Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Green are the parents of three children, who are Mrs. Lottie H. Spratley, born in Michigan, April 11, 1866, living in Virginia City, Minnesota; Mrs. Anna R. Sandel, born in Michigan, April 22, 1869, living at Bucoda, Washington; and Mrs. Florence G. Morrison, born in Michigan, April 21, 1872, living in Yakima county. Both husband and wife are devout members of the Episcopal denomination, and are highly esteemed for their many virtuous qualities. Mr. Green has forty acres of his farm under cultivation and is rapidly improving the remainder. In the pleasant, cozy home they have established in fertile and sunny Yakima county, surrounded by friends and well wishers, these hardy pioneers are contentedly passing the winter of their lives.

AUBREY C. WEBBER, electrical engineer, superintendent of the Sunnyside Co-operative Telephone Company, and farmer, lives two and a half mile east of Sunnyside. He is a native of Maine, born May 4, 1872, in that extreme northeastern section of the United States. His father, John C. Webber, was also born in the Pine Tree state, the date of his birth being 1848; he died in 1876. Mrs. Alice A. (Record) Webber is likewise a native of Maine, born in 1852; she is living with her son Aubrey. When a child of six years, his mother removed with him to Minnesota and subsequently into South Dakota. In these states he received his general education. When he was eighteen, he came to the Northwest, going first to Seattle, where he secured work with a grocery company. In 1892 he left Washington and engaged in electrical work for the Salt Lake Rapid Transit Company. His first work was that of a lineman, but after six months of service, the apt young workman was promoted to a foremanship and in that capacity remained in the employ of the company until 1897. Then he returned to Seattle, entered the service of the Union Electric Company, first as lineman and then as inspector, and subsequently was offered and accepted the position of general foreman of construction work for the Denny-Blaine Land Company, afterwards the Seattle Electric Company. However, in March, 1899, Mr. Webber again won promotion, this time going back to Salt Lake City as assistant superintendent of the Salt Lake Rapid Transit Street Railway Company. A year later he again went up the ladder of his profession, going to Everett, Washington, in May, 1900, as superintendent of construction for the Everett Railway & Electric Company, remaining in this position until June 9, 1901. At that time he took possession of a twenty-acre tract of land that he had purchased in the Sunnyside valley in 1898, and during the next year improved his farm. He soon found a chance, however, to use his electrical training without leaving home, for in the fall of 1902 he was induced to assume the superintendency of the local telephone company and since that time has been the practical head of this enterprise, besides cultivating his farm. It is a well equipped line which is rapidly spreading its web over the county.

Miss Minnie Hennsey, a resident of Salt Lake City, became Mr. Webber's bride December 15, 1893, the nuptial knot being tied in that metropolis. She was born in Newburgh, New York, April 30, 1872, and when a child was left an orphan by the death of both father and mother. Mrs. Webber has two brothers, Frank, living in New York, and William, an orange grower of Florida. Mr. and Mrs. Webber's home is brightened by the presence of one son, Carroll A., whose birth occurred in Salt Lake City, July 3, 1897. Mrs. Webber is a member of the Congregational communion and highly esteemed by all who know her. Mr. Webber is connected with the Independent Order of Foresters and politically, is a staunch Republican. Besides his well improved farm, he owns a small band of horses and twenty-six registered Durock Jersey hogs, devoting especial attention to breeding the latter stock. As a man of sound principles, talent and progressive activities, he is a respected and successful citizen of the valley.

ANDREW E. FISK, of the firm of Brown & Fisk, proprietors of one of the best-equipped tonorial establishments in central Washington, came to Sunnyside in December, 1902, and in the period which has elapsed since then has founded and built up a lucrative business and gathered around him a host of warm friends. Mr. Fisk, the son of Hiram F. and Martha (Parks) Fisk, was born in Washington county, Kansas, Decoration Day, 1879. His father, a farmer, was born in Lawrence county, New York, in 1837, and is a pioneer of Kansas, living at present in Meriden. Mrs. Fisk was born in Ohio, 1846, and is also living. Andrew attended the public schools of Kansas, and also the Friends' Academy at Washington, Kansas, leaving school when nineteen years old. During the latter years of his school life he gradually acquired a knowledge of barbering, often working Saturdays, and so in time became skilled in this branch of work. After leaving school he worked one season on his father's farm, and then went to Creston, Iowa, where he commenced working for his uncle, S. B. Parks, a dairyman. He remained in Iowa until November, 1900, returning home at that time and remaining until the following March. He then came to the Northwest, locating in Yakima county. In May, 1901, he arrived in the Sunnyside valley, spent a season farming, and the next February purchased the barber's equipment being used by Archie Fleming, and opened a shop. The business prospered from the beginning. In November, 1902, Fred Brown, another experienced barber, became a partner, and the next month the young men leased the building now occupied and equipped a first-class barber shop and public bath, which are well patronized.

Mr. Fisk is the fifth child in a family of six boys and three girls, all living: William F., a farmer, near Washington, Kansas; Charles R., an engineer in the Carnegie steel works, in Pennsylvania; Lewis S., an oil driller, residing in Sistersville, West Virginia; Mrs. Margaret Root, wife of a Meriden editor; Alexander J., a farmer, near Washington, Kansas, and Estella, Guy H. and Inez, living with their parents. Mr. Fisk is affiliated with the Sunnyside lodge of Odd Fellows, and is a Republican. He is one of the popular young men of the community, and has won the respect of all by his honorable methods of dealing and his industry.

JOHN FERRELL. The esteemed pioneer of the Pacific coast, and of Yakima county in particular, who forms the subject of this biography, is yet hale and hearty at the mature age of seventy-two, and is an unusually active man. He started on life's journey from his birthplace in Holmes county, Ohio, where he came into the world July 29, 1832, to gladden the home of Hanson and Sarah (Rubel) Ferrell. The father was born near Harper's Ferry, Virginia, in the year 1803, and early in life immigrated to Ohio, where he followed milling and farming until his death in 1861. The mother was born in Maryland, 1804, and died in Ohio at the age of eighty. After working upon the farm and attending school until he was seventeen years old, the son John was apprenticed to the mercantile business and served two and a half years in a country store. But, fired with the pioneer instinct implanted in his nature, the young Ohioan in 1853 set out for the most distant part of the country, California, walking most of that long, dreary route. In the Pacific eldorado he was engaged in mining for a time, then clerked in a store, farmed and raised stock; and finally, in 1858, established a general store at Suisun City, which he conducted seven years. During this time he served as postmaster under President Lincoln, and one term as treasurer of Solano county. After retiring from the mercantile business he was engaged in farming and reclaiming the arid lands of California, until 1878. In that year he visited Yakima county, with the view of taking desert land claims, and two years later settled in the Yakima valley about six miles from the site of Sunnyside, and engaged in farming and stock raising. He purchased a steam pump for use in irrigating with Yakima river water, but the experiment failed to be a success. Engaging in the hop business, he first made money and then, owing to the depression of the market for several years, lost heavily. However, his stock interests thrived, and he was fairly successful in farming, but in recent years has turned the active management of his property over to his children, and now spends what time he cares to work in prospecting and developing his claims.

Mr. Ferrell and Miss Julia A. Sheldon were united in marriage at Suisun, California, in 1854. She was the daughter of Jasper S. and Emily (Bull) Sheldon, natives of New York and Vermont respectively, and was born in Stark county, Ohio, in 1833. Mrs. Ferrell laid down the burdens of life in 1887, her death occurring in Yakima City. Besides her husband, seven children survive: George H., born in 1855, a Yakima county farmer; Mrs. Louise E. Adams, born in 1857, living in Yakima City; Lela F., born in 1860, a resident of North Yakima; Mrs. Kate Gibbons, born in 1862, now at The Dalles, Oregon; Oliver R., 1864, a prosperous Yakima stock raiser; Mrs. Elsie St. John, 1867, now in Everett, Washington, and John S., 1870, also a Yakima county farmer; all were born in California. The father is living with his son George, a well-to-do ranchman of the valley. Mr. Ferrell is a Mason, and politically, is a firm believer in the principles of the Socialist party. The old pioneer, who has witnessed many of the ups and downs of life on the western frontier, and experienced the vicissitudes common to all home builders in a new region, has done his share in the development of the Yakima country's resources, and, respected and honored by those who know him, he still keeps step with the tread of Yakima's younger pioneers.

MORRIS SISK, a farmer and stock raiser, residing on rural free delivery route No. 2, seven miles southeast of Zillah, was born in Massachusetts, April 10, 1858, his parents being Morris and Abbie (Lynch) Sisk, natives of the Emerald Isle. The elder Sisk was born in 1812 and came to America about 1840. He was engaged in farming until his death. The mother's birth occurred in 1822. Morris Sisk, Jr., was taken to Illinois when a boy, and in that state and Iowa received the little schooling he was able to obtain. Upon arriving at nineteen years of age he left the old home and commenced working on a farm in Nebraska. A year later his father's death called him home, and there he remained until the death of his widowed mother in the spring of 1889. After the loss of his parents he returned to Nebraska and engaged in railroad contracting, which he followed until 1891, in that year coming to Yakima county. At that time the great Sunnyside canal was just being constructed, and Mr. Sisk obtained the contract for building the first mile of this important work. He remained at work upon the enterprise until the canal was finished. In payment for his labor he was obliged to take considerable land, which led him to undertake farming and stock raising, and the success that he has attained is ample proof of his good judgment and ability.

He was married at Cheyenne, Wyoming, in 1888 to Miss Mary A. Driscoll, the daughter of Timothy and Bridget (Melvin) Driscoll. Her father is a native of Ireland and her mother a Canadian. They are at present living in Yakima county. Mrs. Sisk was born in Iowa in 1865. Mr. Sisk has the following brothers and sisters: Edward, in Indian Territory; John, in Michigan; Mrs. Mary Hurley, in St. Louis; Thomas, in Colorado; Mrs. Maggie Norton, Nebraska; Mrs. Ellen Shay, St. Louis; Mrs. Abbie Shultze, in Denver; William, in Maryland; and Mrs. Lizzie Seabrock, in Indian Territory. Mr. and Mrs. Sisk have two children—Morris W., born in North Yakima, March 1, 1893; and Carrie V., born on the farm, October 18, 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Sisk are members of the Catholic faith and are united with the church. He is an ardent Republican in politics. The farm consists of forty-five acres, all under cultivation, upon which a comfortable residence, barns and outbuildings have been erected, making the place one of the best in the valley. Mr. Sisk is breeding draft horses, and now owns about thirty head of fine animals. He is respected as a citizen and counted as one of the successful farmers of the Sunnyside country.

GEORGE G. MAYENSCHIEIN is one of the pioneers of the Sunnyside valley, having arrived in that region in 1894, when the few settlers living there were widely scattered and experiencing the hardships of home building during a period of financial depression. With characteristic foresight and ability, however, Mr. Mayenschein planted a considerable crop of sorghum. It thrived wonderfully, and the crop was large. With this as a medium of exchange he traded with his neighbors and at the stores, even using it to pay ferrage across the Yakima river (for there was no bridge at that time), and was able to live comfortably and steadily improve his farm while others were not so fortunate. Of German and American parentage, Mr. Mayenschein was born in Baltimore, Maryland, December 4, 1858, to the union of Adam and Mary (Koon) Mayenschein. Adam Mayenschein was born across the ocean in 1834; Mary Koon was born in Pennsylvania in 1838. The father was a farmer by occupation, and at the time of his death, in August, 1902, lived at Hillsborough, Wisconsin, where the mother still resides. The subject of our sketch received his education in the schools of Ohio. After leaving school in his nineteenth year he worked with his father two years. Then he commenced farming for himself, spending the first two years in Ohio, and from 1880 to 1894 in Vernon county, Wisconsin. In the latter year he was attracted by the Sunnyside country and purchased land under the ditch. He has improved and added to this original property until he now has one of the best and most comfortable farms in the county.

At Millville, Ohio, August 21, 1888, he was married to Miss Mary A. Nance, the daughter of John and Rachel (Moulders) Nance. Mrs. Nance, who died in 1897, was born in Ohio in 1827; the father was also an Ohioan by birth. He died in 1896 at the age of seventy-one. Mr. Mayenschein has several brothers and sisters, whose names are: Mrs. Anna Mootz, Hartman, Alexander, Frederick, Mrs. Phoebe Taylor, Adam, Lewis, William, Mrs. Elizabeth Cookenhiefer and Henry, the first three living in Ohio, the others in Wisconsin. Mrs. Mayenschein has three sisters and three brothers—Mrs. Sarah Corn, Mrs. Lavina Nance, Mrs. Emily Powell, James, George and Charles, living in Wisconsin, Ohio, and one, Mrs. Powell, in Idaho. They have three children—Otto L., born in Wisconsin, January 27, 1883; Frederick V., also born in Wisconsin, February 13, 1885; and Mamie, born in Yakima county, October 27, 1899. Mr. Mayenschein is identified with three fraternities, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Modern Woodmen of America and the Modern Brotherhood of America. He takes an active interest in politics, and is an adherent to the principles of the Democratic party. Mr. and Mrs. Mayenschein are identified with the Methodist denomination, and are interested workers in the church. Of the twenty-acre farm, lying a mile and a half southwest of Sunnyside, seven acres are set out in bearing orchard, the balance of the land producing hay. Mr. Mayenschein is a man of sterling integrity and untiring energies, favorably known throughout the valley, and is deserving of the success that is his.

JOHN J. BROWN. Among the hardy pioneers of the Sunnyside valley, who have suffered and endured and bravely faced a hundred discouragements in their efforts to rear a home in that erstwhile wilderness of sage-brush, is the subject of this biography, whose residence dates from 1894. Born in Lamoille county, among the Green mountains of Vermont, July 13, 1844, he is the son of Luther and Nancy (Ferrin) Brown, also natives of the New England states, the father having been born in New Hampshire, and the mother in Vermont. Luther Brown was engaged in agricultural pursuits during his whole life. At the ripe old age of eighty-eight, Mrs. Brown is still living, residing in North Dakota. John J. Brown received his school training in Vermont, Wisconsin and Minnesota. He was seventeen years old when the South arose in arms against the North, and upon the call for volunteers being issued, the young man enlisted in Company A, First Minnesota mounted rangers, in February, 1862. With this unique organization he served one year; then re-enlisted in Company A, First Minnesota infantry, and with that regiment remained until the close of the war. He was mustered out of the army in July, 1865. Upon his return to Minnesota, Mr. Brown engaged in farming pursuits, which he followed in that state until his immigration to Sunnyside in 1894. He purchased twenty acres of raw land from the Yakima Investment Company and immediately commenced to improve it, planting potatoes, corn, et cetera, and setting out an orchard besides seeding a small portion of alfalfa. His place was the first tract of land improved in section thirty-five. Success did not come to these pioneer farmers at first, nor did the climate seem to favor the home-builders, for about November 19, 1896, the region suffered from an unusually severe frost, seriously, though not mortally, injuring orchards and other perennials. In 1896, Mr. Brown became so discouraged that he offered his entire holdings for fifteen cents on the dollar. In the light of their value now, this offer seems preposterous, but, nevertheless, it was made in good faith.

Mr. Brown's marriage to Miss Ellen E. Bennett, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Abner H. Bennett, took place while he was a resident of Minnesota, the date being 1870. Her parents were natives of New England, and she herself was born in historic Boston, in October, 1847. There is only one other member of her immediate family still living, a sister, Mrs. Frances Harris, residing in Minnesota. Mr. Brown is the fourth of a family of eight children, his brothers and sisters being: Stephen F., a veteran of the Civil war, Second Minnesota cavalry, who now lives at Washington (state) Soldiers' Home; Mrs. Mary J. Garvin, a widow, whose home is at Battle Creek, Michigan; Mrs. Alcina Blakely, living in the province of Alberta; Azro D. deceased; Mrs. Ellen B. Town, living in North Dakota, and Mrs. Viola Reily, also a resident of North Dakota, Orvilla being her home. Mr. and Mrs. Brown are the parents of eight children: Mrs. Isabella Henderson, living in Sunnyside; Mrs. Ida Day, in North Yakima; John F., dead; Edna, dead; George, dead; Edith, at home; Olive, now attending the North Yakima Business College, and Bertha, also living at home. As a veteran of the Civil war, Mr. Brown enjoys the privilege of a membership in the Grand Army of the Republic, belonging to Eugene M. Wilson Post, No. 188, Minnesota; he is also a Mason. Politically, he is a Democrat, and cast his first presidential vote for Benjamin Butler. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brown are connected with the Methodist church, he being a member of that denomination for the past thirty-four years. His property consists of forty acres, well improved, of which ten and a half acres are devoted to orchard. He is a man of recognized influence in the community, progressive, energetic and a man of integrity, who has battled well on the frontier and now enjoys the fruits of faithful labor.

IRA S. MILLER. Among the most important factors in the development of a community are its real estate men, whose whole capabilities and energies are daily turned toward the advertising of a region's resources and opportunities and the interesting of homeseekers and capitalists in its lands and enterprises. This is as true of the Sunnyside valley as in other favored regions of the Northwest, and one of its wide-awake, able young citizens who is devoting his time and talent to this work is the subject of this biography. A native son of Iowa, he was born April 20, 1876, in Waterloo, and there has lived most of his life. His father, Samuel H. Miller, was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, 1836, and came as a pioneer into Iowa. He followed farming in that state until 1808, when he sold his property and with the proceeds bought eighty acres of raw land near Sunnyside, coming to Yakima county at the same time. He has transformed the sage-brush wilderness into a garden spot and in the home thus erected he and his family are enjoying all the comforts and conveniences to be found in a thrifty, progressive farming community. Mrs. Susan (Saylor) Miller, the mother, was also born in the east—Pennsylvania being her native state. In Waterloo Ira S. Miller was reared and educated, attending the excellent public schools of that city until he reached manhood's estate. He then entered the service of Kyd & Company, of Filley, Nebraska, grain merchants, as a buyer, and for the ensuing two years was thus successfully engaged. However, in July, 1899, he joined his father in Sunnyside and for the first year of his residence in the valley worked on the farm. The following year he formed a partnership with J. Peterson and together they established a livery business at Sunnyside. This business they sold in May, 1902, and the succeeding September Mr. Miller and F. H. McCoy, as partners, formed the real estate firm in which he is now interested. They have made a very auspicious beginning, and, no doubt, will continue to increase the scope of their transactions and win greater success. Mr. Miller has two brothers younger than himself, Howard and Quinter, an elder sister, Mrs. Grace Blough, living in Iowa, and another sister, Mrs. Catherine Amundsen, who is residing in Sunnyside. Politically, Mr. Miller is identified with the Republican party.

ASA B. FLINT, living five miles west of Sunnyside, upon his ranch, is a pioneer of Yakima county, and one of its successful and well known ranchmen. He is a son of a prominent pioneer family who have had much to do with the development of the Yakima country, and many of whom are still among its inhabitants. Rev. Isaac and Emline (Phinney) Flint, natives of New York state, who crossed the Plains to Oregon in the sixties and subsequently settled in the Yakima valley, were his parents; both are now dead. In Douglas county, Oregon, February 11, 1869, Asa B. was born. When his parents settled on Parker Bottom, below Union Gap, he accompanied them and there spent his boyhood on the farm, attending school and riding the range. Winters he attended the district school in the neighborhood; summers he was engaged, as were most boys of that period, in manual labor either on the farm or on the range. When he was nineteen years old he left Parker Bottom, going to Ellensburg, where he entered the employ of the Northern Pacific Company as car accountant. After two years of office work in this line, he returned to Yakima county and settled upon the quarter section which is now his home, taking the tract as a homestead.

The ceremony which united him to Miss Rosa Eglin for life was performed November 14, 1890, in Victoria, British Columbia. She is the daughter of James M. and Frances (Kearns) Eglin, and was born April 6, 1875, at Corvallis, Oregon. Mr. Eglin, now a resident of Yakima county, was born in Indiana; Mrs. Eglin is at present living near Spokane. Mr. Flint has one brother, A. L. Flint, in the furniture business in North Yakima; two sisters, Mrs. Minnie M. Look, living at Bay View, Washington, and Mrs. Hattie M. Ferris, a resident of Yakima City. The household of Mr. and Mrs. Flint is brightened by the presence of one child, Gwen M., born on the Sunnyside farm January 19, 1895. Mr. Flint is a member of North Yakima lodge, No. 27, A. O. U. W. He is active and influential in political affairs, having been elected auditor of Yakima county in 1896 as the candidate of the Fusionists. His majority in that contest was one hundred and fifty-three votes, an excellent showing considering that his Republican opponent was F. C. Hall, a very popular citizen. Upon the disintegration of the Populist party, to which he belonged, Mr. Flint joined the Socialists and is still one of their number. As auditor he made an enviable record. Mr. and Mrs. Flint are united with the Christian church, of which denomination his father was the first pastor in the county. Mr. Flint owns a quarter section of farming land, where he lives, fifty acres being in cultivation; also two lots and a modern five-room cottage in the city of North Yakima. He is one of the county's popular, able and successful farmer-citizens.

FRANK A. MARTIN, formerly proprietor of the Hotel Mabton at Mabton, Yakima county, is one of the leading business men and property owners of that town, in whose growth he has been a prominent factor. Mr. Martin was born in Rock Island county, Illinois, April 8, 1866, the son of Medad W. and Rebecca (Marshall) Martin, natives of New York and Illinois respectively. His father moved to Illinois with his parents when a boy, and in the Fifth Illinois cavalry went forth in 1861 to fight for the preservation of his country. He is still living, a resident of Ritzville, Washington. The subject of this article was educated in Kansas, where his father lived many years, and remained at home on the farm, learning the dairy business, until he was seventeen. He then took a position with the Rock Creek Dairy Company, driving one of their wagons six years. In 1880 he came west to Tacoma and there was successively employed by the Rainier meat market, Tacoma Dairy Company, Washington meat market, the J. X. L. Dairy Company, and the Neil-and-Spofford Company. He continued to live in and around Tacoma until 1893, when he was attracted by the prospects of the newly established town of Mabton and turned his footsteps in that direction. His first employment in Mabton was the handling of sheep and cattle for Carstens Brothers; then, in the fall of 1894, he opened a small livery stable and built the Mabton Hotel, which he conducted until 1902. In 1899 he bought thirty acres in the Sunnyside district, thus adding to his holdings in the Yakima country. The following year he entered the saloon business in Mabton, the next year he opened a blacksmith shop and last year (1903) he erected the building occupied by the Mabton Drug Company. At present he is occupied in looking after his different business and farming interests. Mr. Martin was married in 1892 to Miss Belle M. Angus, daughter of Alexander and Jennie (Bruce) Angus, natives of Scotland who immigrated to the United States in 1890 from Canada, whence they had come in an early day. Mr. Angus is a farmer by occupation and with his family resides at Prosser. Mrs. Angus was eighteen years of age when married. Mrs. Martin was born in Canada in the year 1859, where she was educated and grew to womanhood. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have two children: Hazel, born November 16, 1893, in Yakima county, and Reba, also born in Yakima county, November 17, 1899. In politics Mr. Martin is an active Republican, and a staunch admirer of President Roosevelt. He is a horse fancier and owns three excellent animals, well bred and from racing stock; Lady Myrtle, a running horse; and two stallions, Barnato and Medad, the latter being a two-year-old. He also owns fifteen head of dairy cows and a small band of stock horses. In Mabton he owns seven lots, a saloon, store building and other town property. Mr. Martin is recognized as one of the county's hustling young business men of ability and standing.

JOHN G. MCCREADIE. Among the sons of Scotland who have sought new homes in the beautiful, fertile and progressive Yakima country and given of their strength and talent for the development of America, may be mentioned the young farmer whose name commences this biography. His home, consisting of seventy acres of unexcelled irrigated land, of which sixty are producing the staple crop, alfalfa, and one is set in orchard, lies two and a half miles northeast of Mabton. He is also devoting some attention to stock, having a small number of select horses and cows.

Mr. McCreadie came into the world in the year 1874, his parents being James and Margaret (Gracie) McCreadie, also natives of Scotland. They came to America in 1893, bringing with them the subject of this sketch, and settled in the Yakima valley. There the faithful wife and mother laid down life's burden in 1896. After her death the father went to live with his daughter, Mrs. Eliza Grey, also a resident of Yakima county, with whom he is still living. Equipped with a fair education and endowed with a hardy constitution, John G., upon arriving in Washington, immediately commenced laying the foundation of his present prosperous condition. For several years he worked for others, farming principally; then purchased a ranch in the Ahtanum valley. There he was engaged in farming and raising stock until 1900, when he disposed of his property and with the proceeds bought his present home near Mabton. Mr. McCreadie has four sisters—Mrs. Annie Harvey, living in Wide Hollow basin; Mrs. Jennett Kennedy, in North Yakima; Mrs. Maggie Voliva, in the Selah valley, and Mrs. Eliza Grey, also a resident of the county. He is a faithful member of the Baptist church, and fraternally is connected with the Knights of Pythias. Mr. McCreadie is a young man of sterling qualities, whose honest efforts are winning success and loyal friends.

JAMES F. LOWRY, wheat raiser and stockman, living in Kiona, is a Kentuckian by birth, that event in his life occurring in the year 1858, and in that state he spent his youth. Isaiah Lowry, his father, was a native of Ohio and became a prominent citizen of Covington, Kentucky, and there lived until his death. Mrs. Isaiah (Runyon) Lowry, the mother, was also an Ohioan; she died when James was only six years old. At the age of thirteen, the subject of this article left Kentucky and commenced working on a farm in Ohio, completing his education by attending school winters. He remained in Ohio until 1878; then visited Illinois, and a little later went to Iowa. From Iowa he went further west into Colorado and was employed in the mines of that state three years, also spending a year at farming. Thence he came to the Northwest, settling first in Oregon, where he was engaged two years in railroad work. In 1882

he arrived in Washington Territory, locating in Klickitat county. A year in farming and the nursery industry followed, then a year riding the range for McGee Brothers, four years' service with the Northern Pacific, and finally thirteen years in the stock industry in Yakima county. Of these thirteen years, Mr. Lowry spent five in the employ of the Eclipse Live Stock & Cattle Company, two years as foreman. In 1901 he commenced raising wheat upon four sections of leased land in the wheat belt and was quite successful. Last season he cultivated sixteen hundred acres and the previous season but nine hundred acres, showing the growth of the enterprise. Mr. Lowry also has a homestead in the wheat region. His stock interests are still large and require a great deal of his attention. He has four hundred head of horses at present and is making a special effort to breed high grade driving animals. Mrs. Alice Johnson, living in California, is his sister, and he has two other sisters living in Colorado and Missouri, respectively. Mr. Lowry is an Odd Fellow, a member of the Methodist church, and in politics takes his stand with the Republican party. He is a successful ranchman, one of the builders of Yakima county and one of its esteemed citizens.

WILLIAM A. KELSO, of the well known firm of Kelso Brothers, engaged in the general store business in Kiona, and probably the most extensive wheat growers in the Yakima wheat belt, besides being operators along other lines, is among central Washington's most substantial and influential citizens. He and his brothers have long been leaders in their community; established Kiona, bore their full share of responsibility in developing the county, and are recognized from one end of it to the other as men of progressive ideas, energetic action and public spirit. To such men the Yakima country owes its present high reputation and its progress. The subject of this biography is a native of Ohio, born in 1858 to John A. and Martha (Miller) Kelso, of Irish extraction. The elder Kelso was also born in Ohio, 1832 being the year of his birth, and he has followed agricultural pursuits all his life. He came to Washington in 1884, and the year following took up his abode in the Walla Walla valley. At present he is engaged in market gardening at his place, two miles from the city of Walla Walla, where he and his wife are passing their declining years in comfort and peace. Martha (Miller) Kelso was also born in Ohio, and both educated and married in that state.

William A. Kelso obtained a common school education in his native state, working upon the farm summers and attending school winters. In the spring of 1878 he left Ohio, and during the next four years worked for different farmers in Minnesota. Returning to Ohio, he spent a short time at home, and then set out to investigate the Northwest, particularly the Willamette valley. He was disappointed in his hopes of settling in Oregon, and came to Walla Walla. While in that city an old Minnesota friend induced him to visit Yakima county, with the result that in the spring of 1882 he filed a pre-emption claim to a tract in the Horse Heaven region, laying the foundation for his present fortune. Two years later his father and the remainder of the family came to Washington. It was then that the firm of Kelso Brothers was formed, the partners being William A., Edward E. and Clinton C., and operations were begun on a large scale. The first year they cultivated between one thousand and fifteen hundred acres and later increased their farm to six thousand acres, its present size. In the summer of 1894 they opened a general mercantile store at a point between Prosser and Kennewick, now known as Kiona, beginning in a small way. William A. was placed in charge, and so well was the enterprise received that a rapid growth resulted. The firm leased its immense wheat farm in 1900, but continued to operate along other lines and increased the mercantile stock to one of twenty thousand dollar value.

Mr. Kelso and Miss Mary E. Ketcham were united in marriage New Year's day, 1895. Her parents, August C. and Lydia F. Ketcham, of German and English descent, respectively, were born in New York state and married in Wisconsin. Mr. Ketcham went to Wisconsin with his parents when a little boy and was there reared. He enlisted in the Fourth Wisconsin infantry in 1861, and served his country throughout the Civil war, attaining to the rank of captain. Upon his return from war he was married and commenced farming. Subsequently he removed to Missouri, and in 1884 immigrated to Washington; he died in Kiona in 1902. Mrs. Ketcham, whose maiden name was Lydia F. Thurston, is still living, being in her sixtieth year. Mrs. Kelso was born in Wisconsin, educated in the common schools of Missouri and later in the Brookfield Academy, and at the age of sixteen years began teaching school in Yakima county. She was thus engaged ten years, or until her marriage in 1894, at the age of twenty-six. She has two brothers—Henry T., working in the Kiona store, and Milton, at home; also two sisters—Mrs. Ellen C. Rolph, living near Kiona, and Katherine, attending Whitman college. Mr. and Mrs. Kelso have four children, all born in Kiona—Harland D., November 20, 1896; Amy O., November 18, 1898; Merle A., December 10, 1900, and Wallis W., February 2, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Kelso is connected with the Modern Woodmen; politically, he is a staunch Republican, who has served his county two years, 1893-4, as county commissioner. Mr. and Mrs. Kelso are members of the Methodist church. Besides a third interest in the Kiona store and the six thousand-acre wheat farm, Mr. Kelso owns a section of raw land in the Wenas valley, forty acres of raw land near Kennewick, forty acres of meadow land in the valley, and one hundred and fifty head of horses. Both Mr. Kelso and his wife are held in high esteem by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances. Mr. Kelso is in every respect one of Yakima's solid citizens, a man of sterling character and worth.

NOAH J. BECKNER is one of Yakima county's esteemed young citizens and a merchant in the thriving town of Mabton, which he has made his home for several years. Of German and English extraction, he is the son of Tobias and Susan (Small) Beckner, and was born in the state of Indiana, June 27, 1869. His father, with whom he was associated the major portion of his life, was a native of Rush county, Indiana, born in 1847. Tobias Beckner was educated and married in his native state, emigrating from there to Kansas in 1877. There he lived two years at Cottonwood Falls, and then came to The Dalles, Oregon, via the water route from San Francisco. All of his household effects were lost by the sinking of the Great Republic off the Columbia bar. Nothing daunted by this misfortune, however, the father settled upon a homestead in the Glade, Yakima county, and there farmed and raised stock successfully until 1893. He then removed to Mabton and opened a general store, taking his son Noah into partnership at a later date. The elder Beckner managed the business until his death in October, 1902. In his removal from earthly life, the family lost a most devoted, loving husband and father, and those who knew him intimately, a loyal friend. Mrs. Beckner is also a native of Indiana, having been born in Rush county in 1848, her father being a pioneer of that state, and born in North Carolina. Susan Small was married to Mr. Beckner when nineteen years of age, and survives him. Noah J. received his education in Indiana, Kansas and Washington, and, as before stated, was in business with his father until the latter's death, when the junior partner took full charge. He joined his father at Mabton in 1897. Mr. Beckner has only one brother, Barney, who was born in Indiana, January 22, 1871. He accompanied his parents to Washington, and is at present married and living on the old homestead in the Glade. The subject of this biography is a Democrat, taking an active part in all county campaigns. Mr. Beckner has prospered exceedingly; his property being a five hundred and twenty acre tract in the southwestern part of the county, grain land, and a quarter section of alfalfa adjoining the town of Sunnyside, besides which he owns a small band of horses, and is heavily interested in Mabton. He is a young man, possessing those qualities which are certain to win for him greater success in business and which have drawn to his side a host of friends and well-wishers.

CYRUS OSCAR WOMMACK, engaged in the livery business at Mabton, was born in Illinois November 15, 1866, and is the son of William L. and Matilda (Renner) Wommack, both of German descent, but born in Illinois and Missouri respectively. His father immigrated to the Kansas plains in 1876, went to Gunnison, Colorado, in 1881, where he followed freighting two years, and in 1883 settled upon land near Bickleton, Klickitat county. There he was engaged in farming and raising stock until 1902, since which date he has been living with his son Cyrus at Mabton. William L. is a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted August 27, 1861, in Company F. First Missouri cavalry, and served until May, 1865. The mother was born in St. Louis. She was first married to John Ziff, six children resulting from this union, of whom three are living. The subject of this article was educated in Missouri, Illinois and Kansas. He remained on his father's farm until he became of age; then entered the horse raising business in Klickitat and Yakima counties, both buying and selling. In 1894 he filed a homestead claim to a quarter-section in Klickitat county and lived there seven years, continuing his stock business. In 1898 he purchased two hundred and forty acres of land, but four years later sold his entire holdings and removed to Mabton. There he engaged in the livery business, in which he has been successful. In 1890, he was married in Bickleton to Miss Phoebe Bickle, the popular young daughter of Charles N. and Fannie (Bacon) Bickle. The father is a native of Iowa, who crossed the Plains in the early fifties, and located his home in Goldendale. Subsequently he founded the town which bears his name, he establishing the first store at that point. Mrs. Bickle was born in Kansas, and is the mother of sixteen children. They are still living, residing near Prosser. Mrs. Wommack was born in Kansas, and crossed the Plains when a child. She was seventeen years old when married. To this marriage have been born the following children: William V., November 3, 1892; Mona M., November 27, 1894; Harry O., February 6, 1897; Richard P., born September 1, 1899, died March 6, 1902, and Carroll, October 6, 1901. Fraternally, Mr. Wommack is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Yeomen; politically, he is a Republican. He owns forty acres of farming land near Mabton, sixty head of cattle and fifty head of horses, besides his livery at Mabton. He is an energetic, progressive business man of excellent qualities, and is favorably known throughout that section.

JOSEPH ANDREW HUMPHREY, owner of one-half the site of Mabton, and Northern Pacific station agent at that point, was born at Brockville, Ontario, July 7, 1869, to John and Annie (Greer) Humphrey, also natives of Ontario. The father was born in Kingston and was a pioneer of the country north of that place, going into that sparsely settled region in 1825. He is still living in Ontario in his eighty-first year. The mother was born at Gananoque in 1828 and was married when seventeen years old. Her family were among the first settlers in Iowa, and claim the distinction of being the first to recognize the adaptability of that section for raising corn. The family is of Welsh extraction. Mrs. Humphrey is also living. Joseph was educated in the public schools of his home and later, when eighteen, was graduated from the Toronto high school. From the schoolroom he went into the Grand Trunk Railroad telegraph offices in Toronto and when nineteen years old his efficiency earned for him promotion to the position of operator at Orilla, Ontario. Two years later he left Canada, taking a position with the Northern Pacific in Montana. Here his first office was Big Timber; then he went to Miles City for two years. Following came a year in charge at Hope, Idaho, then two years at Ritzville, Washington, a year at Lind, and in 1899 his transfer to Mabton, where he is still stationed. In 1901 Mr. Humphrey became thoroughly convinced that there was a fine business opportunity in the possession of the townsite and, forming a partnership with Mrs. S. P. Flower, he purchased it from the Northern Pacific Company. The tract contains four hundred and forty acres, and, judging from the past and present of the town, is destined to increase rapidly in value. Mr. Humphrey was united in marriage to Miss Elska Schnell at Ritzville, April 29, 1896. Her parents are Klaas and Annie (Spanjer) Schnell, born in Germany. Mr. Schnell immigrated to America in 1858, settling first in Illinois, where he was married. In 1893 he came to Whatcom, Washington, where he remained a year, then moving to Ritzville, where he now resides. Mrs. Schnell came to America in 1856 and was married when thirty-three. Mrs. Humphrey was born in Minonk, Illinois, in 1879, and was there educated. She was eighteen years old when married. To Mr. and Mrs. Humphrey have been born two children, Elska V., at Hope, August 13, 1898, and Kathryn L., at Mabton, January 27, 1900. Fraternally, Mr. Humphrey is affiliated with the Masons. He is a member of the Episcopal church. In politics, he is a liberal Republican. Besides a half interest in the townsite of Mabton, of which fifty acres have been laid off into five hundred and eighty lots, he owns a half interest in three hundred and twenty acres adjoining the site. Realizing the importance of having the purest water, the proprietors of the townsite are now engaged in sinking an artesian well. The drill is down six hundred feet at the present writing, and is expected to tap the supply at any time. A new ditch is also heading toward Mabton, seven miles being already constructed. Mr. Humphrey has unbounded faith in Mabton's future, and none has done more to forward the town's interests than he. A keen, capable business man, a faithful employee, a public-spirited citizen of integrity and a man devoted to his home. Mr. Humphrey is admired and esteemed by all who know him.

JOSEPH B. EARLY, proprietor of Early's Restaurant, is one of Mabton's substantial citizens and a progressive business man of that section. He came to Mabton in 1902 in the interests of the Christian Co-operative Colony of Sunnyside, and appreciating the business opportunities presented, he entered the hotel and livery business, of which he made a signal success. Mr. Early was born in Lima, Ohio, 1867, to the union of David and Sarah (Miller) Early. His father was a native of Virginia, born in 1832, and the mother a native of Ohio, born two years later. In 1844 David Early settled in Ohio. He lived there until 1878, when he immigrated to Oregon, taking up his abode in the Willamette valley, where he died in 1893. The Millers were pioneers of Ohio. Mrs. Sarah Early was married when eighteen years of age and is the mother of twelve children. She is living in Sunnyside. The subject of this biography attended the Willamette University of Oregon at first, finishing his education with a course at the Mount Morris College, in Mount Morris, Illinois. After coming out of school he taught in the public schools a year, then for three years was head instructor in the Oregon School for the Deaf, and the succeeding year was elected superintendent, serving in that capacity two years. Meanwhile he conducted a stock farm east of Salem, raising thoroughbred stock. After leaving the school for the deaf, he was engaged in stock raising until he came to Mabton. In 1891 he was married to Miss Polly Yoder, daughter of Levi J. and Mary (Mishler) Yoder, natives of Ohio. Her father is of Pennsylvania Dutch descent; the mother's people were Virginians. Mr. and Mrs. Yoder are residents of the Willamette valley, whither they came in 1877. Mrs. Early was born in Ohio in 1867 and attended school in Oregon. There she was a teacher for one year and matron in the state school for mutes, her marriage taking place when she was twenty-three. Their children are two in number: Vera E., born in Salem, December 22, 1891, and Joseph Quinter, also born in Salem, July 27, 1897. Mr. Early is an ordained minister of the Brethren church. Politically, he is affiliated with the Republican party. He has one sister living in Mabton, Mrs. Lizzie Litherland, whose husband is engaged in the livery, carpenter and cabinet business, and owns a fine livery barn. Mrs. Litherland is a skilled artist, executing oil paintings of considerable merit. In connection with the restaurant business Mr. Early is engaged in raising some fine stock. Nine miles southeast of town he has a homestead, and a school section leased, which is considered as being of considerable value as wheat land. Mr. Early is regarded as a progressive man of strength in his community.

ALBERT BEILSTEIN, engaged in the liquor business in Mabton, was born in Ontario, September 5, 1863, his parents being Adam and Elizabeth (Dietz) Beilstein, of German birth and descent, the father born in Germany in 1823 and the mother in 1833. Mr. Beilstein, senior, came to Canada in 1842 and lived there until his death in 1890. The mother was married in Canada and survived her husband but three days. Until fourteen years old Albert Beilstein attended school in Canada; then left the parental roof to seek his fortune in the wide world. When nineteen years of age he commenced learning the tanner's trade, at which he worked in all six years. The year 1888 marks the date of his arrival in Washington, Tacoma being his first home in the far West. After two years spent at various occupations in Tacoma, he went to Puyallup and secured employment for a year. He was then engaged in the liquor business in that town for a year, on his own account, following which he went to North Yakima. That city was his home for the succeeding seven years, during which he worked for A. Johnson. In November, 1903, he opened the present branch business in Mabton for Mr. Johnson. Mr. Beilstein and Miss Kate Fuller, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Holtzman) Fuller, were married in Tacoma in 1900. Her parents are natives of Germany. Mr. Fuller was engaged in farming on the Sound until his death in 1893, his residence in Washington dating from the early eighties. Mrs. Beilstein was born in Canada in 1873, received her education in the Canadian schools and was married when twenty-seven years old. Mr. Beilstein is a member of the Red Men and Canadian Order of Foresters, and in political matters is a steadfast Republican. He owns a comfortable home in North Yakima, besides being interested in business at Mabton. He considers the Yakima country as presenting one of the best fields for business in the Northwest.

JOCK MORGAN. The subject of this biography is one of the earliest pioneers of the Northwest, and his father was a pioneer of Kentucky and Missouri. For nearly a century these two generations alone have helped to redeem the wilderness of America and there plant American civilization and before them were many other Morgans engaged in the same noble work. Jock Morgan was born in Burlington, Iowa, 1844, to Richard and Martha (Morgan) Morgan. His father was a native of Kentucky, who immigrated to Iowa in the early forties and there lived until 1850, when he set out with his family to build a new home in the far Northwest. The mother was a daughter of Jonathan Morgan, of Iowa, a widely known cattle and land dealer in his day. During the tedious journey across the Plains and mountain ranges Richard Morgan died. The mother bravely persevered and struggled onward with her family, finally arriving, after a seven months' journey, at Albany, Oregon, where she settled upon a donation claim, and lived until her death. This border country was the scene where Jock passed his boyhood and grew to rugged manhood. When only fifteen years old, after having attended school for a time at Eugene, he became an employee of the old California Stage Company and for many years handled the reins between Portland and San Francisco. He drove the last stage into Salem, just preceding the locomotive. As a driver he was known as the best in the Northwest, holding medals conferring that honor. After the decline of the staging business, he engaged in buying and selling stock, and in 1871 drove a band of cattle into the Yakima country, which date marks his advent into Yakima county. His first home was on the reservation, where he lived nine years, braving the dangers and surmounting the difficulties incident to border life. However, in 1881, he left the reservation, settling on purchased land just across the river from the present town of Mabton. On this ranch he is now living, farming and raising stock with success. Mr. Morgan was married in June, 1896, in Roseburg, Oregon, to Miss Temperance Hervey, daughter of Thomas Hervey. Her father crossed the Plains in 1863 and settled near Roseburg. Both parents spent the latter years of their lives in Oregon. Mrs. Morgan was born in Tennessee in 1848, and was educated in the district schools of Tennessee and Missouri. She was married at the age of twenty. Five brothers, William, John, James, Thomas and Abe Hervey, are living in Oregon; also a sister, Mrs. Mary Mell. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have two children: Charles, born in Albany, Oregon, May 11, 1890, and Harry, also born in Oregon, June 14, 1870; both of whom are living at home. In political matters, Mr. Morgan is a member of the Socialist party, and claims the distinction of having cast the first Socialist vote in Yakima county. His property interests consist of four hundred and forty-four acres of fine hay land lying along the Yakima river within a mile and a quarter of Mabton, one hundred and fifty head of stock cattle and one hundred head of horses. As a pioneer, Mr. Morgan strove earnestly and bravely to obtain a foothold in the virgin West, undergoing experiences both exciting and dangerous. As a citizen of one of the best counties in one of the most progressive states in the West, he is influential, respected and widely known.

JAMES S. DONOHO, living eight miles northeast of Bickleton, in what is known as the Glade settlement, is one of Yakima county's prosperous and popular farmers. Like so many of the pioneers of the far West, he was born in Missouri, the date of his birth being September 16, 1847. His parents were Robert, born in Kentucky, 1825, of Irish extraction, and Margaret (Shibley) Donoho, a native of Ohio, and of German descent. She died in 1871, leaving ten children to mourn her loss. The father served more than three years in the Civil war, under General Sherman, returning to Missouri after being mustered out, where he is still living. James remained at home, working on the farm and attending school until he was twenty-two years of age, when he learned the carpenter's trade. August 4, 1864, at the age of seventeen, he enlisted in the Forty-fourth Missouri infantry, company K, and was ordered south, where he served in the Sixteenth Army corps, under A. J. Smith and General Thomas, for eight months, when he was mustered out. In 1875, he went to California, worked at his trade a year at different places, then went to Dunnigan, where he was married, and subsequently moved to Vacaville, where he lived until 1887. That year marks the date of immigration to Washington. Here he filed a homestead claim to land on the Glade, and purchased two sections of railroad land. Upon this immense grain and stock ranch he has since lived. In 1881, Mr. Donoho was married to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony W. and Cindica (Cooper) Dunnigan. Mr. Dunnigan was born in Illinois, crossed the Plains to California in 1851, where he settled in Yolo county, and platted the town which bears his name. Mrs. Donoho was born in California in 1859, and was there married at the age of twenty-two. To this union have been born three children: Mrs. Winona Muller, born in 1882, living in the Glade; Anthony, born in 1884, at home; Robert V., born in 1886, living at home. Mr. Donoho is a prominent Odd Fellow, in which lodge he is a past grand. Politically, he is a Republican of strong views. Upon his ranch of one thousand three hundred and sixteen acres, of which three hundred acres are in cultivation as grain land, he has a band of twenty cattle, and another band of twenty horses. Mr. Donoho is a thoroughly successful man, who has won that success by energy, thrift and integrity, and these qualities are what give him his position in the community.

DEAN STAIR. That the strenuous character of our national life at this period is calling upon men to assume important responsibilities at an earlier age than formerly is a self-evident truth; particularly is this true of the later settled portions of the union—the western divisions. And in the Northwest, nowhere are the young men more responsive to this demand or more successful in assuming these increased responsibilities than in the thrifty Yakima country, where progress is the slogan of all. The traveler in that section will at once note that the words Yakima and progress are inseparable, so intimately are they connected. Mabton is one of Yakima county's commercial hubs, and the young man of whom we write is one of its busiest, most popular and successful occupants, being the manager of the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber Company's yards at that point. He is, moreover, a product of Yakima county, having been born in Yakima City in the year 1881, to the union of David W. and Ella (Parker) Stair, pioneers of the valley. The father was a native of Ohio. He was by profession a lawyer, graduating from the Lebanon, Ohio, and the University of Michigan law schools. In 1877, he immigrated to Washington Territory, locating in Yakima City, where he practiced his profession two years. However, in 1882, he sought the more healthful pursuit of farming, living for five years one mile west of Yakima City. Then he settled on the railroad land in the Ahtanum valley, where he continued to follow farming and stock raising with success, until his death in 1895. During these years he was honored by being appointed to serve a term as probate judge of the county, and by an appointment as county treasurer to fill a vacancy caused by death. The mother is a native of Nebraska, the daughter of pioneers of that state, where she was married at the age of twenty. For twenty-five years Mrs. Stair has been a teacher in the Yakima schools and is at present holding the position of principal of the North Yakima High school. In the schools of that city and the Portland Business College Dean Stair received his education, being graduated by the latter in 1900. His schooling was not interrupted, however, for the outbreak of the Spanish-American war so fired his patriotism that in 1898, when only seventeen years old, he enlisted in Company E. First Washington volunteers, and went to the front with his young comrades. As a member of the Philippine army he participated in a year's vigorous campaign around Manila, returning with the Washington troops in the fall of 1899 with the rank of a corporal. After graduation from the business college, Mr. Stair spent a year riding the range for John Switzer before accepting a position with the St. Paul and Tacoma Lumber Company. His first work for that corporation was in North Yakima, thence he went as bookkeeper into the Ritzville office for ten months, thence to Toppenish as manager, and January 15, 1903, was placed in full charge of the Mabton branch.

Mr. Stair assumed the further responsibilities of matrimony in February, 1903, his bride being Miss Edith Morrison, also a native of Yakima county and the daughter of Abraham W. and Alma (Lybyer) Morrison, whose biographies will be found elsewhere in this volume. Miss Edith was born at the family homestead near Prosser in 1881, and was educated in Yakima county and at the Catholic seminary in Spokane. She is a member of the Christian church. To this union has been born one child, Dorothy D., whose birthday was December 21, 1903, and birthplace is Mabton. Mr. Stair is a Knight of Pythias and a Modern Woodman, and both himself and wife are well known and highly esteemed among the young as well as the elder residents of the community.

THOMAS L. STEPHENS, residing three and a half miles northeast of Mabton, was born in Erie county, New York, in 1839, the son of Thomas and Esther (Stetson) Stephens. Thomas Stephens was born in Massachusetts in 1798, came to Erie county in 1825 and died there in 1870; the mother was born in Otsego county, New York, in 1802, and passed into the life beyond at the age of fifty-five. Thomas L. attended the public schools and academy of his native county and worked upon the farm until he reached his majority. Then he went into the new state of Wisconsin and there taught school during the winters and farmed during the summers until 1863, when he returned to New York and enlisted in the Tenth cavalry, Company L, in which he served through the remainder of the Civil war. Upon his discharge on account of disability in 1865, Mr. Stephens returned to Wisconsin, resuming his work as a teacher. In 1867 he went to Nebraska as one of that commonwealth's pioneers, teaching and farming for ten years there. Then for eleven years he farmed in Kansas. The year 1887 saw his return to Nebraska, where he remained until 1893. At that time he immigrated to the Northwest, locating first in Klickitat county. A year later he removed to the Sunnyside region in Yakima county, where for three years he was engaged with Dr. P. B. Wing of Tacoma. Subsequently he purchased ten acres of land near Mabton and afterward purchased twenty additional acres, selling these holdings in 1903 and reaping a neat profit on the transactions. In 1903 he purchased the forty-acre tract constituting his home, and another forty, giving him in all eighty acres of fine land. Of the home place only eleven acres are in cultivation, but the forty acres lying three miles northwest of his home are all in cultivation and under water. Both farms are very valuable ones and indicate what water, energy, perseverance and ability can do in a sage-brush country.

The marriage of Mr. Stephens to Ellen Butchart was celebrated in Nebraska in 1871. Previous to her marriage to Mr. Stephens, she was the wife of John Murdie and to this union was born one child, Agnes, now Mrs. W. H. Wright, living in the Sunnyside valley. Mrs. Stephens' parents were Andrew and Jessie (Adams) Butchart, both natives of Scotland, who came to Canada in early life. Mrs. Butchart was the mother of fifteen children. Mrs. Stephens was born on the banks of the Dundee in 1849, was educated in Canada, came to Topeka when she was seventeen and at the age of twenty-two was married in Nebraska. To Mr. and Mrs. Stephens have been born the following children: Lewis, deceased, 1873; Vernon, deceased, 1874; Ernest, 1879; Ira, February 13, 1881; and Ora, May 15, 1885, the first two being born in Nebraska, the remaining three in Kansas. For twelve years past Mrs. Stephens has been sorely afflicted with rheumatism. Mr. Stephens is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Ancient Order of United Workmen, is a member of the United Brethren church and is affiliated with the Republican party. He is a prosperous agriculturist and a respected citizen of the county in which he lives.

CLARK MILLER. One of the prosperous farmers living in the district irrigated by the Sunnyside canal is the subject of this sketch, who is also a pioneer of the Yakima country. Indiana is his birthplace and 1861 was the year of his birth, his parents being Alcana and Eliza (Kooontz) Miller, natives of Indiana and New York respectively. The elder Miller lived in his native state until 1870, when he moved to Greenwood county, Kansas. There he lived until 1878, in that year crossing the Plains to Klickitat county, Washington Territory. In the new home the first year was spent in Goldendale, after which the family settled near Bickleton, where the father and mother are still living. Eliza Kooontz was born in 1820 and came to Indiana with her parents. Clark Miller attended school in Eureka, Kansas, obtaining most of his education there. He was sixteen years of age when he entered Klickitat county and for the succeeding five years lived at home on the farm, assisting his father in making a home. Then he crossed the Cascades and entered the logging camps of the coast region. After three years of this experience he returned to Klickitat and for the next three years remained at home. In 1893, however, he filed a homestead claim to land near Mabton and after a five years' residence thereon, obtained a title from the government. Two years more at Bickleton followed; then he purchased his present ten-acre place, three miles northeast of Mabton, under the Sunnyside canal. Recently he bought an additional five acres. Ten of these fifteen acres are in cultivation, a portion being in orchard, and on the place Mr. Miller has built a comfortable home. Besides this valuable tract he still owns forty acres on the south side of the river.

Miss Josephine Marrs, daughter of Andrew B. and Charlotta (Shaw) Marrs, was united in marriage to Mr. Miller in Cowlitz county, Washington, 1888. Her father was a native of Indiana; her mother a native of Illinois, where she was married in 1857. In 1849 Mr. Marrs crossed the Plains to California and in that state mined and followed his trade, that of a gunsmith, until his demise in 1876. Mrs. Marrs is still living. Josephine Marrs was born in the Golden state in the year 1869, but received most of her schooling in Washington. She was married when seventeen years old, and to this union have been born four children, all living: Clarence, March 23, 1889; Lydia, August 13, 1890; Noah J., January 6, 1893; Ina L., February 27, 1897. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are connected with the Baptist church. Mr. Miller is a Socialist in politics and is regarded as a public-spirited citizen.

WILLIAM H. WRIGHT, who lives on a well improved farm two and a half miles northeast of Mabton, has been a resident of the valley of Yakima for more than twelve years, and in that period has witnessed the truly marvelous development of that section and himself has taken a share in it. Born in Pennsylvania, 1856, he is the son of William and Ellen (Hawley) Wright, natives of England and Ireland respectively. The father immigrated to America in 1861 and was married to Miss Hawley, and lived in Pennsylvania until 1882, when he removed to Nebraska. There he resided until 1891; then came to Tacoma, where his death occurred. The mother was twelve years old when she came to the United States with her brother, and was married when sixteen. Her death also occurred in Tacoma. To this union were born six children, of whom the subject of this sketch is one. He was educated in private schools and in the public schools of Albany, New York. When seventeen years old he commenced working on a stock ranch in Nebraska. Five years later he abandoned this life and went to Tacoma. On the Sound he was engaged for two years in the great logging camps of that region, but in 1891 crossed the range to the Yakima country and settled upon a homestead near Mabton. In 1895 he took charge of the Riverside hotel at Prosser and managed it successfully for four years. Then for a year he conducted a restaurant in Tacoma. Returning to Mabton after this venture, he opened a saloon and was thus engaged until June 1, 1902, when he sold the business and removed to his present home.

Mr. Wright was married at Prosser, March 11, 1897, to Miss Agnes Murdie, the daughter of John and Ellen (Butchart) Murdie, natives of Scotland. Mrs. Wright was born in Topeka, Kansas, in 1870, and attended school in Kansas and Nebraska. She came to Washington when twenty-three years old and was married at the age of twenty-seven. Her mother is now Mrs. Thomas L. Stephens, and lives near Mabton. One child has come into the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wright, William D., born in Tacoma, September 21, 1900. Mr. Wright is affiliated with the Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen and is a member of the Republican party. Mrs. Wright is a member of the Presbyterian church, and also connected with the Rebekahs and Royal Neighbors. The thirty-acre farm is all under water and all in cultivation, twenty being in alfalfa and half an acre in a select orchard. Besides this property, Mr. Wright owns a quarter section of land near Mabton. He is a successful business man and farmer.

O. FRANK BERNEY, living three miles northeast of Mabton, is a highly respected citizen and successful farmer and stock raiser of that region. The little republic of Switzerland is his native land, and in one of its nesting valleys he was born August 11, 1866, in the home of Francois and Zele (Rochat) Berney, also of Swiss birth and descent. The father was born in 1829, and at a ripe old age is still living in his Swiss home. By trade, he is a watchmaker. His wife was born in 1835 and lived to be sixty-six years old. The subject of this biography attended the common schools of Switzerland, and from the age of ten to that of eighteen worked with his father at the watchmaker's trade. In 1883, however, the young man crossed the Atlantic to seek his fortune on American soil. He came direct to Klickitat county and there settled upon a quarter section of railroad land and commenced raising stock. Until 1890 he made his home upon this place, but in that year he took a trip to Walla Walla county and in the fall returned to Yakima county and filed a homestead claim to land near Mabton, where he made his home the ensuing five years. In 1898 he entered the Euclid settlement and resided there for two years on rented land. Then he purchased twenty acres three miles north of Mabton, sold it and purchased another twenty, on which he now makes his home.

He was married to Mrs. Bertha Erikson at Prosser in 1895. Her parents, Erik and Bertha (Anderson) Nelson, were natives of Norway and there lived until their deaths. She was born in Norway in 1859 and at an early age was married to Jonas Erikson, immediately immigrating to St. Paul, Minnesota. In St. Paul they lived twelve years, or until Mr. Erikson's death in 1893. Six children were the result of this union: Edward, born March 14, 1883; Clara, March 21, 1885; Erik, March 17, 1887; and three who are not living. Mr. and Mrs. Berney are the parents of two children, both living: Auguste, born at Mabton, April 25, 1898, and Francis, at Mabton, May 1, 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Berney are consistent members of the Lutheran church, and are considered good neighbors and loyal friends. He is a believer in the principles advocated by the Republican party. For three years past Mr. Berney has served his community as a school director, and is known as a man who takes a deep interest in all public matters. He still retains forty acres of the homestead near Mabton, and his home place of twenty acres, of the latter one-half acre being in a fine orchard, nineteen acres being in alfalfa and the balance in other crops or used for building sites. He also owns eighty head of cattle and sixteen head of horses. Mr. Berney is one of the valley's substantial citizens and a man of progressive ideas.

WALLACE WELLS, residing three and a half miles northeast of Mabton, upon one of the finest little ranches in the valley, was born in Allegany, New York, in 1844, to the union of Peter and Patience (Strait) Wells, both of whom claimed that same state as their birthplace. When the son Wallace was three years old he lost his mother and six years later his father died, leaving him an orphan. An older brother took the unfortunate lad in charge, giving him a home and educating him. In 1865, the brothers went to Wisconsin and there, when he reached the age of twenty, Wallace bought a farm and commenced work for himself. He lived in Wisconsin, engaged in agricultural pursuits, until 1895, at that time coming west to Mabton. With three other men he erected a water wheel and irrigated a tract of land, which he made his home for four years. In December, 1898, he purchased his present place and since that date has resided upon it.

Mr. Wells and Adella Smith were joined in matrimony in 1877, the marriage taking place in Wisconsin. Miss Smith was born in Milwaukee in 1857, her parents being Abel A. and Miranda (Bump) Smith, both natives of the Empire state. The father crossed the Plains to California in 1849, when nineteen years old, taking his young wife with him to the gold fields. Within a short time he made a fortune in the mines, returned to New York, but again crossed the Plains in the fifties to the same state. Again he returned to his native state and resided until 1860, when he immigrated to Wisconsin. The mother died in 1864, but the hardy old frontiersman lived until 1894. Mrs. Smith was the mother of seven children. Mr. and Mrs. Wells have had three children: Mrs. Clara G. Meek, born April 16, 1878, now living in Yakima county; Emerson W., born in Wisconsin, April 8, 1880, died October 26, 1887, and Charles W., born in Wisconsin, August 31, 1882, living at home. Mr. Wells and his wife are devout members of the Presbyterian church, he being a deacon in that body. He takes a deep interest in national affairs, and on national issues aligns himself with the Republicans. For three years Mr. Wells has been a director of the board of the Mabton school district, filling the office with credit. All of his sixty-acre ranch is under irrigation, thirty acres being devoted to alfalfa and three acres to timothy and clover. Mr. Wells is also raising fine stock, owning seventy-five head of horses, twenty-five head of hogs and several cattle. He is a highly respected citizen and neighbor, who is doing his share in reclaiming the desert lands of the Yakima and reaping a goodly success.

CHARLES H. MEEK. One of the popular and enterprising farmers of the Yakima valley is the subject of this chronicle, who resides four and a half miles northeast of Mabton. Mr. Meek is a native son of the Badger state, his birth occurring in July, 1870. His father was George Meek, born in Michigan and an early pioneer of Wisconsin, where he died in 1897; his mother's maiden name was Sarah Harmer, the daughter of pioneers of Wisconsin, her birth occurring in that state. Mrs. Meek is still living, her home being in Wisconsin. Charles H. is one of five children, all of whom were educated and reared in the old Wisconsin home. When he reached his majority, however, he began to do for himself, working at various occupations during the first six years. In 1897, he came to the Northwest, locating in the Mabton district. Six years he rented land, thus accumulating sufficient means wherewith to purchase, this year, his own comfortable, well improved farm.

In 1898, July 1st, he was united in marriage to Miss Clara G. Wells, at Mabton. She is also a native of Wisconsin, born April 16, 1878, and is the oldest daughter of Wallace and Adella (Smith) Wells, residents of the Mabton region, whose biographies will be found on another page of this volume. Mrs. Meek was married when twenty years old. Two children have been born to this union, Della A. and Dora E. Mrs. Meek is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Meek does not belong to either of the old line political parties, but is an ardent advocate of Socialism, with which party he is actively identified. His twenty-acre farm is well supplied with water and bears the marks of a skillful, energetic hand upon its soil and improvements. None in the valley is a firmer believer in the richness and bright future of the Yakima country than Mr. Meek.

TILTON S. PHILLIPS, of Mabton, is one of the leading business men and stockmen of Yakima county. He has made the most of his opportunities since coming to central Washington with the result that unusual success has crowned his efforts. Mr. Phillips was born in 1861, in the border state, Missouri, his parents being Joseph and Deborah (Hardy) Phillips, the father having been born in New Hampshire in 1823, and the mother in that state two years later. In the early forties Joseph Phillips immigrated to Missouri and there lived until he enlisted in the Union army. He was killed in action in 1863, ranking as a captain at the time of his death. The mother gave up the unequal struggle for life in 1883, leaving three children to mourn her loss. Tilton remained at home with his mother until fourteen years of age, meanwhile attending school; then for three years he and a brother engaged in stock raising. At the age of seventeen, with commendable spirit, he commenced a three years' course in college, after the completion of which he returned to stock raising. A year later he and his brother opened a general mercantile house in Tuscumbia, Missouri, which they conducted two years. In 1885, he came to Washington, stopping at Walla Walla the first summer. In December he removed to Prosser and filed pre-emption and timber culture claims in the Horse Heaven region. These he abandoned, however, and after a season on Eureka Flat and a winter in Prosser, entered the logging industry at Cle-Elum, where he remained most of the time until the spring of 1890, when he came to Mabton and there settled upon a homestead. Eight years of stock raising followed, but in November, 1898, Mr. Phillips was appointed postmaster of Mabton and at the same time opened a general store in that growing village. After conducting the store fifteen months he sold the property to the Hub Mercantile Company, but in May, 1902, again entered the mercantile business, in which he still remains. April 1, 1903, he added a meat market to his establishment. During his business life he has always continued his stock raising with the result that he has fine bands of horses and cattle. The year 1897 marks the date of his marriage to Miss Agnes E. Begg, daughter of James A. and Annie U. (Sidey) Begg, natives of Scotland, who came to Canada nearly half a century ago. Her father immigrated to the United States in 1858, settling in Ellensburg. He is now living in Rochester, Thurston county. Mrs. Phillips was born in Canada in the year 1868, where she received her education, and was married in Thurston county, Washington, at the age of twenty-nine. To Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have been born one child, Ruth I., at Mabton, December 29, 1901. In a fraternal way, Mr. Phillips is connected with the Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America and Yeomen; politically, he is an energetic Republican of influence. His country property consists of four hundred and thirty-six acres of land, of which two hundred and seventy-six acres are meadow; six hundred head of cattle, including two hundred head being fed for the beef market, and two hundred head of horses, in which he is making a specialty of the Percheron stock. Ability, energy and perseverance are responsible for the accumulation of his fine property. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips enjoy the blessings conferred by a host of warm friends, and as a business man and citizen Mr. Phillips possesses the esteem and confidence of all who know him.

SAMUEL P. FLOWER, merchant and owner of a lumber yard at Mabton, has been prominently identified with the business interests of Klickitat and Yakima counties since 1878, and is at present recognized as one of the leading business men of that section of the state. The Flower family comes of pioneer American stock, both the grandfather and father of the subject of this biography having been influential pioneers of Illinois, where Samuel was born in White county in the year 1851. His parents are Camillus and Edith (Pritchard) Flower, both natives of Illinois, also, and both of English descent. The grandfather, George Flower, settled in Illinois in 1818 and was prominent in the early history of that state. Camillus Flower came to Washington in 1893 and settled at Bickleton, where he and his wife are still living. Mrs. Flower was born, educated and married in Edwards county, Illinois. Samuel P. Flower attended school in his native state, remaining at home on the farm until nineteen. Then, equipped with a rugged constitution and a fair education, he sought the bustling metropolis of the Lake Michigan shore, and there in the wholesale dry goods establishment of a great company received his first business training. However, his Chicago experience was short, for after three months' work, in 1871, the great fire destroyed the establishment in which he was employed, and he returned home. The succeeding three years he alternately farmed and taught school. In 1877 he sought the shores of the Pacific, settling at Georgetown, California, where he spent a summer. In the fall he went northward into Oregon, and in July, 1878, arrived in Goldendale, Klickitat county. Subsequently he settled on a farm near Bickleton, where he lived until October, 1880. At that time he opened a general store on the site of Bickleton, then comprised of only a handful of buildings, the firm name being Bickle & Flower. This partnership lasted nine years, or until 1889, when he bought Mr. Bickle's interest in the business and as sole proprietor conducted the store until 1894, when he sold to his brother, Edward. Meanwhile, however, Mr. Flower had become convinced that Mabton was a fine business location and in 1892 had opened a store and warehouse at that station. The increase of his business interests there was so great that in 1895 he removed to that place in order to give matters his personal attention. In 1900 he added a lumber yard to his other interests and in April, 1902, the family became more deeply interested in Mabton by reason of Mrs. Flower and A. J. Humphrey buying the townsite, consisting of four hundred and forty acres, from the Northern Pacific Railway Company. Thus has Mr. Flower's family become prominently identified with Mabton's history. He has two brothers, Charles and Edward, and two sisters, Mrs. Eliza McCredy and Mrs. Rosamond Story, living at Bickleton; and two other brothers, Fred and Philip, living in Illinois; and his brother, Harry, and sister, Mrs. Alice Bristow, live in Portland.

Mr. Flower was married, January 17, 1897, in Yakima county, to Mrs. Amy M. Beckett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Lee, natives and residents of England. Amy Lee was born in England, but came to Canada when a child and was there educated and married to Philip Beckett. He lived until 1894, leaving the following children: Richard, born in 1887; Phylline, 1891, and Bruce, born in Washington, 1893. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Flower has been brightened by four children, all of whom were born at Mabton and are living: Camillus, December 10, 1897; Herman K., June 10, 1899; Alfred, May 14, 1901, and Joseph A. April 14, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Flower is affiliated with the Masons and the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically, he is an active Republican and is at present serving as a United States court commissioner. Both himself and wife are members of the Methodist church. In school matters Mr. Flower is also prominent, having served as a director of the Mabton district since he came to the town. Besides his town interests, he owns three hundred and forty acres of land just outside the townsite. Mr. and Mrs. Flower are highly esteemed socially, and as a pioneer, substantial citizen of integrity and an able man of affairs, Mr. Flower is respected by all.

JOSEPH F. KUNZ, residing a mile and a half east of Sunnyside upon one of the fine farms of the valley, was born in Germany, April 7, 1854, the son of Jacob and Anna M. (Degenhart) Kunz. Jacob Kunz was born in Germany in 1819, became a pioneer of southeast Wisconsin in 1858, and was there engaged in farming until his death in 1880. Anna M. Kunz was born in Bavaria, August 4, 1824; she died in 1898. The subject of this sketch was four years old when he was brought to Wisconsin and in that state received his education, attending the school in district No. 4, Waukesha county, in the last few years only during the winters. Between the ages of eighteen and twenty-one he assisted his father on the farm, then entering a blacksmith shop as an apprentice. He worked as an apprentice two years, at the end of that time being in possession of his trade and one hundred and twenty-five dollars in cash, his start in the world. Two years he worked on a farm, and in December, 1881, opened a shop in Big Bend, Wisconsin, which he conducted nearly four years. Selling this establishment in 1885, he came to the northwestern part of Wisconsin and farmed for four years. In the fall of 1888 he became a resident of Yakima county, still continuing to farm. Three years later, in December, he filed upon one hundred and sixty acres near the site of Sunnyside, and the November following began in earnest to improve the place, removing his family thereon. Steadily and vigorously this work has gone forward until Mr. Kunz now has his whole farm, eighty acres, all under a high state of cultivation.

He was married in Wisconsin, December 14, 1882, to Miss Susan W. Darling, a native of Wisconsin, born May 6, 1861. Her parents, Thomas and Elizabeth (Purves) Darling, are Scotch, born in Scotland in 1830 and 1840 respectively. They are still living in Wisconsin, the father being a retired farmer. Mr. Kunz has four brothers: Ludwig and Andrew E., Parker Bottom; William, in Yakima; Frederick and Anna M., residents of Wisconsin. Ludwig is a hotel man, the other brothers farmers. Mrs. Kunz has three sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Yahrmack, Mrs. Christina I. Cole and Mary C. Christison, and two brothers, John W. and William T., all living in Wisconsin. William T. Darling is principal of the Florence, Wis., schools. Mr. and Mrs. Kunz have five children, all at home; Frantz T., born December 4, 1883; William W., January 30, 1886; Christian J., January 8, 1890; and Fred, September 14, 1891, the first two born in Wisconsin, the remaining two in Yakima county. One daughter, Edith A., born in Wisconsin, September 17, 1887, died February 8, 1896. Mr. Kunz is a public-spirited citizen, and as such takes an active interest in political affairs, his sympathies being with the Republicans. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The family are members of the Congregational church. Mr. Kunz has ten acres of orchard, the balance of his farm being in hay. A fine eleven-room house serves as a residence. As a man who commands the respect and esteem of his fellow men, a man of integrity and stability and a successful farmer, Mr. Kunz is known to the community.

EDWARD J. EIDEMILLER is one of Mabton's energetic young business men who has charge of the North Yakima Milling Company's warehouse at that point. As Mabton is one of the best shipping points for its size on the Cascade division of the Northern Pacific, Mr. Eidemiller has the management of important business interests which require ability, energy and honesty in no small degree. Of German descent, his parents being George and Hanna (Huck) Eidemiller, natives of Germany, the son Edward himself was born in Dubuque county, Iowa, October 6, 1874, and was there educated in the public schools. His father came to the United States in 1846 at the age of twelve, making his home for three years in Philadelphia. In 1849 he went to Iowa and was there engaged in agricultural pursuits until 1880, when he came west to Seattle. After a five years' residence in the Sound metropolis, Mr. Eidemiller took his family to Mabton, of which place he is at present a resident. Mrs. Eidemiller came to the United States when only five years old and was married to Mr. Eidemiller in Iowa.

In Seattle the subject of this sketch learned bookkeeping and otherwise prepared himself to enter mercantile pursuits. The year 1894 witnessed his arrival in Mabton, then only a hamlet, but he did not tarry there long, immediately going to Sunnyside. After a year's labor there he engaged in work for W. H. Babcock on Eureka Flat, with whom he remained three years. The next two years of his life were spent in the sheep business. In 1901 he was occupied in farming at Byron and the year following he worked in the street car service of Seattle. However, in March, 1903, he accepted his present position and since that time has been a resident of Mabton. Success is crowning his efforts and he is rapidly becoming recognized as a capable young business man with bright prospects before him. Mr. Eidemiller is connected with the Woodmen of the World and the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and is a communicant of the Lutheran church. He is a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party and a supporter of President Roosevelt. His property interests consist of a homestead two and one-half miles south of Mabton and four valuable town lots. Mr. Eidemiller is fortunate in having a host of warm personal friends and well wishers.

HORATIO E. CROSNOW, farmer and stockman, living in the Ahtanum valley, was ushered into this world in the historic town of Vancouver, Washington, August 31, 1865, to the union of William P. and Frances (Smith) Crosno. His parents were both natives of Jefferson county, Illinois, and had traveled the long, tedious trip from their native state to Washington, with ox teams, only two years prior to the birth of Horatio, their first child, and had taken up land with a view to making a permanent home in the new country of their adoption. But, not being fully satisfied with the conditions there, they sold their right to the land and in 1869 moved up to Yakima county, and settled in the valley of Ahtanum. Here they took land again and once more started to make a home. Less than six years from their settlement the mother passed away. She was the first white woman to settle in the Ahtanum valley. Here the father continued to reside until 1895, when he too passed to the great unknown. The subject of this article came to the Ahtanum valley with his parents when but three years of age, and was brought up on the old homestead, working for his father in farming and stock raising until he reached the age of twenty-one. He then filed on a tract of land in the valley, moved upon the property and improved it. He made this his home for six years, and then rented other farms, among others his father's, on which latter place he was living at the time of the father's death in 1895. The home place was then divided, and he continued to live upon his tract of land until 1903, raising stock and farming. In March of that year he leased for a period of five years a four hundred acre tract, and has engaged in farming on an extensive scale, and in a diversified manner. He was married July 8, 1898, in the Ahtanum valley to Miss Lydia Minner, daughter of William H. Minner and Harriet J. (Shamp) Minner, pioneers in Yakima county. Mrs. Crosno was born in Willamette valley, Oregon, in 1869, and came to Washington in 1876 with her parents. Her brothers and sisters are: Julia, Mrs. Jennie Lyle, Mrs. Carrie Morrison and Mrs. Nora Claler, all of whom live in Yakima county but the latter. Mr. and Mrs. Crosno's children are: Emmett, Newell, Ruth F., Mabel J. and Purdy B. Mr. Crosno is a Democrat. Fraternally, he is connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World, and the wife is a member of the Circle. He owns seven hundred acres of timber and grazing land, with a fine herd of cattle, principally Durham, and is operating a large dairy.

HENRY C. VARNER. One of the most favorably known and prosperous farmers living in the Sunnyside district, his residence being three miles and a half northeast of Mabton, is the Klickitat pioneer of whom we write. For a quarter of a century he has made his home on the eastern slope of the Cascades, coming to this section in December, 1878, from Colorado. His first location was near Bickleton, where he filed timber culture and pre-emption claims. Upon this ranch he was engaged in farming and stock raising until 1890, when he made a trip to Fairhaven. In the spring of 1891 he came to Yakima county and took a homestead claim, which is his present home. Mr. Varner is a native of West Virginia, born January 15, 1855, to Ashbury and Phoebe (Davis) Varner, both natives of Pennsylvania. Both paternal and maternal ancestors for several generations were pioneers of the Atlantic coast, the grandparents of western Pennsylvania. Ashbury Varner and his wife were a remarkable couple in that he lived to the goodly age of ninety-eight and she to the age of ninety-three. He was of Irish extraction. Henry C. was reared upon his father's farm in West Virginia, obtaining a fair education. When he was twenty years old he taught a term of school in Virginia. March 6, 1876, witnessed his departure from the old home and the beginning of a journey to Iowa. In that state he farmed for two years, or until 1878, when he went farther west to Colorado, and there lived until he immigrated to Washington.

He was married to Miss Pauline McCredy, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Beaman) McCredy, of Bickleton, in that town in 1887. Her parents are natives of Ohio and Missouri respectively, and crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1853, where they lived until their removal to Klickitat county in 1880. The mother died in 1894. Pauline McCredy was born in Missouri, educated in the common schools of Oregon, and was married to Mr. Varner when she was thirty-four years old. To this marriage were born two children: Luella M., at Bickleton, November 10, 1888, and George S., in Yakima county, in 1892, both of whom are living. In 1897, after the dissolution of his first marriage ties, Mr. Varner married Mrs. Mary Young. She is the daughter of John and Sarah (Conway) Phelps, natives of New York state. The father removed to Iowa in 1860, and in 1875 became a resident of Kansas, his death occurring there. He was a farmer by occupation. Mrs. Varner was born in Iowa, 1866, and there attended school, and was married to Mark Young, five children resulting from the union, all of whom are living with their mother: Frank, born January 29, 1882; Lloyd P., January 22, 1884; Fred S., November 14, 1885; Jessie M., November 14, 1890, and William H., April 6, 1893. Mr. Varner is a member of the Odd Fellows lodge at Goldendale, and is a trustee in the Presbyterian church. On political questions he has taken his stand with the Democratic party. He has served Bickleton as constable for six years, and Klickitat county as a deputy sheriff. Mr. Varner owns one hundred and ninety acres of land, all under the Sunnyside canal. One hundred acres are raising hundreds of tons of alfalfa each season, five acres are devoted to timothy and clover, two acres raise timothy, a quarter of an acre is set out in all kinds of berries, and the balance of the ranch is plow land. Mr. Varner also owns about thirty head of neat cattle, mostly beef steers, and seventeen horses. He is a successful ranchman and business man, and is highly respected as a man of integrity and a good citizen.

FREDERICK MIDEKE, who resides on his farm six miles northeast of Mabton, was born in Freeport, Illinois, in the year 1869, the son of Frederick and Caroline (Ertman) Mideke. His parents were born in Germany, the father immigrating to America in the early forties and settling in Illinois. Six weeks after the birth of Frederick junior, his mother died; the father lived until 1887. He was a carpenter by trade. The younger Frederick is one of nine children and lived upon the farm with his father until the age of eighteen. At that time he went to Nebraska and worked upon his brother's place for two years. In 1889 he went to Wyoming; thence to Idaho, where he worked on the Union Pacific three months and later in the mines; and in the fall came to Washington, stopping first in the Horse Heaven country. In 1890 he settled upon a homestead two miles northeast of Mabton, residing thereon seven years. During this period he worked for various parties including T. S. Phillips and T. Beckner. During the year 1898 he worked in the lumber woods near Easton, returning in 1899 and purchasing the farm upon which he now resides. Mrs. Grace McComb became his bride at North Yakima, in 1901. Her parents are Abram and Eveline (Reynolds) Little, natives of Pennsylvania and New York, respectively. Mr. Little immigrated to Kansas, settling at Logan in 1880 and there followed his trade as a stone mason until his death in 1887 at the age of fifty-four. Mrs. Little is now living in Oregon City, Oregon. Mrs. Mideke was born in Pennsylvania in 1878 and went with her parents to Kansas two years later. She became the wife of Jacob S. McComb in 1895, one child, Velma, born August 24, 1897, resulting from the marriage. Mr. McComb died in 1899. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Mideke: Henry, August 19, 1902, and Walter, October 1, 1903. Fraternaly, Mr. Mideke is connected with the Modern Woodmen and the Yeomen; politically, he is a member of the Socialist party. Of his fifty-five acre farm, twenty-five are in alfalfa, two are in orchard, two in clover and timothy and the balance in plow land. Besides this land, he owns the homestead near Mabton; and Mrs. Mideke owns forty-five acres. Mr. Mideke raises quite a number of cattle, horses and hogs and is counted as an able farmer.

LESTER R. SPENCER, living two miles north of Bluelight, is a Missourian by birth, born December 7, 1866. His parents, William and Belinda (Proctor) Spencer, born in Ohio and Illinois respectively, were married in Missouri, whither Mr. Spencer went from Ohio. While living in Missouri Mr. Spencer enlisted in the Union army and fought three years in the Civil war. After a residence on Colorado, he settled in Walla Walla in 1882 and there his death occurred. The mother was the daughter of a Methodist minister who came to Illinois in an early day. She is living near North Yakima. Lester R. Spencer was fifteen years old when his parents moved to Washington. After a short school attendance in Washington he began riding the range for H. W. Patterson, for whom he worked three years. In 1888 he settled upon the homestead, thirteen miles southwest of Mabton. In addition to this one hundred and sixty acres, he owns an eighty-acre tract adjoining on the west and a quarter section of fine land adjoining the homestead on the southwest. Of this valuable ranch three hundred acres are in cultivation.

Mr. Spencer entered the matrimonial state in 1894, the ceremony taking place in Yakima county, his bride being Miss Hattie M. Smith, daughter of Seaman and Charity (Cooper) Smith, natives of the Buckeye state. Seaman Smith was a farmer by occupation. He settled in Iowa when that state was sparsely inhabited and in 1849 joined the mad rush to the California gold fields, making the trip by mountain and plain. After a considerable experience in that industry, Mr. Smith returned to Iowa. In 1885 he immigrated to Washington Territory and settled in the Glade, Yakima county, where he died in 1897. Mrs. Smith's parents crossed the Plains by ox conveyance to Walla Walla in 1865 and there lived until their deaths. She was married to Mr. Smith in Missouri. Mrs. Spencer was born in Monroe county, Iowa, in 1870, and received her education in Iowa and Yakima county. Since she was fifteen years old she has resided in Washington. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer has been blessed by two children, namely, Harry L., whose birthday was January 16, 1897, and Bertha H., born March 19, 1902. Both husband and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal denomination. He is a steadfast Republican. Besides general farming, Mr. Spencer is raising some stock, owning at the present time twenty-five head of cattle and twenty head of horses. Both himself and wife command the friendship and best wishes of all with whom they are associated, while Mr. Spencer is looked upon as a citizen of influence, commendable character and substantial attainments. His extensive ranch is one of the finest in that section of the country and is a credit to the man who has thus redeemed the wilderness.

CHRISTIAN MILLER, a prosperous young farmer, living in the Glade settlement south of Mabton, is one of the most popular and esteemed citizens of that region and an excellent representative of the type of men which is transforming the desert wastes of Yakima county into verdant fields and gardens. Born March 20, 1876, upon the Alpine slopes of Switzerland, whose beauty and grandeur have ever been an inspiration to the Swiss, the love of freedom and liberty is inherent in his nature and he finds in America a congenial atmosphere not unlike that of his native land. His parents, Christian and Elise (Jacot) Miller, also living in the Glade, are of Swiss birth, as were the ancestral members of the family. In 1883 they left Europe to found a new home on American soil. The first settlement was made in the state of Illinois, where the family lived until 1890. Then the father decided to immigrate to the far Northwest, and in that year came to his present home in Yakima county. He is one of the successful farmers and respected citizens of the Glade. Having secured a fair common school education in Illinois and Yakima county, Christian began riding the range at the age of fifteen and was so employed by his father and other stockmen until he arrived at his majority. Then he fled upon his homestead and has since devoted himself to farming.

Mr. Miller was married February 20, 1900, to Miss Leutta Donoho, daughter of James S. and Elizabeth (Dunnigan) Donoho, residents of the Glade, whose biographies will be found elsewhere in this book. The father was born in Missouri, crossed the Plains to California in 1875, was there married and lived until he came to Washington in 1887 and settled upon his place in the Glade. Mrs. Donoho was born in California, where also, in 1883, Lentta Donoho came into the world. She received her education in the schools of Yakima and Klickitat counties and was married at the age of eighteen. One child has blessed the union of Mr. and Mrs. Miller, Dell, born December 10, 1901, in Yakima county. Mr. Miller is an ardent Republican and takes an interest in all public matters. His original one hundred and sixty-acre farm has been increased to a fine ranch of four hundred and eighty acres, of which three hundred and fifty are in cultivation and producing as only the fertile plateaus of that section can. Mr. and Mrs. Miller command the esteem of many loyal friends and the best wishes of all who come into association with them.

LEWIS H. SHATTUCK, residing seven miles northeast of Bickleton, in Yakima county, though born in California, has spent most of his life in Yakima and Klickitat counties and is a well known pioneer stockman of that section.

He was born February 19, 1866, in Lake county, to the union of Dickson P. and Nancy (Bones) Shattuck, natives of Mississippi and Missouri, respectively. Dickson P. Shattuck was born in 1829, went to California in 1849, via the Isthmus of Panama, and there engaged in farming, stock raising and mining. Subsequently he lived a short time in Mexico, but in 1880 removed to Klickitat county, Washington, where he settled upon government land six miles south of Bickleton. He now resides three miles north of that town. The date of Mrs. Shattuck's birth was April 24, 1841. She crossed the Plains with her parents as a girl of eight years and married Mr. Shattuck May 13, 1858; she also is living. Lewis H. Shattuck was educated in the district schools of California, though he left that state when only eleven years old. Between that age and twenty-one, he rode the range for his father and other stockmen, but in 1891 he commenced farming in Yakima and Klickitat counties. In 1894 he settled upon a homestead near Mabton and lived there five years. Last year Mr. Shattuck purchased the place upon which he now lives, having formed a liking for it while leasing it in 1880.

Mr. Shattuck and Miss Hattie B. Wommack were united in marriage at Bickleton in 1890, she being the daughter of William L. and Matilda (Renner) Wommack, pioneers of Klickitat county. Mr. Wommack is a native of Greene county, Illinois, born in 1841, and lived successively in Kansas, Colorado, Utah and Idaho before coming to Washington in 1882. Mrs. Wommack was born in Missouri and married in Illinois at the age of nineteen. Mr. Wommack now resides at Mabton, but Mrs. Wommack has been dead for several years. Missouri is the birthplace of Mrs. Shattuck, and 1872 is the year of her birth. Mr. and Mrs. Shattuck have three children; Louis S., born in Yakima county, October 30, 1893; Reta, born in Yakima county, November 26, 1895; and Bertha, born in Klickitat county, September 22, 1901. Fraternaly, Mr. Shattuck is affiliated with the Yeoman of America; politically, he is a Republican. Altogether, he owns four hundred acres of valuable land in Yakima and Klickitat counties, of which two hundred and forty acres are in cultivation. He has one of the best small orchards in that region. Mr. Shattuck has amply demonstrated his business qualifications and is recognized as a man of sterling worth and influence in the community.

CHARLES W. GIBBONS, an energetic Yakima county farmer, resides on his ranch two miles north and two miles east of Bluelight postoffice, in the state of Washington. He was born in Arkansas in 1862, the son of James and Maria (Price) Gibbons. His father was of English birth, and followed the occupation of a farmer. He came to the United States in 1846 and settled in New York City, where his home was for the ensuing four years. He moved westward to Indiana in 1850 and to Arkansas in 1856, the latter trip being made overland by team. He was married in the old country, where for some time he served as a police officer in one of the numerous stations in Ireland, having been appointed to that position by friends in England. A Civil war soldier, he was the holder of a commission as captain on May 22, 1864, when he was killed during an engagement with Confederate forces. His wife, Maria, was a native of Ireland. Married at the age of seventeen, she became the mother of nine children. At present she resides in Pratt county, Kansas.

Charles W. Gibbons, the subject of this review, received his education in the common schools of Kansas, his mother having removed to that state shortly after his father's death, which occurred when Mr. Gibbons was but two years old. He remained at home with his mother until twenty-eight and in 1886 took her with him on a trip abroad, the two remaining across the water for a period of eight months. On his return he again settled in Kansas, whence, in 1895, he drove overland to Oregon, the trip consuming three months. He followed farming in the Willamette valley for six years, then came to Yakima county and filed on his present homestead, sixty acres of which he has already placed in cultivation.

In the state of Kansas in the year 1890, Mr. Gibbons married Mrs. Nellie Donohew, whose father was William F. Foster, a native of New York state and a farmer by occupation. Mr. Foster removed to Pennsylvania when quite young and followed farming there for several years. In 1871 he changed his residence to Illinois and after seven years spent in that state he again moved, this time going to Kansas, where he lived for nineteen years. In 1897 he came westward to California, of which state he is still a resident. He is of English lineage and a direct descendant of the Fosters who came to this land in the Mayflower in the early part of the seventeenth century. Mrs. Foster, whose maiden name was Lucy L. Coe, was likewise born in New York state.

But to return to Mrs. Gibbons—she was born in Illinois in 1872 and educated in the public schools of Kansas, to which state she came with her parents when seven years old. She was married to her first husband, J. B. Donohew, in 1887, but he only lived three months, and she married her present husband a year later. She and Mr. Gibbons are parents of five children, of whom Eunice Gibbons, born in Kansas, November 17, 1891, is the oldest. Ralph F., next of age, was born in the same state two years later and Maria A. was born on the 24th of October, 1894. Donald E. and Donna E., twins, are natives of the Willamette valley, Oregon, born April 11, 1898. Mr. Gibbons takes great interest in church work, being at present time steward of the Methodist church in his neighborhood and superintendent of its Sunday school. Fraternally, he is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and in politics, a Republican. Energetic and successful in business, and in all the relations of life, "four-square to every breeze," all his neighbors and associates are his friends.

EUGENE L. MACE is one of the substantial farmers residing in the Glade, twelve miles south-west of Mabton. He is one of Washington's pioneers, also, having come to this state with his parents in 1873, and resided here since that time. Mr. Mace was born July 18, 1867, in Iowa, his parents being John C. and Mary J. (Holbrook) Mace. The father was a native of Ohio, the year of his birth being 1842. He went to Iowa when a boy. When he came to Washington he drove to Omaha, rode by train to Utah, and drove the remainder of the journey to Walla Walla. His death occurred there in 1877. Mary (Holbrook) Mace, who is still living in Walla Walla, was born in Vermont in 1843, and was married, when twenty-three years old, in Iowa. For several years previous to her marriage she taught school. Mr. Mace was of English descent; his wife of German extraction. Eugene L. Mace remained at home until he was fifteen years old, then entered the employ of R. Webb as a range rider. For five years he continued at this work, meanwhile accumulating a small herd of cattle of his own; then he rented his mother's farm and followed farming and stock raising there until the spring of 1891. At that time he came to Yakima county and settled in the Glade, the date of his filing being 1891. He has been successful in his undertakings and now owns four hundred and eighty acres of fine land, of which half a section is under cultivation, also a band of fifty horses, and other stock.

Mr. Mace was married at The Dalles, December 14, 1902, to Miss Saloma Leminger. Her parents are John and Saloma (Femney) Leminger, now residing at The Dalles. Both father and mother were born in Ohio and were there married. After a residence in Indiana and Nebraska, in 1894, the family came to The Dalles. Mr. Leminger is of German descent. Mrs. Mace is a native of Mercer county, Ohio, born in 1873, and was educated in the common schools of Indiana. One child has blessed this union, Lois W., born September 25, 1903. Mr. Mace is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America and in political affairs is associated with the Republican party. Both he and his wife are fortunate in possessing a host of warm friends and Mr. Mace has won for himself an enviable position among the citizenry of his community.

ABRAHAM L. DILLEY. Twelve years of faithful service as an officer of the law in Yakima county as sheriff, deputy sheriff and United States marshal stand to the credit of the subject of this biography—a record in itself sufficient to give him prominence in the county's history. Aside from this, however, Mr. Dilley is an 1877 pioneer, and is a popular, influential citizen, well known from the headwaters of the Yakima to its mouth and from the Columbia to the British line. The son of Andrew B. and Elizabeth (MacKey) Dilley, he was born in Marion county, Oregon, in December, 1865. The elder Dilley, who died in 1902, was a native of Pennsylvania. He settled in Iowa when a young man and thence in 1863 crossed the Plains with oxen to the Willamette valley, living there until 1877. Then he came to Washington Territory and was for many years a resident of the Ahtanum valley. His death occurred in Nebraska. The mother was born in Ohio and was married in Pennsylvania, ten children being born to this union. She departed this life in January, 1902. Abraham was twelve years old when his parents brought him to the Ahtanum home. A few years later, having secured an education in the district schools, he took up the life of most young men then living in the region—that of riding the range. When eighteen years old he made an eighteen months' sojourn in the Sound region, then returned to Yakima county and entered the industries of hop and cattle raising. He was thus engaged until January, 1891, when he entered Sheriff Simmons' office and served under him four years. In 1894, as the candidate of the Republican party, he was elected sheriff of the county and served in that capacity one term. In the spring of 1897 Mr. Dilley was appointed deputy United States marshal, and filled the position five years with the same commendable zeal and ability as he had shown while in the sheriff's office. Again in 1902 he was nominated by the Republicans for sheriff, but was defeated in a stirring campaign by Sheriff Grant. The following March Mr. Dilley settled upon a homestead claim in the Glade, where he has since resided, engaged in farming and stock raising.

Sheriff Dilley was united in marriage to Miss Ora M. Dustin of Goldendale, in that town in 1896. She is the daughter of Hiram and Rachel (Smith) Dustin. Mr. Dustin immigrated to the Northwest from his native state, Iowa, in the fifties, and is now engaged in the practice of law at Goldendale. Mrs. Dustin was born in Ohio and was married to Mr. Dustin at the age of eighteen. Her parents were pioneers of The Dalles. Mrs. Dustin passed out of life's portal while a resident of Klickitat county in 1893. In Washington county, Oregon, Mrs. Dillely was born in 1875, and two years later came with her parents to Klickitat county, where she received her education. Mr. and Mrs. Dillely have two children: Alger I., born August 20, 1897, and Edna, born April 3, 1902. Sheriff Dillely, besides being prominent and influential in political affairs, is also an active lodge man, being a charter member of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, in North Yakima, and a Knight of Pythias. Both himself and Mrs. Dillely are well known socially, and possess many warm friends. They are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Dillely's property interests consist of his homestead, of which a goodly portion is improved, and some stock.

CHARLES H. BRECKENRIDGE is one of Yakima's esteemed and successful farmers, who makes his home in the well known Glade settlement, fourteen miles southwest of Mabton. He is a native of the Buckeye state, born in 1856, to the union of Andrew and Mahala (Berfield) Breckenridge. Andrew Breckenridge was born in Canada and came to Ohio with his parents when a boy. Having married one of its daughters, he removed in 1865 to Iowa, where he was engaged in agricultural pursuits until his death in the spring of 1896. In 1862 he enlisted in the Union army and served until the last disloyal gun was silenced. Mrs. Breckenridge is still living.

Until he reached man's estate, the subject of our sketch lived on his father's farm, securing in the local schools, a fair education; then he bought a farm and cultivated it for three years. At the end of that time he sold out and engaged in railroad work. After four years' experience in this line he went to Missouri and resumed farming, remaining there until 1897. During the next three years he tilled a farm in Nebraska, but the year 1900 found him in Clarkston, Washington. The following spring he filed a homestead claim to his present ranch and since that time he has been engaged in farming, stock raising and locating homesteaders.

In 1884, while a resident of Missouri, Mr. Breckenridge married Mrs. Anna King, who was formerly the wife of Samuel King. She is the daughter of William and Mary (Sherfey) Barlow, natives of Indiana and Tennessee, respectively. Her father was a miller. In an early day he settled in Missouri, where he and his wife resided until death claimed them. Four children were born to Mr. and Mrs. King: Arthur S., Mrs. Belle Noe, Mrs. Dora Forman and Mrs. Mollie Forman, the last three of whom are living in Yakima county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Breckenridge are as follows: Andrew, born March 19, 1885; Archie F., December 14, 1886; Allen J., August 13, 1890; Jennie, November 4, 1892; Jessie, October 15, 1894; Eula, October 10, 1897; and Fern, May 30, 1899, the first being born in Nebraska, the second in Kansas, the next three in Missouri and the two younger in Nebraska. Mr. Breckenridge is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen. He is an active and steadfast Republican and he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. His quarter section of land is all under cultivation and is a substantial testimonial to the industry and capabilities of its owner. Mr. Breckenridge is highly respected by those who know him and is a man of excellent standing in the community.

ROBERT DOROTHY. Half way between Mabton and Bickleton lies the well known Glade settlement, a farming and stock raising community, of which the subject of this sketch is one of the earliest pioneers, and his family the first to establish a home there. Mr. Dorothy came to the Glade in May, 1885, taking a homestead and a timber culture claim. About the same time four or five others settled in this little valley. For many years they did their trading at Prosser, twenty miles distant, Mabton not being in existence then. At first these settlers devoted most of their attention to stock raising, but in late years grain has been the community's principal product, in the raising of which Mr. Dorothy has been unusually successful.

Robert Dorothy was born January 10, 1855, near Ottumwa, Iowa, a son of Charles and Margaret (Way) Dorothy. Charles Dorothy, a farmer and stockman, was born in Indiana in 1818, to pioneers of that state, and early in life came to Iowa, settling in Wapato county. So primitive were conditions on that frontier at the time, he used a horse and a cow as a team with which to cultivate his land. His death occurred in 1878. Margaret Way was born in 1820, in Ohio; she died in November, 1897. The father was of Irish and Scotch descent. At the age of sixteen the lad Robert started out in the world, first working for others and then leasing land. He bought his first pair of boots with money earned husking corn in a field where the snow lay a foot deep. All of his first earnings were divided with his parents. When the Black Hills mining excitement swept over the country it caught the young farmer and swept him into that auriferous region. The following spring he went south to the mines just north of Denver. His father's death about that time called him home and there he was married and lived for a short time, removing thence to Andrew county, Missouri. Misfortune met him there, a flood destroying his entire crop the season after his arrival. After a residence of a year and a half in Cowley county, Kansas, Mr. Dorothy decided to remove to the Northwest and, as heretofore stated, settled in Yakima county.

His bride November 4, 1880, was Miss Sarah E. Smith, a native daughter of Monroe county, Iowa, born in 1850. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James S. Smith, the father a native of Ohio, and one of Iowa's frontier farmers. Mrs. Dorothy has one brother, Arza, living in Yakima county, and two sisters, Mrs. Hattie Spencer of Yakima county, and Mrs. Emma Randall of Walla Walla. Mr. Dorothy's brothers and sisters are: Elias, Nebraska; William, Henry and Enoch, Iowa; Gibson, Idaho; Mrs. Harriet Barrow, Idaho; Mrs. Mary E. Barrow, Missouri; Mrs. Myra Wintermote, Nebraska; and Mrs. Lavina Dale, Iowa. The children are: Mrs. Arlie B. Jacot, residing in the Glade; Ila and Ellis, living at home. Mr. Dorothy is a member of Modern Woodmen Camp, No. 6,249, of Bickleton; in politics he is an independent voter, lending his strength to the best man rather than to the party; and in educational matters, he has always been and is devoted to the upbuilding of good schools. He was one of the organizers of the Glade district and has served on the board since its establishment. He and his wife are both consistent members of the Methodist church and highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Among Mr. Dorothy's experiences as a pioneer in the Glade, the most vivid in his memory is one which occurred in 1887. He was in the mountains fifteen miles from home, engaged in cutting fence rails, and for three weeks saw no person except an Indian. His wife and one child remained at home all alone. While thus situated, he was suddenly taken sick and after making many attempts to travel and failing, was in the depths of despondency when he was found and brought out by a settler who had gone to the mountains for wood. Mr. Dorothy owns three hundred and twenty acres of well improved land and is recognized as an influential man of ability and integrity.

WILLIAM D. HOISINGTON, a progressive farmer, lives about three miles northeast of the town of Bickleton, in Yakima county, Washington, on the farm consisting of one hundred and sixty acres of well cultivated land, which was homesteaded by Mrs. Hoisington. Near-by is Mr. Hoisington's homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. He was born in Ohio on January 28, 1871, the son of John and Mary (Sessions) Hoisington. His father was an Ohio farmer, of German parentage, and a Civil war veteran. He enlisted in the Second Ohio volunteers, and served for three years and a half, being wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, and for three months obliged to remain in one of the army hospitals. He is now living at Woodstock, Ohio. His mother was also a native of the state of Ohio, and the mother of four children. She died in her native state when her son was seven years old. He attended the schools of Ohio, and also the Idaho State University, and upon reaching the age of eighteen, took up the molder's trade at the Lafayette Car Works in his state, following that vocation for two years. In the month of May, 1880, he went to Pennsylvania, and after a short stay made a trip to Alabama, and then returned to Ohio and followed his trade for the next two years. At the expiration of that time he removed to Chillicothe, Missouri, and became interested with some stockmen there, passing six months in that business. His next move was to Denver, Colorado, where he followed freighting for six months, then went to Salt Lake City and learned the brick trade. He worked at this for five months in the employ of W. S. Simpkins. The succeeding few months were spent in traveling through California and Oregon, and in the latter state he engaged in the hop business; the fall and winter of the same year being spent in the timber of Oregon. In the spring of 1892 he put in a brickyard at Brownsville, Oregon, and the next summer ran a mill in Pullman, Washington. That fall he removed to Kendrick, Idaho, and took up farming; remaining there a year, when he returned to Brownsville, Oregon. In the fall of 1895 he moved to Yakima county, Washington, taking up a homestead, which he has since farmed, and also ran sheep for Cunningham and Smythe during that period.

He was married on December 13, 1900, in Yakima county, to Alice Wattenbarger, whose father, Conrad, was a Missouri farmer, crossing the Plains in the early days and settling in California. He is now living at Bickleton, Washington. Her mother, Mary (Brophy) Wattenbarger, was a native of California, her parents crossing the Plains in an early day to that state. Mrs. H. was born July 31, 1877, and left California for Washington when three years old. She was educated in the Bickleton schools, and married at the age of twenty-three. Mr. Hoisington belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America and Knights of Pythias, and politically is a Republican. Mrs. Hoisington is a member of the Methodist church. He is making a specialty of hog raising, having one hundred and fifty porkers on the ranch, and is counted one of the well-to-do farmers of the locality.

CHARLES A. BERNEY is a prosperous and well-to-do farmer of Yakima county, living two miles northeast of Bluelight postoffice, and owning a large farm of six hundred and forty acres. He is still in the prime of life, being born on November 16, 1863, in one of the provinces of Switzerland. Charles L. Berney, his father, was a Swiss watchmaker and well versed in his craft, dying, however, at the age of forty-one at his home in Switzerland. Amedine (Rachet) Berney, his mother, was also a native of Switzerland, of French Huguenot parentage; she died in 1866, when her son was barely three years old. Mr. Berney received his education in the schools of his native country, also learning farming there, and when nineteen years of age crossed the Atlantic and came to Minnesota, where he spent six months. In December, 1883, he went to Walla Walla, Washington. Purchasing there a wagon and team, he continued to Klickitat county and settled on a strip of railroad land. He lived upon it only a short time, however. Taking up in earnest the stock business, he devoted the ensuing twelve or fifteen years to raising cattle, horses and other live stock. In 1886, he filed on a homestead in Yakima county, which he abandoned before proving up, but in 1898 he took up another, upon which he made final proof years later. This land has all been put into cultivation, as also an additional half section of railroad land, which he bought later. The farm includes two acres of fine orchard.

Mr. Berney was married in Yakima county in 1896 to Laura Miller. His father-in-law, Christian Miller, is a Swiss farmer who came to this country in 1884, settling at Rockford, Illinois, and living there until the spring of 1890, when he moved to the state of Washington. He is now living in the Glade district of Yakima county, eleven miles northeast of the city of Bickleton. Elizabeth (Jacot) Miller, the mother, was also of Swiss birth and was married in her native land. Mrs. Berney was born in Switzerland, February 15, 1875, and was educated there in part, though she completed her education in the schools of Rockford, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Berney have two sons, Lovell C. and Louis A., born on November 1, 1898, and July 1, 1900, respectively. Blanche L. Berney, the youngest child and only daughter, was born in Yakima county, December 10, 1901. Mr. Berney has succeeded in placing over four hundred acres of his land under cultivation, and besides his large orchard, has goodly herds of various kinds of live stock. He is an active Republican and an ex-school director of his district; well thought of by his neighbors, and a man of excellent character and standing in the community.

ARTHUR JACOT is a popular and highly respected young Yakima county farmer, living eleven miles southwest of Mabton in what is known as the Glade. His native land is Switzerland, where he was born in 1868, and among its fertile vales and rugged, snow-crowned crags, in the heart of the Alps, he spent his early years. The father, David Jacot, was also a native of Switzerland, and by trade was a watchmaker. He died when Arthur was only a few months old. The mother, Elise Jacot, was married to Mr. Jacot when seventeen years of age. After his death in 1869 she was married to Christ Miller, and with him emigrated from her native land to America. Mr. and Mrs. Miller are living in Yakima county now. Arthur Jacot received a good education in the schools of Switzerland and at the age of thirteen was apprenticed to the watchmaker's trade. Four years of experience in his trade satisfied him of his competency and he decided to come to the United States. So, in 1885, when seventeen years old, he left the little European republic for the great American republic, settling first in Illinois. There he engaged in farming for five years, having left his trade for agricultural pursuits, meeting with encouraging success. In 1890, he came to Washington, just admitted as a state, and in the Glade settled upon a homestead and timber culture claim, where he has since lived. In the period that has elapsed since 1890, his energy, perseverance and skill have transformed the erstwhile half section of desert into a well improved farm, every acre of which is in cultivation.

Mr. Jacot was united in marriage to Miss Arlic Dorothy, daughter of Robert and Sarah (Smith) Dorothy, residents of the Glade, in 1900. Mr. Dorothy is a native of Iowa, and previous to coming to Washington territory in 1884, he had followed farming in Missouri and Kansas. Subsequently he became a settler in the Glade. Mrs. Dorothy is also an Iowan, her parents having been pioneers of that state. She was married when twenty-one years old. Mrs. Jacot was born in Iowa in 1881, received her education in the schools of Yakima county and was eighteen years of age when married. One child, Dorothy, born April 1, 1903, has blessed the union. Mr. and Mrs. Jacot are members of the Methodist church. He has served as first vice-president of the Epworth League and is regarded as an active churchman. Fraternally, he is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America; politically, he is loyal to the Republican party and an admirer of President Roosevelt. Besides his fine farm—a monument to his industry—Mr. Jacot owns thirteen head of horses and a number of fine cattle. His friends are numbered by the score, as are also the friends of Mrs. Jacot, and all who come in contact with them can only esteem them and wish them a bon voyage to the end of life's journey.

CHARLES M. SMITH lives about a mile east of Bluelight postoffice in Yakima county, Washington. He was born in Cass county, Nebraska, May 25, 1868. His father, William T. Smith, was born in Kentucky in 1837, his parents being pioneers of Iowa, and of Irish blood. When young he moved to Nebraska, was married there, and is now living in Nebraska City, Nebraska. Addie (Beach) Smith, his mother, was a native of Ohio, of Scotch parentage, dying in Nebraska when her son was very young. Mr. Smith received his education in the public schools of Nebraska City, and when seventeen years old was employed by the Nebraska & Iowa Packing House. He severed his connections with this firm after a year's labor, and for six years following worked with an uncle and helped him care for a large farm. For two years he was employed as a mechanic in the repair shops located at Plattsmouth, Nebraska. From 1893 to 1899 he took up farming again; in the spring of the latter year moving to the state of Washington. On May 5, 1899, he filed on a homestead, which has since been his place of residence. At present he has one hundred and twenty acres of plowed land.

On January 5, 1892, he was united in marriage to Addie P. Graves, the ceremony being performed in Nebraska. His wife was the daughter of Elbert L. Graves, a farmer, and a native of Tennessee, who moved to Nebraska in the early days. He is now living at Bluelight, where he is postmaster. Her mother, Ellie A. (Carrell) Graves, was a native of Nebraska, and was married in Missouri. His wife, also a Nebraskan, was educated in the public schools, and married when only sixteen years of age. There have been two children as a result of this union, Della A. Smith, born in Nebraska, January 4, 1894, deceased March 15, 1895, and Elizabeth B. Smith, born in Yakima county, March 27, 1901. Mr. Smith is a member of the United Brethren church, and in politics, casts his vote with the Democratic party. He is esteemed by his fellow citizens as an upright, conscientious man.

ELBERT L. GRAVES is postmaster at Blue-light postoffice, located some fifteen miles south of the city of Mabton, in Yakima county. He is a prosperous farmer, being born in Knox county, Tennessee, in 1848. His father, William W. Graves, was also a native of the same state, and by trade a mason, although a farmer by occupation. He was born in 1818, and moved to Iowa when thirty-six years old, there taking up a homestead; in the following spring going to Missouri, and in 1858 returning to Iowa. Two years later he again moved, this time to Nebraska, where he took up farming for the space of seven years, finally returning to Missouri, living there another year, and once more returning to Nebraska, where he died in 1892. His mother, Mahala P. Graves, a native of Tennessee and the mother of eleven children, is still living in Nebraska. Both father and mother were of German extraction. Mr. Graves lived at home with his parents until twenty-three years of age; during this time receiving his education in the public schools of Nebraska and Iowa. When eighteen years old he learned the brick mason's trade, although he never followed it as an occupation. Two years after becoming of age, he started in to farm for himself and continued in this life for the next twenty-four years. In 1898, he became restless, and removed to the state of Washington, settling near Bickleton, Yakima county. Here he filed on a homestead, which he has made his home until the present time.

He was married when twenty-three, to Ella Carrell. Her father, John Carrell, one of the pioneers of the state of Iowa, and a farmer by occupation, was born in Tennessee, and departed this life in Nebraska. Her mother, Margaret (Smith) Carrell, was a native of Michigan, and the mother of a family of eight children. She is now living in Nebraska. His wife was born in Cass county, Nebraska, in 1858, and received her education in the common schools of that state, being married when only fifteen. To this marriage were born seven children, of which five are living, as follows: Pearl Smith, born May 21, 1876, living in Yakima county; John W., Mark S., M. Vangie and Lulu, a girl of ten years, are all living at home with their parents. George and an infant are deceased. Mr. Graves is a prominent member of the Baptist church, in politics, a Democrat. He has served as postmaster at Bluelight for over three years, receiving his appointment March 23, 1901. His official position takes up a greater part of his time, but he is still improving his farm of a hundred and sixty acres, all of which is in cultivation. He is courteous in the discharge of the varied duties of his position, and is in consequence well esteemed by his neighbors and patrons.

SAMUEL B. LODGE, a farmer residing two and one-half miles northeast of Bluelight postoffice, in Yakima county, is a native of the state of Delaware, where he was born in the year 1852. His father, John W. Lodge, was a wealthy merchant-farmer, born in Delaware also, removing to South Bend, Indiana, in the spring of 1856. Later, in 1862, he moved westward to Oregon, and with but a short stay there, went to North Yakima, Washington, where he died. His mother, Mersa (Gaunt) Lodge, was a resident of New Jersey, and a descendant of the Pilgrim Fathers, who came to this country in the Mayflower. She was married in her native state when twenty-five years old. Samuel B. was educated in the common schools of the state of Michigan, remaining at home until twenty-three years of age, following farming as an occupation. When twenty-five years old he taught school two terms in a town in the Black Hills, and one term in Kansas. In 1880, he went to the Black Hills, at the end of twelve months removing to Kansas, and again teaching school a season. He continued for twelve years to make Kansas his home, leaving there in 1890 for Whatcom, Washington. Remaining there but a short period, he removed to Oregon, where he continued to reside for ten years. At the beginning of this century he came to Yakima county, Washington, and that fall filed on a homestead, which is his present home. He now has over a hundred acres of this land under cultivation.

While living in Kansas, he was married to Martha E. Geyer, on January, 26, 1884. Her father, Nicholas Geyer, was a Kansas pioneer of German parentage, who came to this country when eight years of age. He is now living at Clyde, Kansas. Her mother, Martha (Rakestraw) Geyer, was also of German descent, and died in Kansas. Mrs. Lodge was born in Indiana in 1863, and received her education in the public schools of that state, later attending school in Kansas. She was married at twenty-one, and is the mother of five children, four boys and one girl: Maud A., born in Kansas, February 7, 1885; Harry L., born in Kansas, in 1889; Ralph N. and Roy S. B., both born in Oregon, and Walter E., born in Kansas. Fraternally, Mr. Lodge is associated with the Woodmen of the World; religiously, he is a member of the Christian church, and politically, is a Republican. He is a respected member of the community.

WILLIAM WOMMACK, a young farmer in Yakima county, living about eight miles north-east of Bickleton, was born in the state of Illinois on the 27th of March, 1871. His father, William Wommack, was also a native of Illinois, and a farmer by occupation. He lived for some time in the state of Missouri, then returned to his home in Illinois, whence, after a short stay, he moved to Kansas. In 1879, he migrated to Colorado, where he spent the two years following in various kinds of work, then visiting the states of Utah and Idaho, and also making a short trip to Oregon. In the summer of 1882, he came to Klickitat county, Washington, and established his residence in the town of Bickleton, where he lived for the next two years. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1862, and served through the entire conflict. He spent one year at the Soldiers' Home, located on the Sound, but at this writing is living at Mabton, Washington. The mother of our subject, Matilda (Renner) Wommack, was of German parentage, born in St. Louis, Missouri, and married in Illinois.

Mr. Wommack, whose career is to be outlined in this article, received his education in the public schools of Kansas and Washington, having come to the latter state when thirteen years old. For a number of years he rode the range for his father. Upon attaining the age of twenty-four he filed on a homestead in Yakima county, two miles east of Mabton, where he lived until 1900. He then took up another piece of land six miles north of Bickleton. For the past nine years he has devoted his attention to farming.

On February 1, 1903, Mr. Wommack married a daughter of Thomas and Emma Zypf, Mrs. Emma Dawdy, who had been previously married to Charles Dawdy, in Illinois, and who had, as the fruit of that union, one daughter, Luda M., born April 10, 1902. Mrs. Wommack was educated in the common schools of Illinois, in which state she was born on the 13th of December, 1883. She and Mr. Wommack are parents of one child, born in Yakima county, February 2, 1904. Mr. Wommack has one hundred and thirty acres of his land under cultivation, the balance of the four hundred and eighty acres being used at present as grazing land. He is, however, determined to cultivate every arable acre he owns as soon as possible, for he is too energetic and thrifty to allow any to continue producing less than it is capable of. He has already an excellent start for so young a man and it is not too much to presume that as years pass, he will achieve a still more enviable success in his chosen occupation.

ADAM F. WATTENBARGER, living a little over a mile north of Bluelight postoffice, in Yakima county, Washington, is a native of California, born on the 15th of November, 1880. His father, Conrad Wattenbarger, is a Missourian, born in the year 1849. He moved to California in the early part of 1862, crossing the Plains in company with other settlers, and at this writing he is living in the city of Bickleton, Klickitat county. The mother of our subject, Mary (Brophy) Wattenbarger, was born while her parents were crossing the Plains to the Golden state, in the year 1854.

Mr. Wattenbarger came to Klickitat county with his parents when a young boy, and attended the public school of Bickleton, completing his education there, and residing in the immediate neighborhood with his parents until he became of age. He early manifested a liking for horses and the freedom of outdoor life, and rode the ranges in the vicinity of his home until the spring of 1901, when he took up a homestead in Yakima county, in the locality known as the Glade. There he has since lived.

Mr. Wattenbarger was recently united in marriage to Gussie Williams, the ceremony being performed in North Yakima in the fall of 1903. His wife's father, Harrison Williams, was a traveling man, and now lives in the Glade, as does also her mother, Nora (Pitman) Williams. Mrs. Wattenbarger was born in the state of Ohio, and lived for some time at Davenport, and later at North Yakima, Washington, receiving her education in the common schools of those places. She was married at the age of sixteen. Mr. Wattenbarger adheres to the principles of the Republican party, although he does not take a very active interest in local politics. His homestead consists of one hundred and sixty acres of land, all of which has been brought, by the exercise of tireless energy, to a high state of cultivation.

JOHN T. ROBERTS, who is engaged in general farming and in raising horses, resides ten miles southwest of Kiona. He is an early pioneer of Yakima county, having established a feed yard at Yakima City in 1883. During his first four years in the county he was thus engaged; but in 1887 he entered the stock and farming industries with A. G. McNeil, on a ranch situated on the Yakima river. Mr. Roberts was successful and, purchasing land near the McNeil place, himself began operations. That he has met with uniformly encouraging results, his present valuable holdings indicate. Born in Benton county, Iowa, in 1861, he is the son of two native pioneers of that state, Charles E. and Elizabeth (Hayes) Roberts. In 1865, Charles E. Roberts removed to the Kansas frontier and there married and made a home on the virgin prairie. John T.'s mother died when he was but six years old and four years later he suffered another irreparable loss, his father being killed by a falling tree, but an uncle took the orphan lad under his charge and cared for him until he was able to go out into the world with a fair equipment. By working summers, he was able to attend school winters and thus acquire a fair education. At the age of sixteen, he commenced working for different farmers in the community, still keeping up his winter school attendance. In 1880, he went to Texas, where he lived eighteen months, then he worked on Colorado railroads a year and during the two years previous to his advent into Washington, he was employed in Idaho.

Mr. Roberts and Miss Emma Norling, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Efik Norling, natives of Sweden, were married in North Yakima in 1900. Mr. and Mrs. Norling came to Washington twelve years ago and are at present residing in Franklin county. Mrs. Roberts was born in Sweden in 1881, and received her education in the schools of her native country and in Yakima county. She and Mr. Roberts have one child, Eugene T., born in Yakima county, February 13, 1903. Mr. Roberts takes an active interest in political matters and, where national issues are involved, votes the Republican ticket. His property interests consist principally of ninety-eight acres of farming land, two hundred and fifty head of horses and a small band of cattle. Mr. Roberts is a successful farmer and stockman, and as an industrious, public-spirited man and citizen, he stands well in his community.

MARTIN L. SEE, one of the Yakima country's successful ranchmen, whose home is ten miles east of Kiona, is a native of Missouri, born in the year 1869 to the union of William and Jane See. They were Kentuckians, whose families became pioneers of Missouri. Martin L. was left an orphan at the age of seven, his father having died the year previous at the age of thirty-seven, and his mother in 1876. Thus left adrift upon the world, he was very early compelled to assume the serious responsibilities of life. His grandparents cared for him three years; then he commenced working for neighbors and others, getting what little education he was able to secure. Such was his industry and thriftiness that by the time he reached his majority, he had saved about one thousand four hundred dollars. From Missouri he went to Indian Territory and worked seven months for Captain Seavers; then he visited Texas, after which he returned to his native state and farmed four years. Later he spent nine months in Colorado, lived in Nebraska one winter, and in 1889 came to Anacortes, Washington. He worked in the Puget Sound region during the next three years, but in 1892 crossed the mountains and settled in the Yakima wheat belt. For the first three years he was employed by other farmers, or until 1895, when he bought three hundred and sixty acres. He successfully cultivated his farm until the fall of 1903, then bought Nelson Rich's interests in the stock firm of Brown & Rich and removed to the Rich ranch on the Yakima river, where he now resides.

September 26, 1900, Miss Louisa Pollan, of Goldendale, became the wife of Mr. See. William C. and Elenora (Baugh-Lambert) Pollan, the parents of Mrs. See, were born in Missouri and California, respectively. Mr. Pollan crossed the Plains to California in 1850 and was there married and lived until 1882, when he settled in Klickitat county. He is now living in Goldendale, but Mrs. Pollan died since the family came to central Washington.

Mr. See was born in California in 1879, and received her education in the public schools of Klickitat county. She has three brothers: George, Carl and Benjamin, and one sister, Ruby, all of whom are living in Klickitat county. Her father is a farmer by occupation. Mr. and Mrs. See are the parents of two children: Iva E., born August 15, 1901, and William M., born January 3, 1903, both in Yakima county. Mr. See's fraternal associations are with the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen. He is an active Republican. While in the Horse Heaven district, he was appointed a road supervisor, serving with credit.

He is in a prosperous financial condition, being the owner of a half interest in six hundred cattle and seventy-five head of horses, besides other interests. As a man of industry, integrity and stability, he enjoys the good opinions of his neighbors and fellow men.

JACOB GIEZENTANNER, postmaster in Kiona and a pioneer settler of the eastern portion of Yakima county, was born in Switzerland, 1842, and is the son of Swiss parents, Phelix and Barbara (Wimersberger) Giezentanner. His father was a school teacher by profession. In 1850, the family came to the United States, settling in Knoxville, Tennessee, where the father was engaged as a clerk in one store for twenty-five years; his death occurred in 1877. Jacob received his early education, in the German language, from his father, but after coming to America attended the common schools until sixteen years old. At that age he began learning the carpenter's trade, serving four years as an apprentice. He was living in Tennessee when hostilities between the North and South commenced and decided to join the Union army. In order to accomplish this object, in the spring of 1862 he traveled five successive nights, hiding daytimes in the woods, before reaching the Union lines, and enlisted in the Sixth Tennessee infantry. A severe illness disabled him at the end of a year's service, which resulted in his honorable discharge. After his discharge he lived in northern Kentucky for a time and then returned to Tennessee, where he followed farming five years. In 1868 he became employed in a sash and door factory in Knoxville, worked there two years, then went to work in a machine shop, and remained there until 1879. In that year he immigrated to Oregon, locating first in Albany. The next year he settled upon a homestead west of Goldendale and conducted a sash and door factory in the present city. Four years later he removed to Ellensburg and thence to North Yakima to take charge of W. Webb's furniture store. Mr. Giezentanner later bought the store and personally conducted it two years. In the spring of 1888, he filed a timber culture claim to a quarter-section of land near Kiona's site and also purchased three hundred and twenty acres of railroad land. Upon this place he made his home between the years 1889 and 1899, removing to Kiona in the latter year to take charge of the postoffice. Since that date Kiona has been his home.

He was married in Tennessee, December 30, 1863, to Miss Marv Wright, daughter of Iredell D. and Abigail (Ragan) Wright, natives of North Carolina and Tennessee, respectively. Iredell D. Wright was a lawyer by profession. He practiced in Madisonville, Tennessee, and was a member of the state legislature one or two terms, and a colleague of President Andrew Jackson. The grandfather, Doctor Isaac Wright, was one of Tennessee's earliest and most prominent pioneers. His son Iredell died in 1866. Abigail (Ragan) Wright's father was a soldier in the War of 1812. Mrs. Giezentanner was born in Tennessee and educated in that state. She was sixteen years old when married. Their children are: William H., born October 24, 1864, a Chicago traveling man; Charles T., March 17, 1868, editor of the Pasco News-Record; Mrs. Molly E. Gerry, January 12, 1870, living in Pasco; Walter, May 1, 1872, managing Robert Gerry's Kennewick store; Conrad, November 10, 1874, living at home; Thomas D., July 28, 1877, clerking in Gerry's Pasco store, and Gertrude, August 14, 1882, preparing herself for teaching music. One daughter, Bertha R., born August 25, 1866, died in 1868. All except Gertrude were born in Tennessee, she having been born in Klickitat county, Washington. The subject of this article has always been deeply interested in religious work, and in 1895, in Spokane, was ordained a Methodist minister by Bishop Bowman. He was organizer and originator of all religious work in Kiona; organizing the first Sunday school, and preaching the first sermon in town. Mr. Giezentanner is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic. He is a public-spirited citizen, of force in the community, and, as a pioneer of the Yakima and Klickitat valleys, a business man and a farmer, has done his full share in upbuilding that region.

LEONARD C. ROLPH, living in the Kiona canal district, two miles west of Kiona, Washington, is a native of Minnesota, born in 1870. His father, Osborn J. Rolph, was born in New York state in the year 1820. In 1852 he crossed the Plains with an ox team to the gold fields of California. After spending several years in the far West, he returned to Minnesota and there married Rosinah Putnam Porter, a direct descendant of Israel Putnam of Revolutionary war fame. In answer to his country's call for volunteers, at the outbreak of the Civil war, he enlisted in Company M, First Minnesota volunteers, and served until the close of the struggle. In 1886 with his family he immigrated to Oregon, and thence to the Horse Heaven region on the Columbia river. He died at Kiona in 1899.

Leonard C. Rolph, the fourth in a family of six, attended the common schools of Wisconsin, Oregon and Washington until fourteen years of age, then began working among the various farmers of Yakima county, gradually gaining invaluable experience which stood him in good stead later in life. When the Yakima Irrigation and Improvement Company constructed its canal through the lower Yakima valley, Mr. Rolph came to Kiona with his father and brothers and purchased land of the company. In 1898 he went to the Alaskan gold fields, making Dawson City his objective point, and for more than two years and a half delved for the precious metal. He returned to Washington in 1901, and is now successfully engaged in farming a vast tract of Horse Heaven wheat land.

Mr. Rolph was married at Kiona in 1894 to Ellen Ketcham, a daughter of Augustus C. and Lydia F. (Thurston) Ketcham. Both parents were born in New York state. Mr. Ketcham went to Wisconsin when a boy and in that state enlisted in the Fourth Wisconsin volunteers, serving in the Union army until the close of the war. He arose, through skill and bravery, from the rank of a private to that of a captain. After the war he followed farming in Wisconsin several years, then removed to Missouri, and in 1884 settled in the Horse Heaven region, Yakima county. His death occurred at Kiona in 1892. Mrs. Ketcham was born in 1844, her parents being natives of Vermont. She was married at the age of twenty-three. Mrs. Rolph was born in Missouri, and educated in Yakima county; she was nineteen years old when married. She is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. and Mrs. Rolph are parents of three children: Glen, Clifford and Velma, all of whom were born at Kiona. Mr. Rolph is connected with two fraternal organizations, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen of America; politically, he is a Republican. He is a man of excellent standing among his neighbors and fellow men on account of his integrity, energy and progressiveness in all lines.

FRANK S. HEDGER, M. D. The well-known and esteemed physician and horticulturist who forms the subject of this biography has been a resident of Yakima county since 1894, in that year settling near Kiona, where he has since lived. In those ten years he has established a lucrative and permanent professional practice and has reared a most comfortable home in one of the garden spots of Yakima county. He was born, October, 1860, in Illinois, the son of Dionysius and Martha (Massey) Hedger, both of whom are natives of New York; they were married in that state. They settled in Illinois after leaving New York, then in Iowa, but in 1878 crossed the Plains to the Walla Walla valley. The following year the father founded a home on government land and since that date has been successfully engaged in raising wheat, still living on the old place. Frank S. was five years old when his parents removed to Iowa and entered the mercantile business in the city of Oskaloosa. In that city he received a common and high school education. Upon arriving in Washington, he studied medicine in Walla Walla two years and then went to Philadelphia, where he was graduated by the Hahnemann Medical College in 1883. Having secured his degree, the young physician returned to Walla Walla for a short period, then established an office in Missoula, Montana, remaining there eleven years. In March, 1894, he came to Kiona. Noting the richness of the farming country, he purchased thirty-eight acres of irrigated land and set out an orchard, vineyard, berry bushes, vines, et cetera, and has devoted himself to his profession and horticultural pursuits ever since.

In Missoula he was married to Miss Ama Scothorn, that important event in his life taking place in the year 1884. Her parents, John and Matilda (Glick) Scothorn, were natives of Ohio; her father was a merchant. They removed to Kansas in an early day, and in that state lived the remainder of their lives. Mrs. Hedger was born in Ohio, 1862, was educated in the common schools of Kansas and also in a convent, and became a resident of Missoula in 1883. There are two children in the doctor's family: Clifford C., born in Missoula, March 22, 1885, and Frank, also born in Montana, May 11, 1887. The elder son has attended the State Agricultural College in Pullman three years and expects to finish his course this year. Dr. Hedger is affiliated with two fraternities, the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen. He is a staunch Democrat and has served as coroner of Missoula county, Montana; also as a member of the Montana State Medical Board. Of his farm, six acres are devoted to orchard and berries of various varieties, two and one-quarter acres are producing strawberries exclusively, nearly an acre is set out in vineyard and eight acres are in alfalfa. Doctor and Mrs. Hedger are popular among all with whom they come in contact, while Mr. Hedger enjoys the confidence of his fellow men and is active in all public matters pertaining to the upbuilding of his community and county.

DAVID McALPIN, farming in the district irrigated by the Kiona canal, is of Scottish and English descent, his paternal grandparents having immigrated to the United States in the early part of the last century. His father, Robert McAlpin, was born in Tennessee, 1816, and in early manhood became a settler in Indiana, there marrying Jane Thomas, a native of that state. In 1839 the son David was born. While still a child he was taken by his parents to Missouri and when twelve years old, in 1851, the family crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling in the Willamette valley. The elder McAlpin lived in Oregon thirty years; then returned to Iowa and lived in that state until his death. David remained with his parents on the farm until the age of twenty-one, farming and raising stock. At that time he was married and:

leased his father-in-law's farm one year. The next five years he was engaged in the mercantile business in Salem; then two years in a sawmill. This experience was succeeded by his removal to California, where he traveled twelve years for a nursery company. In 1884 he came to Washington, settling for a few months in Colfax. Thence he went to Asotin and during the ensuing seven years made his home in that section of Washington. His advent into Yakima county took place in 1891. At this time he filed on a homestead near Kiona and since then has made it his home.

Mr. McAlpin was married near Salem, Oregon, in 1860, to Miss Ellen R. Strang, a daughter of Daniel and Cynthia (Lorton) Strang, who came to the Northwest from Iowa in 1852. Her father was born in Baltimore, Maryland; her mother in Illinois, to early pioneers of that state. Mr. Strang opened the first tin shop established in Salem and for a number of years conducted a hotel in that city. During his declining years he was engaged in farming near the capital city. Mrs. Strang was married when seventeen years old. Mrs. McAlpin was born in Burlington, Iowa, 1844, and crossed the Plains when a child. She attended school in the Willamette valley. Mr. and Mrs. McAlpin have six children: Walter, born February 13, 1862; Columbus E., July 21, 1865; Alfred A., April 16, 1872; Donald, August 24, 1877; Ralph S., January 10, 1884, and Lloyd D., September 23, 1886. The first three named were born in Salem; one in California, and the last two in Asotin. Alfred is farming on a part of the parental home, his father having given him a tract of thirty-seven acres. The parents are devoted members of the Presbyterian church, and highly esteemed for their many generous, sterling, personal qualities. Mr. McAlpin is a Republican and has served his community for some time as justice of the peace. He is a loyal friend of education and has occupied the responsible and honored position of school director in his district. He owns sixty-five acres of land, of which thirty are under irrigation and producing fruit, alfalfa, vegetables and berries.

GEORGE W. PALMER. A typical pioneer of the West is the subject of this biography, whose interesting life would in itself fill a volume, so varied have been his experiences and so broad their scope. Missouri is his native state. He was born in 1842 to the union of John H. and Catherine (Graves) Palmer, natives of Kentucky and Virginia, respectively. In 1853 the family crossed the Plains and mountains to the northwestern portion of the United States, and in Marion county, Oregon, made their humble home. The doughty Scotch pioneer prospered and at the time of his death was a leading farmer of the valley. George W. attended school and assisted his father on the farm until 1861, at that time entering the freighting business, operating between The Dalles and the famed Oro Fino mines, in what is now Idaho. He wintered on the site of Weston, Oregon, having one hundred and twenty-five cattle on the surrounding range. The hard winter of 1861-62 killed all but twelve head. The discouraged young stockman was of necessity obliged to temporarily abandon stock raising. He went into the Auburn mines in eastern Oregon and followed mining until 1864, settling in Umatilla county in the fall of that year. During his four years' residence there, he served as a deputy sheriff under Frank Maddock. In the fall of 1866 he commenced freighting between Umatilla, Oregon, and Boise, Idaho, also between other mining centers, following this work until 1872, when he purchased an interest in the Connor Creek mine, Baker county, and operated it three years. He installed the first stamp-mill erected on that ledge. Meanwhile, having retained his stock interests, in 1876 he sold the mine and went to the Palouse region, settling near Colton, Washington. He resided there, engaged in stock raising and farming, until 1891; then sold his property and went to the Willamette valley, entering the hop raising industry. The valley was his home until 1899, and in that year he removed to Yakima county and entered the stock industry in the lower valley. The family came to their present home, two miles north of Kiona, in July, 1903, settling upon a forty-acre farm irrigated by the Kiona canal.

Mr. Palmer and Miss Mary A. Parks were married in 1869, the ceremony taking place in Umatilla county. Mrs. Palmer was born in Indiana, 1848, to the union of George B. and Cynthia (Richardson) Parks, natives of Kentucky and Indiana, respectively. George B. Parks was married in Indiana and, in 1853, with his family, followed the tide of emigration westward across the Plains to the Oregon country, settling in Douglas county. He lived there until 1895, when he removed to Umatilla county, and during the next quarter of a century was engaged in farming, stock raising and freighting, in Eastern Oregon and Idaho Territory. He then returned to the Willamette valley and lived the remainder of his days in that beautiful locality. Previous to her marriage, at the age of twenty-one, Miss Parks taught school several terms in Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Palmer have been blessed with three children: John B., born in Baker county, Oregon, March 24, 1870, living near Kiona; Nixon, born in Oregon, May 7, 1873, also living near Kiona, and Mattie, born in Washington, March 10, 1878, living with her parents. Mr. Palmer is connected with only one fraternity, the Masons. He is an active Democrat and a considerable factor in local politics. In 1887 he was elected a commissioner of Whitman county and served two years, making a creditable record. His business interests are many and include five hundred and forty acres of farming lands in Oregon and Washington, one hundred and fifty head of cattle, and various mining property in Oregon. He is making a specialty of breeding thoroughbred Hereford cattle. Mr. Palmer has met with a most commendable success in his business endeavors, has lived a life of usefulness, faithfully performed his duty as a citizen and a neighbor, and has founded a happy, comfortable home.

CAPT. ADAM J. WIMER, residing two and a half miles north of Kiona, is a pioneer of the west whose experiences on the coast in the early period of the west's settlement make his life story a most interesting one—too long to fully relate in these pages. He was born in Ohio, November 5, 1832, his parents being Adam and Catherine (Harrager) Wimer, both of Pennsylvania Dutch descent. The family removed from Ohio to Iowa in 1844, and in that state the parents lived until their deaths, that of the mother occurring October 23, 1880, in her eighty-fifth year. Adam Wimer was one of sixteen children. He attended the district schools and worked on the farm until eighteen years old, or until 1850, when he crossed the Plains to the California mines. The Indians stole the party's horses, compelling the frontiersmen to use oxen to finish the trip. Mr. Wimer spent twelve years mining and manufacturing brick in California; then was engaged in manufacturing brick for three years in Nevada. In February, 1864, he became one of the earliest settlers in Surprise valley, northeastern California, erecting the first cabin there. The Indians proved very troublesome, however, and the settlers of the valley were compelled to organize a company of minute men, of which Mr. Wimer was chosen captain. This company fought several times with the hostiles. Previous to this experience, the captain participated in the famous Indian war of 1855-6, and had earned the name of being a skilled Indian fighter. From Surprise valley, he removed to Yamhill county, Oregon, thence, in 1868, to Eugene, thence to Cloverdale, where he lived until the spring of 1873, and finally settled in Whitman county, Washington, near Pullman. He was engaged in farming and stock raising until the fall of 1888, at that time becoming a resident of Uniontown. The distilling and brick making industries occupied the succeeding fifteen years of his life. In the spring of 1903, however, he left Uniontown and became one of the prosperous inhabitants of Yakima county, settling upon his little farm near Kiona. We must not forget to mention that while in California, Captain Wimer became one of the founders of Crescent City.

He was married in Washington county, Oregon, May, 1867, to Miss Lydia E. Wayman, the daughter of John and Mary (Smith) Wayman. John Wayman was born in Ohio, settled in Iowa in 1854, crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1865 and settled in Yamhill county, his death occurring in Washington county. Mrs. Wayman was born in Maryland, 1814, was married in 1834 and was the mother of ten children. Her ancestors were Dutch. Mrs. Wimer was born in Ohio, in 1846, educated in Iowa and crossed the Plains with her parents. She and her sister Mary drove and cared for a mule team during the six months' journey and arrived in Yamhill county in September, without having been molested by Indians. Captain and Mrs. Wimer are the parents of several children: Mrs. Mary E. Wade, born March 2, 1868, living in Spokane; Zola, August 13, 1869; John W., January 14, 1873, an assayer at Wallace, Idaho; Walter G., April 17, 1877, living at Burke, Idaho; Frank S. and Fred M., twins, born January 28, 1880, the former living at Cottonwood, Idaho, the latter, deceased; Ellis A., September 8, 1882, a mail clerk in Spokane; and Ida B., November 7, 1890, attending school in Spokane. Mr. Wimer is an active Democrat and has served his fellow men at Uniontown in the capacities of justice of the peace, three years; city clerk, three years, and police judge, four years. He still owns valuable property situated in Uniontown, besides his ten-acre farm near Kiona. His life has been an active one and he is recognized as an influential citizen in all the communities of which he has formed a part.

ALVEN E. WOLCOTT, engaged in general farming seven miles southwest of Kiona, was born in Ohio in 1867, the son of Morgan and Louisa (Ziegler) Wolcott, Ohio pioneers of English and German descent, respectively. Morgan Wolcott, who is himself also the son of Ohio pioneers, still lives at his birthplace. He served three years and nine months in the Union army. His wife's father emigrated from Germany in 1814. Alven E. Wolcott received a fair education in the public schools of Ohio, remaining on the farm until he was twenty-one years old. In 1890 he left Ohio, immigrating to California, where he lived eight years in Los Angeles. A trip to Ohio followed, then a season in Florida, and in the spring of 1899 he came to the Northwest. Yakima county attracted his attention and he decided to become one of its citizens, so he filed a homestead claim to a quarter section of wheat land south of Prosser, and upon it he has since lived, excepting winters, when he resides in Kiona that his children may attend school. By faithful and skillful work he has transformed his desert claim into a thrifty farm, all under cultivation, and has improved it by the erection of substantial buildings.

His marriage to Miss Emma McCormick took place in Los Angeles, May 1, 1895. She is a native of Ohio, also, born in 1867, and was educated in the public schools of her native state. Mrs. Wolcott is a talented woman, possessing a fine musical education, and for several years previous to her marriage was engaged in teaching music in Los Angeles. Her parents, Samuel and Eliza (Hughes) McCormick were also natives of Ohio, the children of early pioneers. Mr. McCormick is a successful farmer in the Buckeye state, but Mrs. McCormick passed to her eternal rest in 1878, leaving eight children to mourn the loss of a devoted mother. Three children have brightened the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wolcott, all of whom are living: Morgan, born in California, February 16, 1896; Aloise, on the Horse Heaven ranch, May 9, 1901; and Charles A., also born on the ranch, July 28, 1903. Mr. Wolcott is an earnest advocate of Prohibition principles and, outside of politics, takes an active interest in all other public affairs. He and Mrs. Wolcott possess a comfortable home and a valuable farm and, surrounded by a host of friends and well wishers, are content with their lot in life.

WALTER W. SCOTT, deceased. With the death, in 1900, of the man whose name appears at the beginning of this biography, there passed away one of Yakima's respected and esteemed citizens and one of Kiona's earliest and most substantial pioneers. Mr. Scott was born in Vienna, Illinois, 1862, and was the son of Walter A. Scott, an Englishman, who came to Illinois in early days and became a successful woolen mill owner and farmer. He died in California. The mother was of Scotch parentage. Walter W. Scott left school when he was fifteen years old and learned telegraphy. A year later he was stationed in Texas. From Texas he was transferred to Nebraska and after a two years' service in that state, returned to Texas and assumed full charge of an office of considerable importance. In 1888 he came to the Northwest and at first took charge of the office at Sumner, Pierce county, Washington. A year later he went to Tacoma and thence to Gate City, remaining at the latter place two years. He came to Kiona in 1891 as Northern Pacific station agent, occupying that position two years. During his first year of residence he perceived the fine opportunity presented for the establishment of a general store at Kiona and accordingly opened a small one, his wife taking charge of it. Mr. Scott himself managed the business from 1893 until his untimely death, meeting with excellent success and gradually increasing the size of his store. His removal from the affairs of life was a shock to the community, for he was an energetic business man, public-spirited and won the friendship of all who came into close touch with him.

Mr. Scott and Miss Tena Stoll, a daughter of John P. and Elizabeth (Sohn) Stoll, were united in marriage in 1886, the ceremony taking place in Nebraska. John P. Stoll was born in Germany and came to the United States when a boy of seven years. His youth and early manhood were spent in Ohio, where he married a native of that state. In 1867 the family removed to Nebraska and there established a permanent home. Mr. Stoll died in 1898. Mrs. Scott was born in Ohio in 1866, received her education in Nebraska, and was married at the age of nineteen. To this union were born three children, all of whom are living at home: Neita B., born in Texas, August 12, 1888; Mabel, born in Texas, September 17, 1890; and Ruby, born in Washington, October 22, 1892. Mr. Scott was connected with two fraternities, the Masons and the Modern Woodmen. Mrs. Scott is a consistent member of the Episcopal church. Her property consists of two and a half acres in town, the store and valuables it contains, and a band of horses. She has bravely and successfully taken up her vastly increased duties and responsibilities and enjoys the fullest confidence and esteem of the community.

JOHN H. KENNEDY, orchardist and general farmer, living at Kiona upon the oldest place in that section of the county, was born in Iowa, December 26, 1854. His father, William Kennedy, of Scotch-Irish extraction, was born in Ohio and became one of Iowa's earliest pioneers, going thither in 1830. For a number of years he was engaged in the sawmill business in that state in addition to caring for his farming interests. While yet a resident of Ohio he met and won for his bride a native born Ohio girl, Mary Herron. In Iowa John H. Kennedy attended the public schools, but received most of his education in the Grand View Academy. He accompanied his parents to Nebraska in 1877 and, as the youngest son, remained with them during their declining years. When twenty-two years of age, he was presented with eighty acres of land by his father and thenceforth aided him in the management of his business interests. After the death of his father in 1884, John H. came to the Northwest and after thoroughly inspecting different portions of this section of the Union decided to establish his permanent home in Yakima county, and so settled at Kiona, where his endeavors have been crowned with satisfying success.

He was married in Nebraska, 1884, to Miss Laura French, a native of Iowa, born in 1862 in Lee county, her parents being Jonathan B. and Miranda (Allison) French. Mr. French was born in New York, went to Ohio at an early date in its settlement, was married there in 1850, later removed to Keokuk, Iowa, thence to Nebraska in 1872, and finally settled in Idaho, in 1885. He died a year later. Mrs. French was a native of Pennsylvania, the daughter of early Ohio pioneers; her birth occurred in 1828. Mrs. Kennedy was educated in the public schools and in the Pawnee City Academy, Nebraska. For three years previous to her marriage she taught school. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are the parents of four children: William W., born in Spokane, April 20, 1886, attending the Waitsburg Academy; Joseph A., born in Idaho, February 15, 1895; Philip F., born at Kiona, September 18, 1899, and John P., also born at Kiona, June 16, 1902. Both Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are active members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Kennedy's political views may be said to be liberal Republican. He owns one hundred acres of land, thirty of which are irrigable. Eight acres are set out in a fine bearing orchard, two acres in a young orchard, and an acre is devoted to strawberries. He is a skilled horticulturist, as is easily discerned by an inspection of his place. As a progressive, energetic citizen of integrity, Mr. Kennedy enjoys the respect of his community and possesses a host of friends.

LOVELL C. TRAVIS, one of the leading farmers of Yakima county, is a pioneer of the wheat belt. He was born May 2, 1864, in Nova Scotia, the eldest son of Nathaniel and Hattie (Ring) Travis, likewise natives of that rich Canadian province. He remained with his parents until he was twenty-one years old, but upon attaining his majority, commenced laying the foundation for a home of his own by settling upon a homestead near his father's place. During the first ten years of his residence in the county he was engaged in the stock business for the most part, but since 1895 he has given his attention principally to wheat raising, in which industry he has achieved a distinct success. For many years his father, his brother Botsford and himself were partners. For several years Mr. Travis has cultivated five hundred acres annually.

He was married in Walla Walla in 1888, to Miss Minnie B. Webber, a daughter of Solomon M. and Mary (Harnes) Webber, whose biographies will be found elsewhere in this volume. Mr. and Mrs. Webber are said to have been the first permanent settlers in the Horse Heaven region. Mrs. Travis was born in Sacramento, California, in 1868, and received her education in the public schools of Washington, Nevada, California and Oregon, her father having resided in those states while she was a girl. She was eighteen years old when married to Mr. Travis. They have four children, whose names and dates of birth are recorded as follows: Irene C., November 4, 1888; Etta M., September, 1893; Guy M., March 16, 1895; and Edith R., December 22, 1902. All were born on the Yakima county ranch. Fraternally, Mr. Travis is an Odd Fellow; politically, he is a Republican. For the past eleven years he has served his district as a school director and he takes a lively interest in all other public concerns. Mr. Travis owns five hundred and thirty-five acres of land, of which four hundred and thirty-five acres are in cultivation; his stock interests consist of one hundred head of work and range horses. In cultivating this land he uses immense gang-plows and eight-horse harrows. The grain is handled by a combination harvester drawn by thirty-two horses. Speaking of early days in this section, Mr. Travis says that in order to mail a letter or get the mail it was necessary to ride sixty-four miles across the range to the Columbia, pay two dollars to be ferried across and then go to Wallula, which was the nearest postoffice. Mr. Travis is an energetic, able and progressive farmer whose success is well deserved.

HALLICK A. SMITH, engaged in wheat farming ten miles southeast of Kiona, is one of Yakima county's pioneers who has achieved success. Illinois is his birthplace; the year of his birth, 1861. His parents, Aaron and Phila (Abbott) Smith, were natives of Ohio and Pennsylvania respectively, and their parents were pioneers of Illinois. The father died in 1879, Mrs. Smith in 1876, after long, useful lives. Hallick A. Smith was reared on the old homestead, remaining there assisting his father and attending the district school, until twenty-one years of age. In the spring of 1883, he immigrated to California. He remained there a short time, then with his brother, drove from San Francisco to Walla Walla, Washington. During the fall they investigated the Horse Heaven region and were so well pleased with the outlook that they filed on pre-emption claims immediately. Later Hallick A. filed a homestead claim. Since 1883 he has devoted himself earnestly to the wheat and stock industries. At present he is farming about one thousand acres, all in wheat.

In 1891 Mr. Smith was married to Miss Aurora Volker, the ceremony being performed in Missouri. Her parents, William and Nancy (Holmes) Volker, of German and English descent, respectively, came to Missouri from Illinois. Mr. Volker was a gunsmith by trade and came to America in 1861. He died in 1897. Nine months after the birth of Mrs. Smith in Madison county, Illinois, 1871, she lost her mother, after which she was taken by her father to Missouri. In the public schools of that state she received her education. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are the parents of six children: Lena, born March 31, 1892; Floyd, October 9, 1893; Alfrata, April 19, 1895; Allie L., August 31, 1897; Florence, May 30, 1900; and Ina S., March 17, 1902, all born on the Horse Heaven ranch. Mr. Smith is affiliated with one fraternal organization, the Modern Woodmen. In political matters he takes an active interest, belonging to the Republican party. Mr. Smith has served his district as a school director two terms and when the interests of education are at stake is always to be found in the van of progress. His ranch consists of six hundred and forty acres, all in cultivation and well improved and equipped; twenty-eight head of select draught horses are used in operating the machinery, all valuable animals. Mr. Smith commands the good will and respect of all in the community; the task he has accomplished in building up and making comfortable his home place speaks volumes for his energy and ability.

MELVIN U. DIMMICK, lessee of the great Kelso wheat ranch consisting of three and one-half sections situated ten miles southeast of Kiona, is of Irish and English extraction and a member of a well-known northern Illinois family of pioneers. His father, Aaron L. Dimmick, was born in New York, but in early days removed to Franklin county, Illinois, where he is a prosperous farmer. He was one of three in Franklin county who voted for Lincoln in 1860. Mrs. Dimmick is a native of Indiana and was wedded to Mr. Dimmick in Illinois when she was sixteen years old.

The subject of this biography was reared and educated in Franklin county, Illinois. He commenced farming when he was eighteen years old and until he was twenty-seven worked for various farmers in that section of the state. However, in 1890, he immigrated to the Northwest, locating in Yakima county, and immediately entered the employ of Kelso Brothers. In 1900 he leased their large place and for the past three seasons he has harvested excellent crops. Mr. Dimmick's thorough experience in Illinois agricultural pursuits has been of invaluable assistance to him in western farming, making him unusually capable of managing so large a farm as the Kelso ranch. His knowledge is thorough and his methods are modern, his energies well directed.

Mr. Dimmick was married in 1881 to Ida Roberts, the ceremony taking place in Franklin county, Illinois. To this union four children were born: Horace, March, 1884; Marvin, deceased, November, 1881; Arthur, November 10, 1886; and Norma, July, 1888. He was again married in 1902, his bride being Mrs. Rena Norman, a daughter of John and Sibley (Odle) McReynolds. Mr. McReynolds was born in Indiana and became a pioneer farmer of Illinois. He died September 30, 1887, in Illinois. Between 1861 and 1864 he served in the Union army. Mrs. McReynolds was born in Illinois; she is still living. Her father was a veteran of the Civil war. Mrs. Dimmick was born in Illinois in 1867, and in that state was first married to S. D. Norman. Five children were the fruit of that marriage: Louis, born December 13, 1888; Barney A., April 8, 1891, deceased; Selma C., March 21, 1893; Howard, May 12, 1895; and Victor, April 16, 1897; all born in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Dimmick are the parents of two sons, Clem, who was born November 4, 1902, and died August 25, 1903, and Aaron, born June 12, 1904. Mr. Dimmick is affiliated with the Odd Fellows and is a member of the Baptist church. He takes a deep interest in political affairs, voting, usually, the Republican ticket. He is a man of unquestioned integrity, progressive ideas, public-spirit and popularity with his neighbors; and he ranks as one of the most substantial citizens of Yakima county.

WARREN C. TRAVIS is another member of a well known and popular family of Yakima county pioneers which is among Yakima's most extensive wheat raisers. His ranch lies ten miles southeast of Kiona. He was born in Nova Scotia in 1868, to the union of Nathaniel and Harriet (Ring) Travis, also natives of that province, the father born April 17, and the mother April 2, 1843. They immigrated to the United States in 1878, settling first in Nevada, where Mr. Travis engaged in the mining and transportation industries until the fall of 1881. After spending a year in California, he moved to Oregon and in the fall of 1883 settled upon pre-emption and timber culture claims in the Horse Heaven region. Since that time Mr. and Mrs. Travis have made Yakima county their home, though at present they are visiting in California. Nathaniel Travis is of Scotch and English descent; his wife, of English and Irish extraction. Warren C. Travis did not accompany his parents to the United States, but remained with an uncle to finish his education in Nova Scotia. In 1882, however, he bade adieu to his birthplace and journeyed to Weston, Oregon, joining his parents there. He lived with them until eighteen years old, then entered the service of Mathews & Baker, stockmen. A year later he engaged in railroad work, and in 1889 went to California. His first work there was driving stage, but after a year's experience in this trying occupation, he entered the mines. Mining occupied his attention until 1900, when he returned to Yakima county and settled upon a homestead near his relatives. The appearance of his ranch indicates a large amount of thrift in the owner, as it is well fenced, has good buildings and is all in cultivation.

He was married in Lundy, California, in 1891, to Miss Lulu V. Montrose. Her parents, Rodney G. and Eliza (White) Montrose, were born in the province of Ontario, Canada, married there and came to Nevada in 1867, the father preceding his family. He went to California in 1877, his family following three years later, and he is still living in that state. By trade, he is a millwright. Mrs. Montrose died in Nevada, in 1875; she was the mother of six children. Mrs. Lulu Travis was born in Carson City, Nevada, in 1871, and received her education in the common schools of Nevada and California and in the high school of Bridgeport, California. Mr. and Mrs. Travis are the parents of two children: Naomi, born in Kennewick, December 12, 1895; and Nathaniel, born in California, May 9, 1898. Both husband and wife are members of the Baptist church. Mr. Travis is an enthusiastic Republican, ever active in behalf of his party. In California he served his community as justice of the peace. He is a director and clerk of his school district, a leader in all movements looking toward the improvement of his community or county and in fact is one of the most influential citizens of the wheat belt. He and Mrs. Travis enjoy the fullest confidence and esteem of the entire community. His nine hundred and sixty acre wheat ranch is all in cultivation.

BOTSFORD S. TRAVIS, living eleven miles southeast of Kiona, is one of the substantial and popular wheat farmers of Yakima county and a brother of Lovell C. and Warren C. Travis, also large wheat growers. Born in 1871 in the province of Nova Scotia, Canada, he is the youngest son of Nathaniel and Hattie (Ring) Travis, likewise natives of Nova Scotia. Nathaniel Travis was born April 17, 1843; Mrs. Travis, April 2d, of the same year. They were married in 1863 and lived upon their Nova Scotia farm until 1878. In that year, however, they immigrated to Nevada, where the father engaged in mining and freighting until the fall of 1881. Then he went to California for a short time, but the next fall, that of 1882, he moved to Oregon. The same year he visited the Horse Heaven Plains and so deeply impressed was he with their adaptability to farming that in the spring of 1883 he removed thither and established his permanent home. Mr. and Mrs. Travis are still living. Botsford S. was eleven years old when he came west. For three years after his arrival in Yakima county he attended school. He then commenced riding the range for Mathews & Baker and during the succeeding twelve years rode for himself and that firm. His father, his brother, Lovell, and he entered into a partnership in the nineties, his father and brother looking after the farms while Botsford cared for the stock interests. This partnership was dissolved in 1899, Botsford at that time settling upon a homestead and thenceforth farming for himself alone.

Mr. Travis was married in Portland December

28, 1898, to Miss Clara McElvain, a daughter of Samuel and Amanda (Simpson) McElvain. Mr. McElvain was born in Illinois, moved to Oregon in 1891, and with his family, is at present a resident of Kennewick. He is a contractor by occupation. Mrs. McElvain was the first white child born in Butler county, Nebraska. Her parents are still living. Mrs. Travis was also born in Butler county, in 1880, but was educated in Portland and Kennewick. At the age of eighteen she married. Mr. and Mrs. Travis have two children, Ivan V., born in Renton, Washington, November 23, 1899; and Louise V., born on the ranch, October 23, 1903. Mr. Travis belongs to the Republican party and takes an active interest in all political matters. He owns five hundred and thirty-three acres of wheat land, all under cultivation, ten acres of land at Kennewick, and considerable stock. Mr. Travis has achieved a very enviable success in his endeavors to amass a competence and make for himself and family a comfortable home. In his ardor to do this, however, he has not been unmindful of his community and fellow men, but has ever shown himself public spirited and patriotic.

REMUS E. CARTER, a pioneer and successful wheat grower living twelve miles south of Kiona, is a Kentuckian, having been born in Davis county, Kentucky, in 1854. His father, Dr. William A. C. Carter, was a native of Virginia, who became a pioneer of Davis county and there married Sarah Hobbs, the daughter of Kentucky pioneers and herself born in that state. They removed to Illinois in 1863, where the father practiced his profession, that of a veterinary, until his death in 1877. Mrs. Carter died in 1864. Remus E. Carter remained at home until twenty-one years old, or until 1875, when he went to Texas and commenced working on a ranch. A little later he returned to Kentucky, thence to Illinois and remained there until 1882. That year marks the date of his immigration to the Northwest. He first located at Pilot Rock, Oregon, working in a sawmill, then a livery stable and finally herding sheep. The next May he made a trip through the Palouse country, stopping for short periods at Genesee and Moscow. From Moscow he went to Medical Lake, thence to the Coeur d'Alenes, back to Medical Lake and thence returned to Pendleton, where he remained until November. At that time, late in the fall of 1883, he settled upon a homestead in the Horse Heaven region and since that time has been successfully engaged in farming and horse raising upon his place, sowing between four hundred and five hundred acres to wheat each year. His holdings consist of fully eight hundred acres of excellent wheat land and considerable stock. His farm is well improved with comfortable buildings and two excellent wells, a rarity in that country, and thoroughly equipped with machinery. Of the fourteen members of his immediate family, only Mr. Carter and one brother, Alfred J., living in Ohio county, Kentucky, are living. Mr. Carter is a loyal friend of education and for some time served on the school board in his district. He is a member of one fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is an active Republican, and connected with the Baptist church. As a public-spirited citizen, an industrious, thrifty farmer, a good neighbor and a man of high principles, Mr. Carter enjoys the esteem of all who know him.

LOUIS, JORGEN AND PETER ANDERSON. In all the Yakima country there probably cannot be found three more successful, more popular or more contented citizens than the trio whose names commence this sketch. They reside at Horse Heaven postoffice, fourteen miles southwest of Kiona and together cultivate one of the largest farms in central Washington. They are also among the foremost stockmen of that section. All are natives of Denmark and the sons of James and Christina H. (Hansen) Anderson, both of whom were born in 1823. Mrs. Anderson died at the age of fifty-seven, and her husband passed away at the ripe old age of eighty.

Louis Anderson was born April 11, 1852. Having completed his education, he worked at various occupations in Denmark until he was twenty-seven years old, then came to America, first settling in Pennsylvania, where he lived four years. He emigrated to Washington in 1885 and settled upon the homestead which is his present home. He has been engaged in general farming and stock raising since that date. In 1878 Mr. Anderson was united in marriage to Miss Margretta A. Espus, also a native of Denmark, born June 17, 1857. She was educated in the schools of her native land. They have six children: James A., born in Denmark, September 11, 1879; Carl C., in Pennsylvania, March 30, 1882; Minnie C., in Pennsylvania, January 17, 1884, a graduate of the Prosser high school and now mistress of the schools at Horse Heaven; Clara M., on the Yakima homestead, July 18, 1886; Lucile C., on the homestead, December 20, 1888; and Chester L., also born on the homestead, September 11, 1892. Mr. Anderson is a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity, and is a staunch Republican, as are also his brothers. He takes a keen interest in all educational affairs and for the past ten years has served on the school board of his district. May 6, 1903, Mrs. Anderson was appointed postmistress of Horse Heaven postoffice.

Jorgen Anderson's birth occurred February 7, 1856. At the age of seventeen he began learning the carpenter's trade and served a four years' apprenticeship. In 1878 he came to America, settling first in Illinois, where he followed his trade a short time; in the fall he went to California and there followed farming until 1884, when he moved to Washington and filed upon government land in the Horse Heaven region. He lived upon this place until 1898, when he spent a year in Alaska, mining. Thence returning home with renewed devotion to agriculture, he has since given his undivided attention to farming and stock raising.

Peter Anderson, the youngest of the brothers, was born April 23, 1858, and like his brothers received a common school education in Denmark. He remained in the old country, until the spring of 1880, then crossed to Pennsylvania, where he spent three years learning the painter's trade. After a year in Grand Rapids, Michigan, he spent two years in California working at his trade and farming, and in 1886 joined his brothers in Washington, settling upon a homestead near them. However, he soon left the county and engaged in farming near Pomeroy, where he lived eight years, or until 1895, the year in which the Anderson Brothers formed a partnership. He is an Odd Fellow, also.

Anderson Brothers own four thousand four hundred acres of wheat land, all under cultivation, three hundred head of cattle, one hundred head of horses, and forty-five acres of land irrigated by the Kiona canal, one of the best in the state. Forty acres of the irrigated land are in alfalfa and several acres are in orchard. After the county well was dug, the Andersons were the first to get water at a great depth. Their well had to be sunk three hundred and fifty feet through hard rock, but the labor and expense of its excavation were abundantly rewarded, for the water in it is two hundred feet deep. They have several shallow wells on their ranch. To their large interests the brothers give their personal attention with the result that the property is thriving and each season nets them handsome returns on their investment. They are men of energy, integrity and ability, respected by all and possessing a host of warm friends. Such citizens Yakima welcomes to its plains and valleys.

EMERY W. R. TAYLOR, of Prosser, mayor, merchant, and owner of the flouring mills, is one of Yakima county's best known citizens and earliest pioneers, being the youngest son of Honorable George S. Taylor, deceased, whose biography, together with that of his wife, Rebecca (McGlothen) Taylor, who is still living, will be found elsewhere in this work. The subject of this biography was born in Iowa, May 12, 1850, and crossed the Plains with his parents in 1864. After a few months spent in Umatilla county and a longer period near Puget Sound, in 1866 the family settled in the Selah valley, Yakima county, where the family home has since remained. In that frontier region the Taylor boys spent the early years of their lives, assisting their father in raising stock and cultivating the soil. Emery left the parental roof when he attained his majority and filed upon homestead and timber culture claims in the Wenas valley, where he lived seven years. At the age of twenty-eight he moved to Prosser and engaged in manufacturing flour, purchasing the mill at that point. Two years later he opened a general store and during the next few years both enterprises prospered. However, the hard times of the middle nineties affected Prosser, as they did the rest of the country, and, though keeping the mill in operation, Mr. Taylor decided to remove the store to North Yakima. Accordingly, in 1808, it was removed to the larger city and for three years Mr. Taylor conducted it, selling the business in 1901, and returning to Prosser. By this time the new era had dawned on that commercial center and the business prospects being so excellent, he again engaged in the mercantile business with encouraging success from the beginning.

Mr. Taylor and Miss Hannah A. Sutton, a daughter of John and Mary (Kelly) Sutton, were united in marriage in the year 1879, the ceremony taking place in Yakima county. Mrs. Taylor was born in Indiana in 1862, received her education in the schools of her native state and was married at the age of seventeen. Her father was killed by lightning while she was a little girl. Six children bless the Taylor household, all of whom are native sons and daughters of Yakima county. They are named: Pearl, born February 13, 1881; Arthur, 1884; Roy, 1886; Claude, 1889; Edna, 1892, and George S., 1895. Arthur and Roy assist their father in the store. Mr. Taylor has two brothers, Harley and George, living in North Yakima, and one sister, Mrs. Rosa Brooker, also a resident of North Yakima. He is connected with the Odd Fellows fraternity and is an active member of the Democratic party. When Prosser was incorporated in 1890, Mr. Taylor was honored by his townsmen with the highest office in their power to bestow—that of mayor—and served two years, or until he resigned and moved to North Yakima. Upon his return in 1901, he received another token of Prosser's esteem for its favorite son,—a re-election to the mayoralty—and was elected in 1903. Mayor Taylor is still serving with credit to himself, in the administration of public affairs in a thrifty, progressive city, and retains the fullest confidence of his fellow men. Besides his large mercantile establishment, and one of the two flouring mills in Yakima county, Mr. Taylor has other city and county property, all of which receive his careful, untiring management. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are highly esteemed by a host of friends and acquaintances.

LORENZO D. LAPE, proprietor of the Hotel Lape, Prosser, has been identified with the development of Yakima county since the year 1883 and has been a resident of Prosser since 1897, during which time he has taken no unimportant part in the upbuilding of that section of the county. For many years he was one of the largest wheat growers in the Horse Heaven region. He was born in Fayette county, Illinois, 1855, to the union of Henry W. and Lucy (Hazlip) Lape, both of Dutch extraction. Henry W. Lape was born in Ohio, settled in Illinois in 1830 and lived in that state until 1880, when he removed to Kansas and a little later to Missouri; his death at the age of seventy-seven occurring in the latter state. Mrs. Lape was born in Virginia, came to Illinois in 1829 and was married at the age of seventeen; she is now living in Missouri. Lorenzo D. was educated in the public schools of his native state and at the age of twenty-one commenced to farm on his own account. In 1880 he went to Kansas and farmed a year, also conducted a grocery store in Girard a year; then spent six months in the mines of Colorado, visited Gunnison, and in March, 1883, arrived in Pendleton, Oregon, having walked the entire distance between that city and Glenn's Ferry, Idaho. That fall he filed on homestead and timber culture claims in the Horse Heaven wheat region and the following spring returned to the land and began its improvement. Upon this place he made his home until 1897, attaining great success in wheat raising. For some time he cultivated two thousand three hundred acres. However, in the fall of 1897, an accident deprived him of his left foot and influenced him to leave farming and devote himself to a quieter occupation. So he removed to Prosser in the spring of 1898, built the Lape Hotel, leasing it for three years, and then opened a harness shop. In 1902 he sold the shop to C. R. Boney, and in July of the same year took personal charge of his hotel, now known as one of the most comfortable and well managed hostleries in Yakima county.

In Pendleton, 1889, Miss Mary V. Reed, daughter of Philander and Lucinda (Eurit) Reed, became the wife of Mr. Lape. Her parents were both born and reared in West Virginia, and Mrs. Lape was also born in that state, in April, 1865, although she received her education in Kansas. In 1891 the family came to Yakima county, settling in the Horse Heaven country, and there the father died in 1892; Mrs. Reed, who is the mother of eleven children, is living in Prosser. To Mr. and Mrs. Lape two children have been born, both of whom are living: Lena, born August 18, 1890; Loren B., December 23, 1891. Mrs. Lape is a member of the Methodist church, and her husband is affiliated with the Democratic party. Besides his fine hotel property and other Prosser holdings, Mr. Lape owns one hundred and sixty acres of wheat land, all in cultivation. He is an enterprising citizen who has done much toward the upbuilding of his home city and possesses the confidence and esteem of his fellow men.

FRANK H. GLOYD, cashier of the Prosser State Bank, secretary of the Prosser Falls Land and Irrigation Company and president of the Prosser Board of Trade, is one of Yakima county's substantial citizens and a business man of the type which is giving the Yakima country continental prominence. His early ancestors were inhabitants of the British Isles, the Gloyds being Welsh and his mother's people English. The father, Benjamin F. Gloyd, was born in Massachusetts, 1831, and by trade was a mechanic, though he followed farming extensively. In 1852 he took up his residence in Kentucky and there wooed and won a Southern girl, Susan Mason. She came of old Virginia colonist stock, was born in that state and is related to Henry Clay. In Kentucky, also, the subject of this biography was born in the year 1862. From Kentucky the family removed to Illinois. There the father engaged in the mercantile business and the son, Frank, began to acquire his education, attending the common and high schools of that state, besides receiving the benefit of tutoring. His education was finished in Ohio, and in 1881 he joined his parents in Kansas, to which state they had removed from Illinois. The family later decided to seek a home in the Northwest and accordingly, in 1882, crossed the Plains by wagon to the Willamette valley. Subsequently they removed to Puget Sound, where both parents are still living. While in Ohio, however, Frank H. had decided to enter the profession of law and spent some time reading law in the office of a brother of Chief Justice Waite, United States Supreme Court. Upon arriving in his northwestern home, the young man entered the employ of Waters & Thorne, then compiling a set of abstract records for Marion county, Oregon. In the spring of 1883, he engaged in the same kind of work, compiling abstract records of Pierce county, Washington, for E. C. Pentland, owner of the copyright. A few months later the energetic young abstracter bought Pentland's interests, sold a half interest to W. N. Spinning, and, together they conducted the abstract business until 1889, when the Bankers' Title Insurance & Trust Company was organized and absorbed the partnership. The next August the abstract business was consolidated with the Fidelity Trust Company and a new company organized, the Real Estate, Title, Insurance & Abstract Company, absorbing all interests. Mr. Gloyd was president of this company until the fall of 1894. Between the years 1884 and 1894 he also held the position of deputy county auditor of Pierce county, and in the fall of 1894 was elected auditor, serving one term in that capacity. In the spring of 1892 Mr. Gloyd had his first substantial experience in western banking, he and his brother-in-law purchasing a controlling interest that year in the First National Bank of Puyallup. Mr. Gloyd became president of that institution and served until January, 1894. In June, 1897, he entered the service of the land department of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and remained in their service until March, 1902, when he retired to become the cashier and manager of the Prosser State Bank.

Mr. Gloyd and Miss Alida M. Spinning, the daughter of Dr. Charles H. and Mildred D. (Stewart) Spinning, were united in marriage at Pasadena, California, March 25, 1891. Dr. Spinning was born in Indiana and in 1852 crossed the Plains to become one of Oregon's early pioneers, settling near Portland. Mrs. Spinning was a native of Iowa, the daughter of a Congregational minister who came around the Horn to Washington in 1873. While Doctor Spinning was acting as government physician on the Puyallup Indian reservation in 1869, Alida M. was born. She received her education in the schools of Pierce county, at the Annie Wright Seminary, Tacoma, and the State University, Seattle. Her venerable father, who is still practicing his profession in Pierce county at the age of eighty-three years, is an ex-member of the Washington legislature. Mr. and Mrs. Gloyd have two children, both born in Tacoma: Frank Stewart, born November 28, 1895; and Charles Hadley, April 14, 1903. Mr. Gloyd and his wife are devoted members of the Christian church, of which he is an elder. His fraternal connections are limited to one fraternity, the Knights of Pythias; besides which he is a member of the National Union of Insurance. Politically, he is both an active and an influential Republican. His business interests are many and important and the undeviating success he has achieved is a substantial proof of his ability and standing in the business world. Mr. and Mrs. Gloyd are highly esteemed for their congenial and sterling personal qualities by all with whom they are associated.

DAVID M. ANGUS, M. D. Although not among the earliest pioneers of the county, during the twelve years he has resided in the Yakima valley, Doctor Angus has accomplished much toward the upbuilding of his community, has firmly established himself in the hearts of a large army of friends and has met with a goodly success in his endeavors. Born in Scotland, 1856, he is the son of Alexander and Jannett (Bruce) Angus, also natives of the land of Douglas and Scott. The father and mother immigrated to Canada in 1857, came to the United States in 1890, settling in Tacoma, and are now residing in Prosser. During the greater portion of his life Alexander

Angus has followed agricultural pursuits. After finishing his public school education in Canada, David M. Angus taught school three years, and in 1880 and 1881 was a fireman and conductor on one of the Canadian Pacific's construction trains, all this time carefully saving his earnings to satisfy a higher ambition he had in view. The year 1882 witnessed the first step in satisfying this ambition, Mr. Angus, spending a year in the medical department of the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor. In order to complete his course, the young medical student was again obliged to leave college and teach two years in Illinois. The next year he pursued his medical studies at Ann Arbor, and the year following was graduated from a New York medical school, 1886. For a year he served as surgeon in the eastern district Brooklyn hospital, then went west to California, practicing his profession two years in Vallejo. From Vallejo he came north to Tacoma, and lived there until 1892, meeting with excellent success. In 1892, however, he left the Sound to take up his residence in Yakima county, having purchased sixty acres of land in what is now known as the Euclid settlement, so named by Dr. Angus in 1892, his ranch bearing that euphonious country name. He cleared the land of sage-brush, set out a forty-acre orchard, now one of the finest in the Yakima country, and seeded the balance to alfalfa, besides erecting a comfortable dwelling and other farm buildings. Seven years Dr. Angus made this pretty place his home, meanwhile continuing his practice of medicine and surgery and gradually establishing himself in the community. In 1899, he was influenced by the increasing pressure of his professional work and the bright prospects in store for Prosser to remove his home to that little city and since then has resided there. Three years ago he established the Angus Drug Company, one of the best drug stores in the county.

Dr. Angus was united in marriage to Miss Grace Brune, the daughter of Charles H. and Rosario (Romero) Brune, at The Dalles in 1901. She is a native of Klickitat county, born in 1877, and was educated in that county and at The Dalles. Her father was born in Germany and immigrated to America when a young man of twenty years. He settled in Oregon in 1860 and six years later was married to Rosario Romero, the daughter of California pioneers and a native of that state. Mr. Brune died in 1894; Mrs. Brune is living in Grand Dalles, Washington. Mr. Angus is held in high esteem by his fellow citizens, who honored him in 1900 with the mayoralty of Prosser, and found him a capable, progressive official, who did not disappoint them. He is connected with neither of the old line political parties, but is an enthusiastic Socialist. Fraternally, he is connected with the Masons, Independent Order of Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. Besides his drug store business, he owns considerable other city property and land. Dr. and Mrs. Angus are prominent and influential in their community and popular with all classes.

HERBERT J. JENKS, extensive land proprietor, dealer in real estate and representative of several insurance companies, is one of Prosser's earliest pioneers, as well as one of its successful business men at present. A native of Maine, born January 14, 1857, he is the descendant of two of the oldest families of the Pine Tree state. His father, Joshua E., was born there in 1834, a descendant of a well-known family, and the sixty-five years of his life were spent within its boundaries. He was engaged in the hotel business. Three times he made an effort to get into the Union army, but each time physical disabilities prevented him. Maria (Jordon) Jenks was born in 1836. Her father was an old East India sea captain whose ship and crew were lost on the Atlantic in 1849. The Jordons have lived in Maine for more than two hundred years. After receiving an education in his native state, including attendance at high school, in 1876 the young man, Herbert J. Jenks, went west to St. Louis, Missouri. When the mining excitement connected with the Black Hills discovery reached St. Louis, in the spring of 1877, he started for the mines, but gave up this ambition to work for the government, driving teams to various forts in Wyoming and Montana. He subsequently visited the upper Yellowstone valley, spent five years farming and logging near Miles City, Montana, then two years in hunting the buffalo, and in 1883 came to Washington, first visiting Walla Walla and later coming to Prosser. He filed upon a homestead and a timber culture claim near Prosser, and, while engaged in their development, located other homeseekers and entered the stock business. In 1884 he opened the first livery barn to be started in Prosser and successfully conducted it four years. He then sold it and spent a year in North Yakima. He returned with a band of cattle and was engaged in farming and stock raising until 1898, when he went to the Klondike mines for a season, returning with more experience than gold. One year since then, in 1901, he was away from his home in Prosser, and during that time he was in California.

In 1884, Mr. Jenks was married in Prosser, to Miss Emma C. Badger, daughter of William M. Badger, of North Yakima. Mr. Badger was an Ohio farmer until 1876, when he went to California and later came to Yakima county. Mrs. Jenks was born in Ohio, 1865, was educated in Ohio and Oregon, and married at the age of nineteen. Two children resulted from this union, both of whom are still living: William C., born in Prosser, October 9, 1885, and Ina B., born in North Yakima, November 25, 1888. The loving wife and mother succumbed to disease in January, 1897. In 1899, Mr. Jenks was again married, his second bride being Miss Jessie Woollicroft, daughter of Jesse and Jennie A. (Mills) Woollicroft, of Prosser. Her father was born in England; her mother in Wisconsin, where, also, Mrs. Jenks was born in 1879. Mr. Woollicroft is a prosperous Yakima county farmer. To this second marriage one child has been born, Herbert J., Jr., born in Prosser, March 28, 1901. Mr. Jenks is fraternally affiliated with the Odd Fellows, Rebekahs, Modern Woodmen and the Royal Neighbors; politically, he is an ardent Republican and a zealous admirer of President Roosevelt. He is a citizen who holds the confidence of his fellowmen, as shown by the number of his friends and the fact that he has served as councilman. His most valuable property is a holding of two hundred acres of land, irrigated by the Sunnyside canal.

JAMES B. CLEMENTS, one of the prominent stockmen of Yakima county, Washington, resides in Kennewick. His ranch, which embraces five hundred acres, is located about seven miles west of the town, at the mouth of the Yakima river. He is a native of the Blue Grass state, born in 1859, the son of Raymond and Sarah (Phillips) Clements. His father was likewise a farmer by occupation, and a native of Kentucky. He was born in 1834, and died in 1893, in the month of May. His mother, who is still living in the Blue Grass state, was also born in that state, in 1842. Her son received his education in the public schools of his native state, and until he was nineteen years old, worked for his father on the home place. He spent the next three years in the southern part of Kentucky, working for various farmers; the following year was spent in farming on his own account. He then removed to Chicago, and was employed by N. K. Fairbank & Company, in their factory, for a period of two years. In April, 1885, he removed to Nebraska and remained in that state until 1888; during this time he was principally engaged in farming, but a part of the time worked in other lines of employment. Early in the spring of 1889 he migrated to the town of Prosser, Washington, and was in the employ of the old ditch company for nearly four years. At the expiration of that period he bought his present ranch at the mouth of the Yakima river, and has since made it his home. He farms and engages in the stock business. Two hundred and fifty acres of his farm is in cultivation. He has raised horses principally; in 1895 he shipped two carloads to eastern markets, in 1896 a like number, and the following year succeeded in making a shipment of three carloads, for which good prices were obtained in the eastern market.

In North Yakima, Washington, on the 8th of June, 1892, he was united in marriage with Mrs. Julia Bower. She is the daughter of Frank and Caroline (Kraft) Schuneman; her father is a native born German, and a blacksmith by trade. He came to the United States when a young man, and located in Illinois, where he was later married. He migrated to the Golden state in 1861, reaching there via the Isthmus of Panama, and following his trade for sometime, also conducting a hotel in Oakland for some months. He next moved to Arizona, resided there a year, and again returned to California. In 1879 he went north to Washington, located in Ainsworth, and for a space of two years worked at his trade of smithing. He took up a homestead three miles west of Pasco, in 1882, and later bought one hundred acres of railroad land near-by. He now resides in Pasco. His wife, who was also of German birth, came to this country with her parents when three years old, and was raised within twenty-five miles of the metropolis, Chicago. She married at the age of nineteen and died in Pasco, Washington, February 25, 1904. Her daughter Julia was a California girl, born in 1867, and was educated first in the schools of the Golden state, later attending the Washington schools; her parents moved to the latter state when she was thirteen years old. She was first married to G. W. Bower, who came to the state in 1880, and died ten years later, leaving two children, Cora and Georgia A. Bower. They were both born in Kennewick; Cora on July 6, 1886, and Georgia four years later, on the 8th of August. The mother has five brothers living in Washington: William, Henry, Albert, Fred and Adolph L. Schuneman. The three last named reside in Pasco. She also has a brother, Frank, living in California. Mr. and Mrs. Clements have four children, of whom Elsie, born in Kennewick, April 4, 1893, is the eldest. Blanche was also born in Kennewick, January 10, 1896, and Elda M., in Franklin county, Washington, July 3, 1898. The youngest child, Wesley J. Clements, was born in Kennewick, March 29, 1902. Mr. Clements is a Mason, and also belongs to the Knights of Pythias. He is a member of the Presbyterian church, an active Democrat in politics, and a school director at present. He has an orchard on his land, and owns over a hundred head of cattle. He is an exceedingly pleasant gentleman, successful in his business, and a popular citizen.

SOLOMON M. WEBBER. It was the privilege of the honored pioneer whose biography is here-with given to become the first permanent white farmer upon the extensive Horse Heaven plains and to first demonstrate the peculiar adaptability of that erstwhile bunch-grass region for the production of wheat. Solomon M. Webber was born in Franklin county, Indiana, March 18, 1827. His parents were Nicholas and Polly (Marlow) Webber, of Dutch and English descent respectively. Nicholas Webber was a native of New York state, who settled very early in the century in Indiana. There he was married and lived until 1832, when he went northward into Michigan Territory and became an early pioneer of that commonwealth. He lived to the unusual age of ninety-three, dying in Michigan. Mrs. Webber, the mother, was a native of Virginia, reared in Kentucky; she was in her ninetieth year at the time of her death in Michigan. Solomon M. attended school and worked on the farm until he was nineteen years old, then learned the carpenter's trade and followed it until he was twenty-three. In the spring of 1852 the young Hoosier started across the continent to California. He spent the winter at Salt Lake, completing the journey in the following spring and summer. Three years he followed mining in the Golden state; then farmed four years, after which he was engaged in various pursuits in Marysville until 1859, at that time going to Nevada. In that state he lived until 1880, when he started overland with twelve mules and three wagons to found a home in the Northwest. Two years he stopped at Weston, Oregon, and from there visited the Horse Heaven region, locating a ranch. He filed upon the land in April, 1882, but did not begin its cultivation until the summer of 1883. Then he and William Badge, who came to the country with Mr. Webber, commenced farming, Mr. Webber turning the first furrow on the Plains and breaking one hundred acres of sod. In the fall he sowed forty acres to wheat, but did not harvest the crop for the reason that he harrowed it so thoroughly it ran together when the rains came on, and the wheat could not break through the crust that formed. They lived in a tent in 1884. In December of that year they underwent great hardships in a blizzard while making a trip to Wallula. They had reached the river when the storm struck them, the river freezing over in a short time. They could not get across to get feed, which was in plain view, and their teams suffered greatly. They witnessed the destruction of some one thousand eight hundred dollars worth of horses before the storm subsided, being held there for some six weeks. The deep snow prevented their return home, and, but for the fact that parties at the river had just laid in a goodly supply of flour, they would certainly have perished. At the end of the six weeks the storm broke under the influence of a chinook, and they started across the river, through the broken ice, like "Washington Crossing the Delaware," and were only saved from going over the falls by a fortunate gorge of ice at an opportune moment. Mr. Webber continued to farm successfully upon his place until 1897, selling his property at that time, and making an extended trip to other parts. Returning to Yakima county in 1899, he acquired his present farm, seven miles south of Kiona, and since then has followed agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Webber was married in North Yakima, 1893, to Ellen Lea, a daughter of William and Mary (Wolsoncroft) Lea, natives of England. Both parents lived and died in the old country, after rearing a family of sixteen children. By trade, the father was a carpenter. Mrs. Webber was born in Manchester, England, 1853, and was educated in the common schools of her native land. In October, 1889, she came to Portland, Oregon, which was her home for two years and a half, or until April, 1892, when she came to Yakima county. She has two brothers, William and Charles H., living in Portland and Providence, Rhode Island, respectively, and two sisters in England, Mrs. Elizabeth McKee and Mrs. Sarah A. Turner. Mr. and Mrs. Webber were the parents of one child, Ruth, born in Yakima county, March 10, 1894. By a former marriage Mr. Webber is the father of the following children: Mrs. Mary R. Lea (deceased), born in Michigan, October 1, 1850; Charles M., California, January 5, 1854; Mrs. Sarah J. Getchell, California, October 25, 1856, deceased; John V., California, January 21, 1859; Robert E., California, November 8, 1861, deceased; Tenia, California, November 19, 1862, deceased; Francis E., California, December 21, 1865; Minnie B., California, December 8, 1868; William H., Nevada, August 10, 1871, and Walter G. (deceased), Nevada, May 26, 1876. Mr. Webber is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Modern Woodmen of America, and the Order of Washington, and both himself and wife are members of the Methodist church. He is a Republican, and served as assistant assessor of Yakima county from 1888 to 1892; at present he is road overseer for his district. Mr. Webber owns a quarter section of well-improved farming land, all in cultivation. He has labored faithfully and successfully for the upbuilding of his county, has endured all the hardships and vicissitudes common to pioneer life in the West, and now, in the winter of a long, useful life, enjoys the good-will and esteem of all around him.

CHARLES TOMPKINS. No tongue can be too eloquent, no pen too powerful, in paying homage to America's heroic frontiersmen; their monument has been in course of construction for at least three centuries, and when the massive work is finished, for it is yet hardly begun, it will be the noblest, grandest, and, it is to be hoped, the most enduring erected by any race in any age of the world's recorded history—the United States of America in its most perfect development. This biography deals with the history of one of these

doughty families of pioneers which has participated in the conquest of the West. John G. Tompkins, the father of Charles, was born in New Jersey in the year 1824, of the Dutch stock that settled New York. As a youth, he shipped aboard a trading vessel and served three years before the mast. Then, in 1838, he enlisted in the Texas navy, one of America's unique creations, and remained under the Lone Star flag three months. Following this adventure he settled in Galveston, entering business, and was there united in marriage in 1846 with Mary L. Woodruff, a native of Tennessee. Her American ancestors were colonizers of Virginia (members of a King James colony of the seventeenth century), and in a very early day became settlers on the Tennessee frontier. In 1830 they united their fortunes with those of Stephen F. Austin Colley and accepted the invitation extended by the inhabitants of that Mexican province to join their numbers, settling on the Colorado river. Later they fought in the struggles waged by Texas for its independence, and engaged in the battle of San Jacinto, April 21, 1836. After a residence of ten years in California, to which state they immigrated by ox team conveyance in 1870, the parents of Charles took up their abode in the Arizona Salt river valley, and there lived until their deaths, that of the father occurring in 1890, and of the mother in 1892. Charles Tompkins' education was obtained in Texas, where he was born, March 10, 1849. At an early age he began riding the range for his father, driving cattle as far north as Iowa and Kansas. In 1870, he took a band to California, the journey occupying six months, and remained there until 1873. He repeated the trip in 1874, and lived in California during the succeeding six years, coming to the Walla Walla valley in 1880. In Washington he was employed by the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company in its bridge department six months, then spent eight months at the carpenter trade in Portland, worked a year for the Northern Pacific Company in Montana, and in 1883 returned to Walla Walla. The next year he settled upon a homestead in the wheat belt, then Yakima's frontier settlement, and there has since made his home, successfully engaged in general farming and wheat raising. He has three sisters, Mrs. Emma Alexander, Mrs. Martha Beard, both of whom live in California, and Mrs. Mary M. Burnett, living in Arizona, her husband being a cousin of the first president of Texas, David G. Burnett. He also has three brothers: John H., George E. and Joseph, cattle raisers and farmers in Arizona. Mr. Tompkins is very prominent in Independent Order of Odd Fellows' circles, and has occupied the high position of past grand and representative to the grand lodge. He is a Democrat and an active worker for his party's interests. Mr. Tompkins is general superintendent and treasurer of the artesian well enterprise on the Horse Heaven region, and owns eight shares of the stock. For several years he has served his community as road supervisor, and in that capacity doing much to benefit road conditions in that region. His homestead, one hundred and sixty acres, is all under cultivation, and upon it he has a very comfortable home and other improvements. Mr. Tompkins possesses the fullest confidence of his fellow pioneers, and is industriously and sincerely engaged in contributing his mite toward the gigantic work of nation building, seeking to leave the impress of his handiwork upon the great monument.

JOHN VICTOR RYDHOLM, one of the most successful and prosperous farmers in the Horse Heaven region, south of Prosser, is a native of Sweden, who crossed the Atlantic in 1869, and took up his abode in Yakima county in 1884, thus entitling him to the distinction of being a pioneer of the Yakima country. His birth occurred in the year 1851, brightening the little rural home of Peter Magnus Anderson and Anna Stine (Stana) Anderson, whose forefathers for innumerable generations were inhabitants of Sweden. John Victor spent his early years as do most farmers' sons—working with their father upon the farm and attending the district school, perhaps higher institutions of instruction. When he was seventeen, the young farmer suffered two irreparable losses, both his father and mother dying about the same time. However, with brave heart and strong hopes, he bade farewell to Sweden and the old home and set out to seek his fortunes across the sea in the great American republic. Arriving in Illinois early in the summer of 1869, he commenced farming, spending the first four years in that state. Then he went to South Dakota, was there a year, and in the spring of 1874 settled on a pre-emption claim in Sedgewick county, Kansas, where he lived five years. Three years in Illinois followed; then, in the spring of 1883, he came west to Pendleton, Oregon. Late in the fall he filed a homestead claim to a desirable quarter section in the Horse Heaven region, Yakima county, and the next spring moved upon it and began its improvement. For a number of years the dauntless pioneer labored each fall in the harvest fields of Umatilla county, in order to support himself while developing his farm, but in 1893 he was able to take up his permanent residence on the place and devote his whole energies to cultivating it. He has placed a hundred acres of it under cultivation, sunk a well, which furnishes an abundance of water (a matter of great importance, when it is considered that for seven years he was obliged to haul this precious fluid to the place), and acquired possession of a large amount of pasturage and a goodly band of horses, all of which speaks well for his thrift and abilities. His total land possessions now comprise four hundred and ninety acres, one hundred of which, as stated, are in cultivation, and much more available for that purpose, besides owning about forty head of horses and small stock. Mr. Rydholm has two sisters and one brother dead, Mrs. Britta Johnson, Sophia and Nils, and four brothers and sisters living: Frederick, in Sweden; Gustavus, in Nebraska; Mrs. Louisa Nelson, in Sweden, and Mrs. Caroline Young, in Illinois. He is a consistent member of the Lutheran church, and a man of high principles. He is a Republican. As road overseer he has faithfully served his district, and in all other matters pertaining to the upbuilding of the community Mr. Rydholm is actively interested; he is one of the county's substantial citizens.

HENRY WASHINGTON CREASON. The esteemed pioneer citizen of Prosser whose name stands at the head of this biography has been prominently identified with the history of Yakima county, particularly with the history of Prosser, for the past twenty years, and is favorably known from one end of the county to the other. California is the birthplace of this pioneer of the Pacific coast, that memorable event in his life occurring January 10, 1855. His parents, Andrew and Elsie (Bernett) Creason, came from the middle western states, his father from Missouri and his mother from Tennessee. They were married in Missouri, and in 1852 made the daring, tedious journey across hill, plain and mountain to the Golden state. There the old pioneer is still living upon his farm: his companion and wife through all the hardships of pioneer life died in 1878. The son, Henry, remained at home on the farm until he reached the age of seventeen, at which time he and N. B. Firebaugh engaged in sheep raising until 1876. Two years of wheat raising followed, succeeded by his opening a blacksmith shop in Stanislaus county, where he remained until the spring of 1883. In July of that year he came to the Horse Heaven region, Washington, filed upon government land, lived there a year, then abandoned it and erected the first blacksmith shop opened in Prosser. In 1880 he filed a homestead claim to a quarter section of land adjoining the town site of Prosser, and upon this place he is living at present, having removed thereto in 1900, after the sale of his blacksmith shop. Noting the opportunity offered for the establishment of a coal and wood yard, in October, 1902, he established the one which he is successfully conducting at present. He built the better part of Prosser's sidewalks, and is now completing a modern two-story brick building for the Odd Fellows.

May 5, 1875, marks the date of the marriage uniting Mr. Creason and Miss Ada Maxon, daughter of Darwin and Hanna (Clark) Maxon, of California, for life's journey, the ceremony taking place in the state mentioned. Darwin Maxon, now deceased, was a native of New York, who settled in Wisconsin in an early day, and in 1873 came to California, and there engaged in farming until his death. His wife was also a native of New York, of French parentage. She died in 1876. Their daughter, Ada, was born in Wisconsin, educated in that state, and married at the age of twenty. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Creason are: Green D., born in California, February 29, 1876, living in Prosser; Mrs. Martha A. Forsyth, born in California, August, 1877, also of Prosser; Mabel, born in California in 1881, died at the age of three; Cassius P., the first white child born in Prosser, his birth occurring in November, 1884; Fred, born in California, October 31, 1887, and Harry, born in Prosser, 1892. The father holds membership in two fraternities, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is a past grand, and the Modern Woodmen of America. For many years he has served on the Prosser school board. In the political affairs of Yakima county he has taken a leading part as a Democrat. He was appointed a county commissioner in 1886, to fill a vacancy, and so well did he fill the position that he was elected to serve two years longer. At the succeeding election a tie vote resulted between Mr. Creason and Joseph Brown. The result was decided by lot, Mr. Brown being the fortunate contestant. Upon the removal of Mayor Taylor to North Yakima in 1898 Mr. Creason completed the term as mayor of Prosser, and was afterward elected by his fellow townsmen to occupy that important office for two years longer, which he did with credit to himself. During this time he was engaged in conducting the Riverside hotel. As a courageous pioneer, a progressive, public-spirited citizen, a faithful officer and a man of integrity and charitable spirit, Mr. Creason commands the good-will of all who know him.

EZRA KEMP, stockman, land owner, warehouse proprietor and mill man, residing in the city of Prosser, is a successful and widely known citizen of the lower Yakima valley. An Englishman by birth and descent, born in 1856, to the marriage of William and Emily (Smith) Kemp, who spent their entire lives in England, he came to America at the age of seventeen, equipped with a fair education and the laudable ambition to make the most of his opportunities. His first work was in a shoe factory in LaFayette, New Jersey, where he was employed two years and one-half; he then worked for a short time in an iron mine, and in 1876 went to California via the Isthmus of Panama. In that state he was employed successively in a shoe factory, on a street car system, advance agent for a theatrical company, and in various other occupations which took him all over the state. He remained in California until 1882, when he came to the Northwest, settling upon a homestead and timber culture claim six miles from Prosser. He there made his home until 1899, and engaged in farming and stock raising. In the year mentioned he purchased a warehouse in Prosser and also an interest in the Prosser flouring mills, removing his family to the city the following year.

In Michigan, in 1897, he was united in marriage to Miss Frances Kenney. She is a native of that state, born in 1859, and there educated and reared to womanhood. Her father and mother, Laura, were also born in the Wolverine state; Mrs. Kenney is living in the country several miles south of Prosser. To Mr. and Mrs. Kemp two children have been born: Edmund W., in Prosser, September 17, 1899, and Fred, in Prosser, October 21, 1902; both are living. Mr. Kemp is an active fraternity man, a member of the Odd Fellows and past grand of Prosser lodge, No. 154. His political sympathies are with the Republican party, of which he is an active member. Mr. Kemp owns, besides the warehouse and an interest in the flouring mills heretofore mentioned, a comfortable city home, three thousand five hundred acres of land in the Horse Heaven country, one thousand two hundred sheep, and various other small interests, to all of which he gives his personal attention. He is still making the most of the opportunities which surround him, and is considered a keen business man, straightforward and aggressive. He is now serving in his second term as a member of the city council. As a citizen, he is interested in all that pertains to the public welfare, and is an influential man in the community.

ALEXANDER G. McNEILL, Prosser's popular councilman and business man, is a Yakima county pioneer as well, having arrived in the Yakima valley in the year 1879. For many years he was engaged in riding the range for leading stockmen of central Washington, but subsequently left their employ to become one of their number. He has been familiar with Prosser's history from the time it was established. Of Scotch descent, his parents being Lachlan and Katie (McGibberry) McNeill, Alexander G. McNeill was born in Illinois, 1859. The elder McNeill came to La Salle county, Illinois, at an early period in its history, and still resides in his old homestead at the age of seventy-one. Mrs. McNeill crossed the Atlantic when four years of age, and was married in Illinois. At an early age the subject of this biography began to do for himself, and in 1877 went to California where he lived a short time before going to Oregon. In the Webfoot state he commenced riding the range, and was subsequently employed in that work in Yakima and Klickitat counties, by Snipes & Allen, J. B. Huntington and H. A. South. The year 1884 witnessed his entrance into the stock business as an owner, his home being near the mouth of the Yakima river until the fall of 1897, when he removed to Prosser. A year later he sold his stock, purchased a livery stable in Prosser, and was engaged in that business until the spring of 1903. At that time he sold this property and opened a real estate, loan and insurance office, in which work he has since been successfully engaged.

Miss Amy South, a daughter of Hutcheson A. and Maria (Graham) South, became the bride of Mr. McNeill in Walla Walla, in 1883. Her father was born in Illinois, crossed the Plains by ox teams in 1852, and settled in the Willamette valley, Oregon, where he lived until 1865, in that year coming to Washington territory and settling in Klickitat county. He was engaged in the stock business in central Washington until his death in Prosser in 1902. Maria (Graham) South, her mother, was born in Pennsylvania and crossed the Plains in 1853, thus becoming one of the brave pioneer women of the Northwest. Mrs. McNeill was born in California in 1861, but was reared and educated in Oregon and Washington. She has one brother, William W. South, who lives in Nez Perce, Idaho. The McNeill home has four children: Katie L., born April 22, 1884, who is a graduate of the Prosser schools and of the Walla Walla high school, and is now teaching near Prosser; Allen G., born May 25, 1889; Fred L., September 3, 1891, and Kenneth, February 21, 1901; all born in Yakima county. Mr. McNeill is an active member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, of which he is the past grand of the Prosser lodge, and in 1901 represented his lodge in Spokane. Mrs. McNeill and daughter are members of the Episcopal church. In political affairs, Mr. McNeill takes a deep interest, his influence being with the Democratic party. For three years he has served Prosser as school director, was the city's first marshal, is now a deputy sheriff under Sheriff Grant, and has been a member of the city council since its organization. From this it will be seen that Mr. McNeill has the highest confidence of his fellow citizens, is public-spirited and is considered an able man by his community. Both he and his wife are highly esteemed as loyal friends and good neighbors.

JAMES W. CAREY, the genial, wide-awake manager of Coffin Brothers' general store in Prosser, has been closely identified with Prosser's history for the past thirteen years and is one of that city's foremost citizens. He has been a resident of Washington since 1891, when he accepted a position as clerk in the superintendent's office of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, in Ellensburg. Six months later he was placed in charge of the station at Prosser and faithfully served the company and the general public in that capacity for twelve and one-half years. He left that important place to assume the management of the store referred to, the change taking place in March, 1903. Mr. Carey is one of Wisconsin's native sons, born January 29, 1861. His parents were natives of Ireland, who came to the United States when quite young. Michael Carey, his father, settled in Janesville, Wisconsin, where he met and married Margaret Crowley. He was engaged in agricultural pursuits in Wisconsin until his death in 1900. Mrs. Carey is still living. Until he reached his majority, James attended school and worked upon the farm. He chose telegraphy and railroad work as the occupation to which he would devote himself, and accordingly, at the age of twenty-one, entered a telegraph office. Six months later he was appointed to take charge of the station at Antigo, Wisconsin, on the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Railroad, now the Northwestern. Three years passed and he then went to Woodstock, Illinois, for the Northwestern Company. He there spent a year, thence going to work for the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway in Iowa. In 1886 he returned to Wisconsin and assumed charge of the station at Manitowoc for the Milwaukee, Lake Shore and Western Company, remaining in that town five years. From Manitowoc he came to Ellensburg and thence to Prosser.

While residing in Iowa, in 1885, Mr. Carey wooed and won as his bride Miss Sarah Halron, daughter of Thomas and Mary Halron, natives of Ireland, who came to this country half a century ago and settled in Wisconsin, the father being a youth at the time of his immigration. He was a pioneer farmer of that state. Sarah Halron was born in Wisconsin in 1864, was educated in the schools of her native state and previous to her marriage at the age of twenty-one, taught several terms of school. Mr. and Mrs. Carey have three children living, Bessie, born in 1886; Harold, born in 1887, and Ruth, in 1890. Another child, James, is dead. Both husband and wife are zealous members of the Catholic denomination. Mr. Carey is a loyal friend of education and for ten years has served his community as school director. His political opinions are in accord with those of the Republican party, in which he is an active worker. He owns a valuable twenty-five acre tract of land, all in cultivation and irrigated, and a small band of cattle and horses, besides minor property interests, including stock in mines of the Gold Hill district. Mr. and Mrs. Carey are held in high regard by a wide circle of friends and acquaintances, and, by his sterling qualities and industry, Mr. Carey has attained to an important position among his fellow citizens of Yakima county.

WILLIAM R. KAYS, stockman, living eighteen miles southeast of Prosser, is a successful sheep raiser of Yakima county. He is also a pioneer of Oregon, having been born in Marion county in the year 1858 to William and Elizabeth (Tate) Kays. These hardy pioneers crossed the Plains in the early fifties, the date of the father's journey being 1852. He was born in Illinois in 1834. The family settled upon Howell's prairie, Marion county, where William Kays, senior, filed upon government land and lived until recent years. He now resides at Prosser, though still retaining the old homestead. Elizabeth Tate was a native of Missouri; she died in 1891 at the age of sixty. The subject of this sketch spent his early life farming and raising stock with his father, but at the age of twenty-one entered the sheep business in his own behalf. In 1886 he crossed the Columbia into Washington, since which time he has been successfully engaged in ranging sheep in the Prosser country.

He was married in 1878 to Miss Olive Price, the daughter of early pioneers of Oregon, where she was born and reared. Mrs. Kays laid down the burdens of life in 1888, leaving her husband and two children to mourn the loss of a devoted wife and mother. The daughter, Mrs. Lavelle Coleman, wife of Calvin Coleman, resides at Bickleton; the son Eton lives at home with his father. Politically, Mr. Kays is an ardent champion of Democratic principles and an energetic worker in their behalf. He owns two thousand one hundred ewes in prime condition, and his thorough knowledge of the sheep business has made him highly successful in that industry. The range in his community is still excellent and he considers that when the land is placed under water it will produce crops equal to those produced anywhere in the Yakima country. As a hardy pioneer of the Northwest who has witnessed and been a factor in its marvelous development, a pioneer sheep raiser of the Yakima country and a citizen of good standing among his neighbors, Mr. Kays is well known by the residents of Yakima and Klickitat counties.

GEORGE L. FINN, connected with Rich's mercantile establishment in Prosser and a pioneer citizen of that city, is a native of Jackson, Iowa, born August 21, 1861, to the union of Frederick and Elizabeth (Heinzerling) Finn. Frederick Finn was born in Germany, immigrated to the United States in 1851, and, after a short residence in Philadelphia, removed to Iowa, settling first in Belleview. A year later he removed to Otter creek, Jackson county, conducted a general store at that point five years, then moved to Iowa Falls and for eight years was engaged in the hotel business. Selling this business, he went to Hardin county, engaged in farming ten years, and subsequently entered the real estate business in Radcliffe, where he is still living. Mrs. Finn was born in Pennsylvania and is of German descent. George L. Finn received his education in the common schools of Iowa, leaving school when fourteen years old to work with his father. When he reached the age of twenty he formed a partnership with his father and during the next eight years they cultivated a farm of one hundred and sixty acres. The younger Finn then sold his interest to his father and came to Washington, settling in Prosser in the spring of 1888. In November following, he commenced to work in the Prosser flouring mills and was so employed until the succeeding spring. A year of range riding and two years of railroad work in the employ of N. Rich occupied the next three years; then a summer on the Sound; thence back to Yakima county and again in the employ of Mr. Rich until the spring of 1892. At that time Mr. Finn erected a livery barn in Prosser and conducted it for four years, finally selling the stock and renting the building. The next three years were spent in raising sheep, since which time he has been in the employ of Nelson Rich in the latter's store in Prosser. Mr. Finn has three brothers: William, living near Prosser; Charles and Frank, both in Iowa; also two sisters, Mrs. Ida Waterman and Miss Clara Finn, both of whom are residents of Iowa. Adjoining the town site of Prosser Mr. Finn has a homestead, nearly all of which is yet in an uncultivated condition, besides which he owns considerable city property. He is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and in that fraternity has attained the position of past grand. Politically, he is an active and staunch Republican. Mr. Finn has the confidence and respect of all who know him and is ever aggressive in matters concerning the welfare of his home city.

JOSEPH PONTI, ex-councilman and prominent citizen of Prosser, is a native of sunny Italy, born in that far away land in 1866. His parents, John and Carlina (Tolini) Ponti, were born in that country in 1829 and 1837 respectively, and are still living there, his father being a prosperous farmer. Joseph is one of eight children and was given the advantage of a good common school education. When fourteen years old he was apprenticed to a weaver and spent three years at his trade. A journey through France and other European countries, lasting three years, followed, after which he lived at home one year. In 1888 he emigrated from Italy, coming to the United States. A ten months' experience in the woolen mills of San Francisco, a year at cooking and a few months of railroad work near Puget Sound succeeded each other in the order named. He then, in the fall of 1890, came to Prosser and settled upon a homestead, the land to be irrigated by the proposed Sunnyside canal. He made his home on this place for five years, though engaged in other occupations than farming during this time. In 1892 he and another young man opened a liquor store in Prosser. Subsequently Mr. Ponti purchased his partner's interest and is now conducting the business alone.

In Prosser, in 1895, he was united in marriage to Mrs. Lavina Shatuck, daughter of Andrew and Margaret (Wikley) Tustin. Mr. Tustin was a native of Virginia and a veteran of the Civil war, in which he was seriously crippled, and also a pioneer of the Glade settlement, Yakima county, where he came in 1884. He died in Prosser. Mrs. Tustin is still living. Mrs. Ponti was born in Virginia, but reared to womanhood in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Ponti have five children; Rena, Stella, Martin J., Amelia and Norma, ranging in age from three to nine years, all natives of Prosser. Both Mr. and Mrs. Ponti are devout members of the Catholic church. He is a prominent Republican and has served his party as chairman of his election district. Mr. Ponti was elected as a member of Prosser's first council and re-elected for another term, thus demonstrating his popularity in the community. Besides his business in Prosser, he owns one hundred and twenty acres of valuable land irrigated by the Sunnyside canal, one of the most comfortable homes in Prosser and a large amount of mining stock.

CHARLES T. RITCHIE. One of the pioneer farmers of the Horse Heaven region lying east of Prosser, one of the first to demonstrate the special adaptability of that region for the raising of wheat, and one of the most extensive wheat growers in that section today, is the subject of this biography. Though making his home in Prosser, he gives his vast farming interests his personal management and is a business man of ability. Of Scotch stock, Mr. Ritchie is a native of Ohio, born in 1849, his parents being Thomas and Carrie (Tidd) Ritchie. His father was also born in Ohio, immigrated to Iowa in 1851, pursued his occupation as a farmer in that state eight years and then went to Colorado, where he was drowned. The mother was born in Pennsylvania to Scotch parents and was married in Ohio. She, also, is dead. Charles T. spent his youth in Ohio and Iowa, and at the age of twelve boldly set out to make his own way in the world. He went to Dakota Territory and secured work, driving a stage for C. K. Howard, for whom he drove five years. He then owned the line himself, for a time, subsequently sold a half interest to Mr. Howard and two years later sold him the remaining interest, leaving the stage business for the life of a farmer. In 1878 he sold his place and with six mules and two wagons made the journey from Dakota to the Walla Walla valley. For the next few years he followed freighting and railroad work in the Inland Empire, assisting in the construction of the Northern Pacific into Spokane. In 1883 Mr. Ritchie purchased a section of land in the Horse Heaven region, filed a timber culture claim to a quarter section in that neighborhood and engaged in raising wheat and stock. He sold his horses in 1890, taking land in payment for some and shipping a carload to St. Louis. Since that time he has given his attention exclusively to the raising of wheat. Last year he had six hundred acres devoted to this grain and expects to have the same acreage devoted to wheat in 1904. In order that his family might enjoy better advantages, Mr. Ritchie removed to Prosser last October and is now established in a very comfortable home in that progressive little city.

He was married in Dakota, 1873, to Miss Jennie Martin, who departed this life in September, 1890, being the mother of two children, Charles H. and Louise. Mr. Ritchie was married a second time in 1898, in Portland, his bride being Jennie Applegate, the widow of Owen H. Applegate. She is the daughter of Garret and Alice (Davenport) Smith, natives of Ohio and Kentucky respectively. Her father was a pioneer of Iowa and immigrated to Washington in 1886, residing in the Palouse region until his death. Mrs. Ritchie was born in Illinois in 1858, was educated in the common schools of Iowa and there married Owen H. Applegate. Two children resulted from this union, Clarence L., born June 25, 1880, living in Denver, and Aita A. Applegate, born in Kansas, February 12, 1884. Both Charles H. and Louise Ritchie are dead, the former dying in 1896 at the age of twenty, the latter at the age of eleven months, her birthday having been April 27, 1874. Charles H. was born in Dakota, April 1, 1876. Mr. Ritchie is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias and is an active Republican. He takes a deep interest in all matters pertaining to education and has been clerk of his district for twelve years. He has one thousand one hundred acres of land in the Horse Heaven region, all being in cultivation, and upon this place has a considerable number of horses, cattle and thoroughbred hogs. He is a man of influence, who has made a success of whatever he has undertaken, and as a citizen of ability and high principles is respected and esteemed.

EDWARD J. WARD, of the Prosser business firm, Ward & McFarland, is a native of Marion county, Oregon, born in 1872, his parents being Michael and Mary (Moran) Ward. Michael Ward came to New York from Ireland when ten years old. In 1857, after his marriage to Mary Moran, he rounded Cape Horn and settled in California for a short time, going thence to Marion county, where he lived twenty-six years. The fall of 1882 witnessed his removal to Yakima county. He settled upon an eighty acre homestead three miles west of Prosser and for twenty years cultivated its soil and raised stock. He is living at present in Argyle, on Puget Sound. Mary (Moran) Ward was born in Pennsylvania to Irish parents and was eighteen years old when she married. Of the twelve children born to this union, the subject of this biography is one. He attended the common schools of Oregon and was later a student at St. James College, near Vancouver, Washington. Early in life he began riding the range and was so engaged until he reached the age of twenty-one. He then worked three years in the New Castle coal mines of King county, thence came to Prosser and became a clerk in D. S. Sprinkle's general store and in 1898 opened a meat market in the city. The next year he engaged in the liquor business in the Lape hotel, conducting the business two years. A year in handling hay for shipment followed, but in 1902, he and his partner, McFarland, opened a new liquor store in Prosser, in which business Mr. Ward is still engaged. He has two brothers, Frank W. and Emmett, both living on the Sound.

Miss Charlotte Lyon, of Prosser, became his bride in 1897. Her parents, Henry and Margaret Lyon, came to Washington from the Middle West in 1882, settling in Klickitat county. They became residents of Prosser in 1901 and there Mr. Lyon died in 1903. Mrs. Ward was born in Kansas in 1872 and received her education in the schools of Oregon and California. She has two brothers: Richard, living near Prosser, and Edgard, in Montana; and three sisters: Mrs. Kate Brown, of Prosser; Mrs. Nellie Sprinkle, wife of D. S. Sprinkle, one of Prosser's prominent merchants, and Mrs. Margaret Johns, in Sumter, Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Ward have one child, Margaret, born in Prosser, December 11, 1901. The parents are members of the Catholic church, and the husband is a steadfast Democrat and an active worker. His property interests consist of one hundred and ten acres of raw land near Mabton, his liquor business, a comfortable home in the city and various other interests in city property.

LAWRENCE C. LEE, of the firm of Lee & Miller, liverymen, is not a pioneer of Prosser, but he is one of that city's most energetic, progressive and well known business men, who in a year's residence has attracted to him a gratifying number of friends. He is an early native born pioneer of the Northwest, having been born in Marion county, Oregon, 1856, the son of Reuben and Fannie (Drinkwater) Lee. The elder Lee was born in Illinois, went to Missouri when a boy and in the summer of 1852 crossed the Plains with ox teams to the Willamette valley, where he is still engaged in farming and stock raising. His wife was a Missourian, who married Mr. Lee in 1854, at the age of nineteen. She crossed the Plains with her parents in 1853; her death occurred in 1883. Eight children resulted from this marriage, of whom Lawrence C. is one. He attended school in Oregon and helped his father on the farm until he was twenty years old. In 1876 he went to the Walla Walla valley and spent two years, leaving there to engage in farming and stock raising near Pomeroy. He lived on the ranch until 1899, then removed to the city of Pomeroy and engaged in the livery business. He gave this up after a year's experience, however, and followed contracting until the spring of 1903. At that time he formed a partnership with S. Miller and entered the livery business again, this time in Prosser, where success is crowning their industry.

In Pomeroy, in 1882, Mr. Lee was united in marriage to Miss Stella Rew, a daughter of Richard and Etta (Smith) Rew, natives of Wisconsin. Her father, a millwright and farmer, came to Garfield county, Washington, in 1878, but is now a resident of Lincoln county. Mrs. Rew was the mother of four children. Her daughter Stella was born in Wisconsin in 1863, educated in Minnesota and Washington, taught school for a short time near Pomeroy, and, at the age of nineteen, became Mrs. Lee. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Lee is made happier by the presence of four bright children: Clarence R., born April 16, 1884; Leslie A., July 14, 1885; Vera, June 1, 1888, and Bernice, June 13, 1891; all born in Pomeroy. Their father is an active and influential member of the Odd Fellows, and has the honor of being past grand of Harmony lodge, No. 16, of Pomeroy. He is also a Modern Woodman. Mrs. Lee is a devoted member of the Christian church. Politically, her husband takes his stand with the Republican party and is an ardent supporter of President Roosevelt. He still retains some property interests in Pomeroy, besides which he owns a half-interest in the Prosser livery. Mr. Lee has the confidence of his fellow men and is rapidly building up a business of large proportions.

JOHN WILLIAM BROWN, residing in Prosser, is one of Yakima's successful pioneer farmers, who has retired from his life occupation and now seeks the advantages and opportunities which only a thrifty commercial, social and educational center can afford. Mr. Brown was born in England, in the year 1851, the son of Thomas and Margaret Brown, his father being a farmer. Both parents are now deceased, the mother's demise occurring in 1902. They remained in England all their lives. John W. attended the common schools of his native land and worked on the farm until he was fifteen years old, then worked in a foundry until eighteen. At that age he crossed the ocean and during the next five years farmed in New York state. From there he went to Cleveland, Ohio, where he worked in a brickyard four years, then for four years managed C. P. Treat's brickyard in Trinidad, Colorado, next visited Alamosa and then freighted two years out of Prescott, Arizona. At the expiration of that period he moved by team to Salt Lake City and early in the eighties came to Boise, Idaho, where he helped build the Oregon Short Line Railroad. In 1883, he came to Yakima county, settling in the Horse Heaven region, and was engaged in farming and stock raising until 1902. His ranch contained two sections of land, all in cultivation; besides which he owned three hundred head of horses. Mr. Brown's home in Prosser is a very attractive brick residence, the only brick dwelling in the city.

February 1, 1903, Mary E. Lea arrived in Spokane from her home in England, and became the bride of Mr. Brown, the ceremony taking place in the Falls City. She is the daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth (Nowell) Turner. Her father is a prosperous English farmer, and his daughter resided in Oregon for some time previous to visiting her parents in the old country. By a former marriage Mrs. Brown has one child, Myrtle Lea, a bright little Miss of ten summers, whose birth-place is Oregon. Both Mr. and Mrs. Brown are members of the Episcopal church. The husband is affiliated with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows; politically, he is a staunch Republican. Mr. Brown's property interests consist of his home place in Prosser, which contains eleven and one-half acres, sixty acres of land irrigated by Sunnyside canal and other city property of high value. He is an influential and respected citizen of the Yakima valley, a man of substantial attainments and solid integrity.

NELSON D. COX, of the plumbing firm of Jett & Cox, Prosser, is one of that city's enterprising and popular young business men, who has traveled a long way to become a citizen of Washington. North Carolina is his native state and he was born May 17, 1865, to the union of Samuel W. and Cynthia (Blalock) Cox, of English-German and English descent respectively. Both were also natives of North Carolina, his mother being a sister of Dr. N. G. Blalock, of Walla Walla; she died in 1867. Samuel W. Cox removed his family to Illinois two years after the death of his wife, crossed the Plains in 1873 to Walla Walla valley and reached that valley's metropolis October 3, 1873. After being in the employ of Michael Ward and Dr. Blalock for five years, he settled upon a homestead in Garfield county, lived there until 1891, spent a year in Everett, and died in St. Mary's hospital, Walla Walla, in 1894. Nelson D. remained with his father until 1889, when he commenced wiping engines for the old Oregon & Washington Territory Railroad Company, now absorbed by the Washington & Columbia River Railroad Company. After two years at this work, he was promoted to fireman for a service of eight years, and for two years held the responsible position of engineer. During the next three years Mr. Cox was employed by Whitehouse, Crinnims & Company, Walla Walla. In May, 1902, he formed a partnership with his father-in-law, James W. Jett, and established a plumbing shop in Prosser. In connection with this work, Mr. Cox has been in charge of the pumps of the Prosser Falls Land & Irrigating Company for the past two years.

Miss Lillie Jett, the daughter of James W. and Mary (Renfrow) Jett, became his bride in Walla Walla, December 8, 1897. Born in The Dalles, in 1875, she received her education in Walla Walla county and was married at the age of eighteen. Her parents are Missourians. Her father, born in 1849, crossed the Plains to Baker City, Oregon, in 1874, spent a short time there and in The Dalles and in 1875 settled in Walla Walla, where he lived with his family until removing to Prosser. For twenty years Mr. Jett followed his trade as a tinner in the employ of William O'Donald, but in 1895, opened his own shop. He conducted it successfully until he came to Prosser. Mr. Cox has one brother, William C., a physician in Everett, and four sisters: Mrs. Hulda Parris, in Athena, Oregon; Mrs. Ura E. Price, in Idaho; Mrs. Ada Rasmus, living in Walla Walla, and Mrs. Victor Yeo, of Dayton, Washington. Mrs. Cox has one sister, Mrs. Lela B. Jett, living in Prosser. Mr. Cox is a Democrat; fraternally, he is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Maccabees. Mrs. Cox is an earnest worker in the Christian church, of which she is a member. Both Mr. and Mrs. Cox have won many friends since their advent into the Prosser community, while he has been successful in business and is regarded as a citizen of commendable qualities.

BYRON AND ELMER E. BERNARD.

Among those who, at the present day, are making a splendid success of the important business of stock raising, none, perhaps, can take precedence, for skill and ability in the production of fine draught animals, over the Yakima Valley Horse Company, composed of the two brothers whose names form the caption of this article and E. F. Benson. Though it has not been in the business as long as many of its competitors, its members have brought to their enterprise a fund of accumulated experience and an amount of aptitude sufficient to enable them at once to take a place among the leading men in their line in the Northwest; for, having been born on the frontier, reared on the ranges and habituated to the free, arduous life of the stockman from boyhood, the Bernard brothers certainly have had an abundant opportunity to gain an intimate acquaintance with the industry in which they are engaged and to develop the independence, resourcefulness and good judgment it requires. Their father before them was a frontiersman and stock raiser. A native of Illinois, born in 1818, of the sturdy Scotch-Irish stock, Timothy Bernard early determined to heed Horace Greeley's advice, to go West, and in 1849 he crossed the Plains to the occident. For four years he mined in California, but in 1854 he settled on a nine hundred acre farm in the Willamette valley, where he resided more than a quarter of a century. In 1881, however, he crossed the Cascades to the cattle ranges of eastern Oregon, where the remainder of his days were spent in the stock raising industry.

The lady who joined fortunes with him, Margaret Harper, was also a native of Illinois, but of German and English descent. When five years old she crossed the Plains with her parents and at the age of seventeen married Mr. Bernard. Byron Bernard, the elder of the two brothers, with whom this article is primarily concerned, was born in Oregon, November 11, 1865. He received a good education in the local public schools, and at the age of eighteen engaged in the stock business with his father. In 1888 the partnership between them was dissolved, and Byron went to Montana, in which state he was employed by A. F. Melick as a cattle buyer for the ensuing seven years. An idea of the extensiveness of his operations during this period may be had from the fact that his purchases sometimes involved expenditures of one hundred thousand dollars in a single season. Elmer E. Bernard was born in Oakland, Douglas county, Oregon, February 3, 1869. He likewise enjoyed the advantages, during his boyhood, of the local public schools, and like his brother, early engaged in the stock business, following it first in western Oregon, then in eastern Oregon, and then for four years in Montana. In 1898 the two Bernards came to Yakima county, formed a partnership known as Bernard Brothers, and engaged in the raising of horses, giving, as has been stated, special attention to fine draught stock, for the breeding of which they early gained an enviable and widespread reputation. December 1, 1903, Mr. Benson became a partner in their enterprise and the company was incorporated.

May 14, 1894, in the state of Montana, Byron Bernard married Mary, daughter of John and Anna (McDonald) Matheson, the former of whom, a native of Prince Edward Island, Canada, is now a noted stockman and farmer of Montana. When a small boy he was taken to Ontario, in the excellent public schools of which province he was educated. On reaching young manhood, he went into the Calumet and Hecla mines of Michigan, where for a number of years he delved for hidden wealth; but, eventually, he returned to Canada and engaged in farming and stock raising. In 1890 he moved to Chinook, Montana, and took up land. His energy and splendid abilities applied in a country possessed of great natural advantages enabled him to add rapidly to his holdings, and he now has a mammoth estate, consisting of a thousand acres under irrigation and several thousand acres of grazing land. He is engaged extensively in cattle and sheep raising, being the owner of nine thousand head of the latter at present. His wife, Alma (McDonald) Matheson, was born, reared and educated in Ontario, Canada, where she married at the age of nineteen. Both she and her husband are of Scotch extraction. Mr. and Mrs. Byron Bernard are parents of one child, Melvin, born in Montana, May 29, 1896.

Elmer E. Bernard was married in Chinook, Montana, September 3, 1902, the lady being Donelda Matheson, a sister of Mrs. Byron Bernard. She is a native of Lucknow, Ontario, born March 31, 1881, but as her parents moved to Montana when she was nine years old, her common school education was completed there. She also graduated from the Castle Rock high school, in Colorado.

Both the Bernard brothers enjoy a very enviable standing in Yakima county and throughout central Washington, being respected for their business ability and for their integrity of character. Byron is a Modern Woodman, and both he and his wife are communicants in the Presbyterian church.

JOHN CHISHOLM, superintendent of the Prosser Falls Land and Irrigating Company, and an extensive wheat raiser in the Horse Heaven region, belongs to that type of Westerners which, by indomitable pluck and untiring energies, is leading in the reclamation of the once repellent and despised western wilderness. Francis Chisholm, a worker in brass, left his old home in Scotland in 1838 and came to America, settling in Boston, Massachusetts. There he and his wife, Mary (Corbet) Chisholm, founded a home and spent the greater portion of their lives. The husband soon engaged in business and successfully conducted it in the city until 1898, at which time he retired from active business, and is now passing his remaining years in Winchester. Mrs. Chisholm, also a native of Scotland, died in Winchester in 1860. Her son John was born in Boston, February 22, 1855, and in that city was educated and learned the molder's trade with his father. At the age of nineteen the restless young man sailed out of Boston to seek his fortunes in the South and West. He passed through Central America at Panama and worked his way to San Francisco. He there worked a year in the foundry of W. T. Garrett & Company; then engaged in farming in the San Joaquin valley for two years. A trip to Boston followed this venture, after which he returned to California, crossing the Plains, and until 1883 was occupied with farming pursuits near Modesto, cultivating two thousand acres. August 12, 1883, he reached Washington territory and immediately filed pre-emption, homestead and timber culture claims to land in the Horse Heaven region, in which locality he farmed and raised stock extensively during the next eight years. Early in the nineties he removed his family to a fruit ranch near Kiona, the ten-acre tract producing nearly all the varieties of tropical and semi-tropical fruits and berries grown in the West. Five years later Mr. Chisholm and his family came to Prosser, where he took charge of the interests he is now managing, those of the Prosser Falls Land and Irrigating Company. Since that time he has been engaged in promoting the welfare of this large company and raising wheat in the Horse Heaven region, having five hundred acres devoted to this crop.

John Chisholm and Ottie Rice were united by the sacred ties of matrimony, in California, July, 1883, the bride being the daughter of John and Jane (Linville) Rice, pioneers of the Golden state. Her father was born in Ohio, mother in Missouri, and, as man and wife, crossed the Plains to Oregon in the early fifties. In that state Mr. Rice was engaged many years in farming and stock raising, subsequently removing to California, where his death occurred in 1881. Mrs. Rice is still living. The father was of English descent; the mother's ancestry is German. Mrs. Chisholm was born in Salem, Oregon, 1863, and received most of her education in California. She has four brothers: Moses, living in Oakesdale, Washington, and John, George and Preston, residing in California. Two children brighten the Chisholm household: Mabel, born on the Horse Heaven ranch in June, 1885, and Frankie, also born on the ranch, during August, 1890. Mr. Chisholm and his wife are consistent church members, he belonging to the Episcopalians, she to the Christian denomination. He is a thorough believer in fraternities and is affiliated with three, namely: The Masons, Odd Fellows and Modern Woodmen. His political sympathies are with the Republican party, in which he is an active worker, and has served his community in various public offices. Mr. Chisholm is well known as a man deeply interested in all public matters, national, state and local, and has the reputation of succeeding in whatever he undertakes to do. He recently organized a local telephone company, himself owning most of the stock, and this enterprise now furnishes Prosser and the surrounding country with its first telephone service. Mr. Chisholm has disposed of his large Horse Heaven ranch and in return owns fifteen acres of city property, an interest in a meat market, a small band of horses, and other minor property interests. He is one of Yakima's substantial citizens; popular, capable and influential, enjoying the confidence of his fellow men.

JOHN M. BECKETT, one of Prosser's well known business men, was born in Ohio in 1835, the son of Isaac and Nancie (Wilkinson) Beckett, natives of Virginia and Ohio, respectively. John M. was educated in Ohio and Illinois and left the old home at the age of sixteen to learn the wagon maker's trade. After four years' apprenticeship, the young wagon maker opened a shop in Mahomet, Illinois, where he lived ten years. He then plied his trade twelve years in Peoria county. He then removed to Kansas, living in Marshall county until 1880; then going to Wallowa county, Oregon, for a residence of four years, and, in the fall of 1893, came to Yakima county, settling first in Yakima City. In 1894 he settled upon a homestead five miles west of Prosser and engaged in farming six years. His residence in Prosser dates from 1900, during which year he opened a livery stable in that growing town. He personally managed the business for a period of two years, but eventually leased it to Bamy & Smith, the present lessees.

Mr. Beckett was married in Champaign county, Illinois, November 25, 1858, to Miss Maria Franklin, the daughter of William and Lydia M. (Pitman) Franklin. Both parents were pioneers and natives of Ohio. William Franklin removed to Illinois in 1852, later went to Kansas, and his death occurred in that state. Mrs. Beckett was born in Ohio in 1838, and received her education in the schools of her native state. The following children are a result of this union: Edmund and Edgar, twins, born November 8, 1859, died in infancy; Willard, born January 10, 1860; Frank (deceased), born February 4, 1863; Ralph, February 1, 1867, and Harry, November 9, 1869, died in infancy; all born in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Beckett also have an adopted daughter, Gertrude, born in Kansas, March 6, 1882. As a soldier of the Civil war, having enlisted in 1864 in the Second Illinois light artillery, and served until the close of the war, Mr. Beckett is entitled to membership in the Grand Army of the Republic and is a member of that organization. Politically, he is a staunch Socialist. Both husband and wife are connected with the Methodist church. Mr. Beckett's property interests consist of his livery barn and a city home in Prosser, in which place he is respected as a citizen of public spirit, integrity and stability.

WILLIAM W. SMITH, proprietor of one of Prosser's blacksmith shops, has resided in Prosser since the spring of 1899, and in the five years which have since elapsed has built up a lucrative business and firmly established himself in the confidence of his fellow citizens. Mr. Smith is a native of Columbus, Ohio, born September 20, 1857, to the union of William and Margaret (Rapon) Smith, both of German descent and born across the seas. William, Senior, came to the United States in 1818 after a lengthy trip of thirty weeks on the ocean, during which time he was shipwrecked three times. He settled in Ohio, and during the remainder of his long life followed the shoemaker's trade in Columbus. Margaret (Rapon) Smith came to this country when a girl. Her father served in the Napoleonic wars, fighting against the famous general in the battle of Waterloo, and he also fought on the American side in the War of 1812. William, Junior, attended school in Columbus and learned the shoemaker's trade at his father's bench, working at this trade until he was sixteen years old, when he began mastering the blacksmith's trade. Six years later he left Columbus, going to Cambridge City, Indiana, for a short stay. He remained a short time successively, in Indianapolis, Baltimore, Fort Wayne, Chicago, Omaha and Edison, Kansas, and finally reached Kansas City. He lived six years in that metropolis, and then came to Puget Sound in 1890. He was a resident of Tacoma nine years, or until the spring of 1899, when he opened a shop in Prosser.

The year 1884 marks a memorable event in Mr. Smith's life—his marriage in St. Joseph, Missouri, to Miss Annie, daughter of Henry Smith. Her parents are natives of Germany, her father coming to the United States in 1857. He settled in Ohio, in which state the family home still remains. Mr. Smith is a carpenter by trade and also a successful contractor. Mrs. Annie Smith was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1859, and in 1894 was called to her home in the life beyond, leaving a grief-stricken husband and four young children to mourn her loss. The children are: John William, born August 5, 1887, in Kansas City, Kansas; George W., born in the same city, June 11, 1889; Elma T., born in Tacoma, February 29, 1891, and Annie L., whose birthday was November 20, 1894. The father of the family is affiliated with three fraternal orders; the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen of America. He has left the old line political party to which he once belonged, for the Socialist party, of which he is an active member. Besides his blacksmith shop in Prosser, Mr. Smith owns twenty acres of land in the district irrigated by the Sunnyside canal. He is respected and esteemed by his fellowmen for his many commendable qualities.

CHARLES N. BICKLE. It is not given to every man—in fact, to comparatively few—that his name should be perpetuated by a prosperous, growing town, whose future is as bright as that of Bickleton, Klickitat county. Yet the doughty pioneer of central Washington, whose biography is herewith presented, is the father of the thrifty commercial center that bears his name, and until recent years was its leading citizen.

Bickleton's founder was born in Wisconsin fifty-four years ago, and was one of twenty children, whose parents were William and Sarah J. (Witherell) Bickle, natives of England and the state of Connecticut respectively. Upon arriving in America, William Bickle settled in Jefferson county, Wisconsin, the birthplace of Charles; from Wisconsin the father traveled slowly westward, living in various states, until he reached Kansas, where he is still farming, residing near Beloit. He is prominent in Kansas politics, and ever since he arrived in the state and settled has served the public in some official capacity. Sarah J. Bickle departed this life in 1903.

Until Charles Bickle was sixteen years old he lived in Iowa, where his education was obtained. At that age, however, he returned to his birthplace and worked in the pineries four years. Returning to Iowa, he attended school five months, and then commenced farming, living three years longer in Iowa, two years in Nebraska, three years in Kansas and three months in California. From California he came to Portland, and thence, in 1878, to Goldendale, where he opened a grocery store, after having made a trip to Alder creek and found the Indians too numerous and hostile. Fifteen months later, however, the courageous pioneer decided to fight it out, if necessary, with the red men, and accordingly returned to the sparsely inhabited Alder creek region in northern Klickitat county, and settled upon the quarter section now occupied by the township of Bickleton. The same year, 1879, he established a trading post upon his land, soon after secured a postoffice and thus laid the foundation of Bickleton. A full history of this place will be found on another page of this work. During the first twelve years of his residence in Bickleton, Mr. Bickle was postmaster; he was the promoter of the first school and the principal contributor to its organization fund; donated land for its site, also land for the sites of the Methodist church and parsonage, and otherwise assisted materially in upbuilding the town. For more than a year he carried the mails at his own expense to and from Goldendale. During his mercantile career he had two partners, the first being a man named Weaver, then Samuel P. Flower, the latter being in the firm from the year 1889 until 1890. In conjunction with the store Mr. Bickle conducted a hotel and a livery stable. The hotel stable and store were destroyed by fire in 1892, but with commendable enterprise the owner rebuilt them and returned to business. For a year S. P. Flower was his partner, conducting the store. Desiring to live near the railroad and to secure better advantages, Mr. Bickle purchased in 1889 a ranch on the Yakima river, about four miles below Prosser, and removed thereto. There his home is at present.

Mr. Bickle and Miss Fannie Bacon, a daughter of Horatio and Eliza (Pennock) Bacon, were married in 1899, the ceremony taking place in Iowa, the bride's home state. Her father, an Ohio farmer, became an early pioneer of Iowa, and lived there many years. His death occurred in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Bickle are parents of sixteen children, of whom thirteen are living: Charles E., William H., Mrs. Phoebe Wonnack, Mrs. Alice Ransier, Mrs. Eva Lackey, Mrs. Fannie Williams, Fred, Grace, Ida, David, Helen, Harry and Roy. The other three were: George, Josephine and Adelia. The majority of those living are residing in the Yakima country. Mr. Bickle is affiliated with only one fraternity, the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in which he has attained the rank of past grand. He is a staunch and active Republican, though himself never seeking office, but content to work for the advancement of his friends. His ranch contains one hundred and ninety acres, all under irrigation, seventy being in timothy and clover, and the rest devoted to orchard and other farm products. Mr. and Mrs. Bickle are highly esteemed by all for their many commendable qualities of heart and mind, and have just reason to feel proud of the part they have taken in the redemption of the Klickitat wilderness, and proud of their pioneer sons and daughters. The name of Bickle will ever have a place in central Washington history.

ALBERT SMITH, in charge of the Prosser Flouring Mills, and one of that city's popular and respected young citizens, is a native son of West Virginia, born in 1865 to Jacob and Rebecca (Warner) Smith, also born in that state. Both paternal and maternal ancestors came to this country from England. Jacob Smith was a stockman. He removed from West Virginia to Missouri, and died in the latter state in 1880. Albert Smith received his education in West Virginia and Missouri, and is a graduate of the Warrensburg, Missouri, high school. When sixteen years old he began learning the miller's trade, and for seven years served as an apprentice—the miller's trade being one of the most difficult trades to master. At the end of his apprenticeship the young man secured the position of assistant miller of a mill located in Bozeman, Montana, remaining with the same company eight years. In 1897 he worked three months in Walla Walla, then returned to Bozeman for a few months, and in 1898 was called to Prosser to assume the management of the large mills situated there. His work has been highly satisfactory and successful, as a result of which the Prosser mills have a most creditable reputation among their patrons.

Miss Alice M. Spencer became the bride of Mr. Smith in 1892, the wedding taking place in Montana. She is the daughter of Collins and Mary (Baker) Spencer, natives of New York and Illinois respectively. Collins Spencer, a farmer by occupation, immigrated to Missouri in 1860, and is still living in that state, at the advanced age of eighty; Mrs. Spencer is dead. Mrs. Alice M. Smith was born in Illinois in 1866, and is a highly educated young woman. She is a graduate of the Appleton City, Missouri, academy, graduate of a New York college, and a school teacher of three years' experience in Missouri and two years' experience in Montana. Her one brother, Herbert, is assistant miller under Mr. Smith. Mr. and Mrs. Smith are well known in Prosser's social life, and by their congenial qualities have drawn around them a wide circle of friends. The husband is connected with two fraternities, the Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen, and both husband and wife are communicants of the Christian church. Mr. Smith has faith in the future of the Yakima valley, as is evidenced by his possession of fifty acres of land irrigated by the Prosser canal and a comfortable home in the city. He is a man of action, ability and true worth.

ORNIA S. BROWN, living two miles west of Prosser, one of the valley's well known stockmen, is a pioneer of the Yakima country, in which he has spent nearly his whole life. Born in California, December 28, 1867, he is the son of Thomas and Mary (Coleman) Brown, pioneers of California. Thomas Brown crossed the Plains by ox team conveyance from his home in Missouri to California in 1864, and was there married, his bride being also a Missourian, who crossed the Plains when a child. When Ornia S. was two years old, the loving care and devotion of a mother were taken from him by her death, and six years later, after the father had removed to Klickitat county, the young lad became an orphan. By working for his board and clothes, he was able to remain in school until he reached the age of fourteen. He then set out into the world, and was employed successively by Messrs. McCredy and Beckner, and later by Snipes & Allen, as one of their range riders. For five years he lived this rough life, at the end of that time taking charge of F. C. Sharkey's cattle outfit at the mouth of the Yakima river, with whom he remained six years. Then followed a season in Alaska, where he placed a pack-train on the road between Dyea and Lake Bennett. Upon his return to Yakima, he entered the employ of Nelson Rich as ranch superintendent, and a year later purchased an interest in the business, to which he is now giving his attention. Their ranch is situated near the mouth of the river.

In 1900 Mr. Brown and Miss Sadie Evans, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Evans, of Prosser, were united in marriage. Mr. Morris is a Canadian, who has made his home near Prosser since 1893 and is one of the valley's prosperous ranchmen. Mrs. Brown was born in Canada, educated in Tacoma, North Yakima and Prosser, and was married at the age of twenty-three. She has five brothers: Richard, George, Benjamin, Robert and Harry, all living in and around Prosser; and three sisters: Mrs. Lillie Campbell, living near Prosser; Mrs. Annie Brown, near Ellensburg, and Gertrude, at home. Mr. Brown is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and politically is affiliated with the Republican party. His property interests consist of a half interest in eight hundred head of cattle and two hundred head of horses, and forty acres irrigated by the Prosser Falls canal; an eloquent testimonial to his energy, ability and thrift. Last summer his company shipped eleven car loads of horses to Montana. Mr. Brown is an excellent representative of that class of self-made men who have made the Yakima valley what it is today. He commands the friendship and respect of his fellow pioneers and citizens.

HARRY W. FISK, residing upon his well improved farm a mile and one-half west of the city of Prosser, is one of Michigan's sons who is successfully engaged in developing the powerful latent resources of Washington, and in the Yakima country has achieved much worthy of commendation. His parents and their parents were pioneers of the beautiful Michigan peninsula, the former, Lyman C. and Nancy (Bailey) Fisk, having been born in that state. Lyman C. Fisk followed agricultural pursuits in Michigan until his death. He was of Holland Dutch descent. The mother is now a resident of Michigan. Harry W. Fisk was educated in the district schools of his native state, working upon his father's farm until the age of twenty-one. At that time, 1894, the young "Wolverine" left his home in the East to seek what the West might have in store for one of his energies and talents. He chose the Yakima country as his field of endeavor, and immediately entered the employ of Kelso Brothers, working in the wheat fields of the Horse Heaven region. The next year he and W. L. Dimmick leased twenty-one hundred acres of wheat land, and during the next four years successfully farmed the tract. Upon retiring from wheat raising, Mr. Fisk purchased thirty acres of land irrigated by the Prosser Falls canal, and this place is still his home.

One of Prosser's well known daughters, Miss

Luna S. Burk, became the bride of Mr. Fisk in 1898. Her parents, Elijah R. and Emily (Bishop) Burk, were born in Oregon and came into the homes of Oregon's earliest pioneers, the grandparents having crossed the Plains in the early fifties and settled in the Willamette valley. Mr. and Mrs. Burk were married in Oregon, subsequently removed to Dayton, Washington, where Mrs. Fisk was born in 1882, and for a time resided in Pendleton. Mr. Burk, now dead, was engaged in the real estate business. Mrs. Burk, now Mrs. Thorp Roberts, lives in Prosser. To Mr. and Mrs. Fisk two children have been born: Ernest W., in Prosser, January 27, 1900, and Grace, in Prosser, December 5, 1901. Mrs. Fisk is a devout member of the Episcopal church. Mr. Fisk's political affiliations are with the Democratic party. His property interests now consist of thirty-six acres, all under cultivation; three acres in orchard, sixteen acres in alfalfa, six acres in clover, seven in garden produce and the balance occupied by various buildings. He is devoting especial attention to raising blooded Durham cattle, of which he now has nine head. Mr. and Mrs. Fisk are popular, and are respected by all who know them. Mr. Fisk has reason to feel proud of the position to which he has attained since coming to Washington.

ARTHUR M. CAMPBELL. The respected citizen of Prosser whose name commences this biography was born in New York state, in Newburgh, in 1843, the son of Amos and Harriet E. (Brundage) Campbell, the father a native of the same place; the mother born in Middleton. In 1860 Amos Campbell removed his family to the densely wooded Michigan frontier and there erected a home, where he lived until his death in 1880. He was a veteran of the Mexican war. The Brundage family is one of New York's pioneer families. Harriet Brundage's father served in the War of 1812. At the age of twelve her son, Arthur M., was apprenticed to the blacksmith's trade, working at the trade four years in New York. He then accompanied his parents to Michigan and for two years helped his father clear his land and put it under cultivation. He was occupied in various ways until the winter of 1862, when the young man offered Uncle Sam his services but was rejected. He again offered them in 1864, and this time was accepted and enrolled in the Sixth Michigan cavalry under General Custer. After the close of the war he returned to Michigan and farmed until 1873, in that year removing to Nebraska and settling upon a homestead. A year later he returned to Michigan and engaged in the warehouse business, as employee and half-owner until 1870. He then removed to Kansas and farmed two years; again returned to Michigan and re-entered the service of his former warehouse company employers, remaining with them until 1887. North Dakota then became his home for eight years until 1895, when he came to Prosser. In Yakima county he was engaged in the sheep business until 1899, at that time selling his flocks and investing in sixty acres of irrigated land two and one-half miles west of Prosser, upon which he has established his home.

In 1867 he was married to Miss Melissa A. Paull, the daughter of Lemuel and Amanda (Harwood) Paull, natives of New York. Lemuel Paull was one of Michigan's earliest pioneer farmers, and his step-father was the first white settler of Barry county. Mrs. Paull was likewise the daughter of Michigan pioneers. Mrs. Campbell was born in Barry county, 1846; was educated in the common schools and the Grand Rapids high school, of which she is a graduate, and for five years previous to her marriage taught school in Michigan. Mr. and Mrs. Campbell have three children: Mrs. Harriet McNabb, born in Michigan, July 31, 1868, living in Prosser; Fred A., born in Michigan, November 4, 1872, a prosperous farmer living near Prosser, and Mrs. Kate B. Cullen, born in Kansas, July 23, 1881, also residing in Prosser. Mr. Campbell is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and the Odd Fellows, and both himself and wife are connected with the Methodist church. He is a staunch Republican, and in Michigan served in a public capacity for some time. Although owning a fine farm a little more than two miles from Prosser, Mr. Campbell is at present residing in the city. He is a man of unquestioned integrity, capable and public spirited, and possesses no small number of warm friends.

CHARLES A. WARNER, living a mile east of Prosser, is one of Yakima county's prosperous horticulturists. He is a native of New York, born in 1853, his parents being John H. and Melinda (Cronk) Warner, also New Yorkers. Until he removed to Minnesota in 1867 the father was foreman of the largest tannery in the state. In Minnesota he followed farming and stock raising until 1902, when he and his wife came to Prosser. They are at present living with their son Charles. Both are well advanced in life's journey, the mother being eighty-one years old. Charles A. Warner was educated in New York and Minnesota, and assisted his father until twenty-two years old. At that time he commenced railroad work and rose to the position of engineer. In 1880 he engaged in the mercantile business in Brooten and Sedan, Minnesota, and also served as postmaster. Ten years later we find him buying wheat, in which occupation he was also engaged ten years; he then purchased a two hundred-acre farm and cultivated it until 1899, when he came to Washington and located in Prosser. Here he purchased the place upon which he is now living.

Mr. Warner was married in Minnesota, 1874, to Miss Mary Brown, daughter of Hans P. and Ann Brown, natives of Denmark and England respectively. Mr. Brown came to America in 1858, settling in Illinois. At the commencement of the Civil war he enlisted in an Illinois heavy artillery battery and served until 1863. At the battle of Gettysburg he became overheated, a circumstance which led to his death shortly afterward. Mrs. Warner was born in Illinois in 1857. Mr. and Mrs. Warner have three children living—Ernest A., employed in the Puget Sound Flouring Mills, Tacoma; Mrs. Hattie M. Geer, living in Tacoma, and Mrs. Toddie A. Geer, also a resident of Tacoma. Three children are dead—Janie, Merritt B. and Marcus M. The children were all born in Minnesota. Mr. Warner is affiliated with two fraternities, the Masons and Modern Woodmen. He is an active member of the Republican party, and at one time served his community in the capacity of justice of the peace. His thirteen and one-half acres are all in a high state of cultivation, four acres being in alfalfa, four in strawberries and orchard, and the balance in garden truck. He has, besides, considerable stock. Most of his time is given to the culture of strawberries. He has over thirty varieties of this luscious berry and is shipping plants to all parts of the state. Mr. Warner is a man of recognized integrity and industry, two qualities which give him a high place in the esteem of his friends and neighbors.

CARL C. REIMER, whose farm lies a mile and one-quarter east of Prosser, is a native of Germany and of German descent. He was born 1859 to the marriage of John P. and Christena (Haas) Reimer. His parents came to America in 1880 and settled in Nebraska, where his father died in 1901. Mrs. Reimer is still living. The subject of this biography received his education in the common schools of Germany. At the age of seventeen he came to the United States, locating in Iowa, and living four years in that state. Subsequently he went to Oregon and there, also, pursued farming four years, spending the remainder of the nine years he lived in Oregon in the liquor business. In 1890 he went to Puget Sound, making his home in that country some ten years. His residence near Prosser dates from 1900, at which time he purchased his present farm.

Mr. Reimer and Mrs. Alice Gibson were united in marriage in Gray's Harbor, Washington, in 1894. She is the daughter of Samuel and Martha (Readman) Benn, of Aberdeen, Washington. Mr. Benn crossed the Plains to California in 1849, lived in that state until 1853, and then moved to Puget Sound, where he settled upon the land now forming the site of the city of Aberdeen. Both parents are residents of that city. Alice Benn was born upon this homestead in 1862 and educated in the town of Aberdeen. She was first married to H. Gibson, who died in 1893, leaving three children—Pauline, who died at the age of nineteen; Corney and George. Mr. and Mrs. Reimer have been blessed with two children—Miles J., born in Gray's Harbor, November 15, 1896; Martha C., born in Prosser, July 25, 1901. Mr. Reimer is an active member of the Democratic party and takes part in every election. His farm consists of twenty-one acres; two acres being in orchard, seven in alfalfa, two in clover, one in strawberries and the balance in grain and building sites. Mr. Reimer is a successful gardener and orchardist, and during his comparatively short residence in the community has made many friends.

JOSEPH SMART, builder and contractor, living two miles west of Prosser, has been identified with the history of that city since 1892, principally because of the important part he has taken in constructing its homes and business houses. Born in England in 1841, Mr. Smart comes of two old English families, his father being Thomas Smart and his mother, before her marriage, Mary Hopkis. Thomas Smart was an expert mathematical instrument maker. Both parents lived and died within the confines of their native country. After attending school until he was fourteen years old, Joseph served seven years as an apprentice to the carpenter's trade, and then worked at his trade six years in England. In 1868 he determined to employ his talents in America, and so came to Chicago. He traveled considerably during his early American life, spending six months in Chicago, three years in Cleveland, Ohio, a year and a half in St. Louis, Missouri, three years in Colorado, then ten months in St. Louis once more, a short time in Canada, a year and one-half in Cleveland again, another four years in St. Louis, two years in Denver, seven years in Los Angeles, a year in Portland, a short period in Port Angeles, Washington, a short time in Seattle, another short period in Olympia and a year in Tacoma, during all this time following his trade successfully. In 1892 he came to Prosser. During the next two years he lived in that town, assisting in its construction. In 1894 he saw the opportunity and filed a homestead claim to a quarter-section two miles west of Prosser, and has since resided upon this place, though still continuing to accept construction contracts and other business. Mr. Smart built the Lape Hotel, the Catholic church, the schoolhouse and many other public buildings, business houses and dwellings in Prosser.

WILLIS MERCER.

MRS. WILLIS MERCER.

RESIDENCE OF WILLIS MERCER, PROSSER, WASH.

He assumed the responsibilities of matrimony in 1871, in St. Louis, his bride being Miss Janie Banks, also a native of England. Her parents, Thomas and Elizabeth (Scribbins) Banks, were married in England and came to the United States in 1854, settling in St. Louis. Mr. Banks died in 1874; his wife in 1869. Mrs. Smart was born in England, came to America with her parents and was educated in the public schools of St. Louis. She was eighteen years old at the time of her marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Smart have five children—Thomas W., born in Colorado, 1882; Elizabeth, in Los Angeles, 1884; Rebecca, in Los Angeles, 1887; Louise, also born in California, 1889, and Alice, whose birth occurred in Prosser, 1895. Both himself and wife are affiliated with the Methodist church. Although never seeking the emoluments of office for himself, Mr. Smart, as an active Republican, is always ready to assist his friends and is a believer in good government. Of his two hundred acres of land, fifty are devoted to hay. He is one of his community's progressive, energetic and able citizens, who wields a deal of influence among his fellow men and commands their highest respect.

WILLIS MERCER. The citizen upon the recording of whose biography we now enter is one of Prosser's substantial business men who devotes most of his time to stock raising and farming and is at present serving his townsmen as a member of the city council. Like many another Northwestern pioneer, Mr. Mercer is a Kentuckian and the descendant of a well known pioneer family of the Blue Grass state. Born in the year 1862, he gladdened the home of William and Rebecca (Bradfield) Mercer, natives of Kentucky and Pennsylvania respectively; the father was of English descent, the mother of Pennsylvania Dutch. The year after Willis was born, his father removed to Illinois. Three years later the home was bereaved by the death of the loving mother and wife. The father died in Illinois nine years ago. As one of a family of ten children, Willis was obliged to take up life's responsibilities at an early age. He remained with his father on the farm until 1877, when he commenced working for others during the warm months and attending school in the winter, thus securing a good education. At the age of twenty he went to Wisconsin and for two years toiled in its forests and on its farms, returning to Illinois in 1884. He there leased land and farmed until 1886, the year that marks his advent into the Northwest. A short stay in Pendleton was followed by his settling upon a homestead and a timber culture claim in the Horse Heaven region; a venture that proved unsuccessful, and he abandoned the claims some three years later. He then entered the employ of T. K. Beard for a year, spent two years in the dairy business near Walla Walla, and returned to the Horse Heaven country to enter the sheep raising industry with William Cripps. He was with Mr. Cripps three years, two years with E. Kemp and the succeeding three years was alone in business. He then sold a quarter-interest to A. E. Rothrock, and together, they commenced to raise wheat. This partnership still exists, the firm ranging sheep and utilizing several hundred acres of wheat land. They have one thousand acres, of which, at the present writing, three hundred and fifty are sown to wheat.

Mr. Mercer and Myrtle Rothrock became husband and wife in Illinois February 28, 1899. Mrs. Mercer is the daughter of Henry and Susan (Hinkle) Rothrock, of Illinois. Both parents were born in North Carolina. Mr. Rothrock being a pioneer of Edwards county, Illinois, where his daughter Myrtle was born, September 11, 1881. Mrs. Rothrock is dead. Mrs. Mercer was reared and educated in Illinois, and was married at the age of seventeen. Three children have blessed the marriage: William H., born in North Yakima, October 15, 1900; Velma, born in Prosser, December 26, 1901, and the baby, also born in Prosser, October 20, 1903. Mr. Mercer is affiliated with the Odd Fellows and is the present noble grand of the Prosser lodge. He takes an active interest in political matters and all city affairs and is one of the city's councilmen. He is a Republican. His property interests include a section of wheat land in the Horse Heaven region, ten acres of land irrigated by the Sunnyside canal, a three-quarters interest in 3,500 sheep, a good many horses, besides his leasing interests in the wheat region. Mr. Mercer and his wife are deservedly popular in the community and, as one of the county's prominent citizens, Mr. Mercer is public-spirited, progressive, energetic and a man of integrity in all matters.

JOHN H. LEE, whose estate lies seven miles west of Prosser, is an Englishman both by birth and by descent, who has, however, made America his home since 1882, and has been a resident of the Yakima country since 1889. His birth occurred in the year 1849, Joseph and Elizabeth (Chatman) Lee being his parents. Joseph Lee was an optician by trade. At the age of four, the subject of this biography was left an orphan. The little fellow was kindly cared for until he was eight years of age, when he commenced working in the coal mines of England, following that work there for twenty-four years. In 1872 he immigrated to the United States, settling in Pennsylvania. He was employed in the great coal mines of that state until 1885, at that time going to Indian Territory. Three years he worked in that region, then six months in Arkansas, followed by six months as superintendent of the Tennessee Company coal and iron mine owned by Pratt & Company, in Alabama. Yellow fever finally forced him to leave the South, as the result of which he came to the Roslyn, Washington, mines in 1880. Realizing the great opportunities afforded by the farming industry of Washington, Mr. Lee, in July, 1891, settled upon a homestead near Prosser and lived there five years, in 1897 purchasing his place upon which he now lives. He has met with success in agriculture and stock raising and has amassed a comfortable property.

Mr. Lee was wedded to Miss Sarah E. Taylor in England, that memorable event in their lives taking place in the year 1872. Her parents, William and Mary (Turner) Taylor, both dead, were English, her father being a miner. Mrs. Lee was born and reared in England and was eighteen years old when she was married. Eleven children have been born to this union: Henry, born in England, 1872, conducting a store in Los Angeles; Mary, born in England, December, 1874, died in Prosser; Joseph, born in England, January 18, 1877, killed by a mine explosion; Mrs. Elizabeth Wilson, born in England, August 24, 1879; Albert E., Pennsylvania, May 14, 1882; William, Pennsylvania, February 28, 1884, deceased; Thomas, Pennsylvania, July 25, 1885, deceased; John, Indian Territory, September 10, 1886, deceased; Sarah, Alabama, January 11, 1889, living at home; Rosa, Roslyn, June 22, 1890, deceased; George, Prosser, June 8, 1892, living at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Lee are communicants of the English church. He is identified with the Republican party. Mr. Lee has nearly sixty-nine acres, all supplied with water; thirty acres are devoted to alfalfa, five acres are set out in a fine orchard, and the balance is in plow land. Mr. Lee is esteemed as a friend and neighbor by all in the community in which he lives and is recognized as a citizen of the class that comprises our best citizenry.

JOHN T. WILSON, whose estate lies seven miles west of Prosser, is an 1883 pioneer of Yakima county and one of its host of prosperous, thrifty farmers. Of Scotch and German descent, Mr. Wilson is the son of Archibald and Elizabeth (Hungate) Wilson, among Kentucky's earliest white inhabitants, the father having been born there in 1818 and the mother in 1810. When fifteen years old Archibald Wilson left his native state and settled in Illinois, where the subject of this biography first looked out upon the world in 1857. In 1866 the family removed to Missouri, and in that state John T. gained the greater part of his education and grew to manhood. His father died in 1883, but his mother lives in Illinois at an age attained by very few. John Wilson lived with his parents until he was twenty-five years old, the last four years farming for himself. In 1882, however, he determined to seek a home in the Northwest and with that idea in view came to Pendleton, Oregon. The following year he settled upon a homestead in the Horse Heaven region and his residence in Yakima county commenced. He placed his quarter section in cultivation, filed upon a timber culture claim and placed it in cultivation, as also a section of railroad land, which he purchased from the Northern Pacific Company. This large farm he tilled successfully until 1902, when he sold his holdings in the wheat belt and purchased his present home. At the time he bought it the land was covered by sage-brush; now it is all in cultivation, well irrigated, fenced, and upon it is a modern dwelling.

Mr. Wilson and Miss Elizabeth Lee were married in North Yakima, September 10, 1900. The biography of her parents, John H. and Sarah (Taylor) Lee, who live near Mr. Wilson, will be found elsewhere in this work, they being pioneers of the lower Yakima valley. They were born and married in England, where, also, Mrs. Wilson was born, August 24, 1879. She was nine years old at the time her parents came to Washington and was, therefore, educated and reared in the Yakima country. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wilson: Florence E., April 15, 1901, on the Horse Heaven ranch, died in infancy; and Norman R., born at the same place, December 21, 1902. Mr. Wilson is connected with two fraternities, the Masons and the Odd Fellows; politically, he is a Democrat who takes an active interest in all political affairs. His farm contains sixty acres, fifty-five producing alfalfa, and three being devoted to a fine orchard. Mr. Wilson's labors have not been in vain, for he has amassed a comfortable holding, is happily situated, and he and Mrs. Wilson enjoy the esteem and best wishes of the community in which they have erected their homes.

JOHN CAMERON, horticulturist and farmer, living eight miles west of Prosser, has led an eventful life since he came, in 1847, to gladden the hearts of his parents in distant Scotland. Duncan and Christina (McLane) Cameron left their native country in 1850, bringing their family to Canada, where they lived the remainder of their lives, the father dying in 1869. The son, John, commenced learning the shoe business when he was thirteen and worked as an apprentice several years. At the age of seventeen, the young Scotchman enlisted in the army and assisted in the suppression of the Fenian outbreak in 1866, for which loyal service notice has been sent him he is soon to receive a gold medal and one hundred and sixty acres of land from the Canadian government, the land to be selected by him any time prior to 1906. In the fall of 1866 he went to Chicago, remained there ten months, and became foreman of a shoe factory at Lawton, Michigan. Following this he entered business for himself and successfully conducted it until 1870, when he returned to Canada. In May, 1873, he became a brakeman on the Great Western Railroad, subsequently rising to the position of conductor. However, in 1884 he returned to the United States and accepted a position in North Dakota on the Northern Pacific railroad. Four years later he was transferred to the Cascade division and until 1896 was engaged as a conductor between Tacoma and Pasco. He then removed his family from Tacoma to the farm upon which he is now living, having purchased it in 1893 and improved it. He has made this place his home since that time, with the exception of six months in 1899, when he was employed as a conductor in Old Mexico, the City of Mexico being his headquarters.

In 1872 Mr. Cameron was married to Miss Mary E. Coates in Canada. Her parents, George and Elizabeth (Langdale) Coates, were natives of England, who came to America on the same ship in 1842. Three years later they were married and in 1847 Mary E. was born. Mr. Coates was a stonemason by trade and assisted in the construction of the magnificent parliament building in Ottawa and Trinity College in Toronto, working upon the finest part of the stone cutting. He died in 1861 at the age of forty-three. Mrs. Cameron received a good education in the Canadian schools. To this marriage were born the following children: Mrs. Alice E. Hickman, December 8, 1873, now living at Wardner; Robert G., January 17, 1875, a Northern Pacific conductor on the line between Portland and Tacoma; Christina, October 7, 1876, a graduate of the Ellensburg normal, who is now teaching in Tacoma; and Mrs. Mabel K. Stringer, December 21, 1883, a graduate of the Tacoma Business College, who is living in Belma. Mr. Cameron is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, is connected with the Presbyterian church and as a Republican takes an active interest in the political affairs of his county. Of his forty-acre farm, all in cultivation, fifteen acres are in a full bearing orchard, twelve acres in alfalfa, five acres in timothy, and half an acre in grapes, small fruits and berries. In 1902 he sold off this place two cars of prunes, a car of pears and peaches, two thousand three hundred and thirty boxes of apples at an average price of between fifty and sixty cents a box, four hundred and eighty sacks of culled apples at fifty cents a sack, and hay to the value of two hundred and fifty dollars, besides a great quantity of grapes and berries, vegetables, etc. These figures are eloquent testimony of the Yakima country's fertility and to Mr. Cameron's ability. He is among the most prosperous orchardists in the county and one of Yakima's progressive citizens of the best type.

CHARLES R. GILLETT, engaged in general farming eight miles west of Prosser, was born in Wisconsin, 1862, the son of Rodney and Mary (Robble) Gillett. The elder Gillett was born in Pennsylvania, removed to Illinois in early life and when sixteen years old immigrated to Wisconsin and entered the lumber industry, with which he is still identified. Mrs. Gillett, who died in 1892, was a native in Illinois, the daughter of early pioneers of that state. The subject of this biography was educated in the common schools of Wisconsin and at the age of eighteen was taken into partnership by his father, remaining with him ten years. In 1890 he came to the Northwest, locating first in Portland. There he was occupied two years in the lumber business; then came to Pasco and during the next two years followed railroad work for the Northern Pacific. Realizing the fine opportunities presented by the Yakima country to farmers, Mr. Gillett decided to engage in agricultural pursuits, and accordingly he and his brother-in-law purchased the land upon which Mr. Gillett is now living. Mr. Gillett has developed an excellent property and his farm is now considered to be one of the best under the Prosser canal.

Miss Maria Tustin became the bride of Mr. Gillett at Prosser in 1896. Andrew and Margaret (Weekly) Tustin, the parents of Mrs. Gillett, were natives of West Virginia, where they were married. They immigrated to Minnesota and subsequently came to Prosser, where Mr. Tustin died. Maria Tustin was born in West Virginia, 1877, received her education in the Ellensburg and Prosser schools and was married at the age of eighteen. There have been two children born to the marriage: Myrtle, L., in Prosser, July 16, 1897, and Rodney A., in Prosser, November 20, 1899. Mr. Gillett is a thorough believer in the benefits of fraternal association, and is a member of three orders: Masons, Odd Fellows and the Modern Woodmen. Mrs. Gillett is a member of the Rebekah lodge. Both are united with the Methodist church. Politically, Mr. Gillett is a loyal Republican. He has sixty acres of irrigated land, of which ten are in orchard and the balance in alfalfa, clover and timothy; besides farming, he is paying considerable attention to stock raising on a small scale and has fifteen head of cattle, forty hogs and a number of horses. Prosperous, thrifty and respected by his neighbors, he is a typical Yakima citizen-farmer.

EPHRAIM STRINGER. The honored Northwestern pioneer whose biography we shall now chronicle in these pages dates his residence in this section of the United States from the joyful arrival of the emigrant train of which his father and family were members in Oregon territory, fifty-three years ago, after a six months' weary journey with ox teams. His father, Blewford Stringer, was a Kentuckian by birth and descent, who combined the preaching of the Gospel with the labor of a farmer, a not unusual combination in this Western country. From Kentucky he went north into Illinois, served in the Black Hawk war of 1841 and then crossed the Plains. He lived forty years in the Willamette valley, being eighty-four years of age at the time of his death. In Illinois this Kentucky pioneer met and married Miss Almira Carroll, a daughter of very early settlers of the Illinois plains. Her parents came to Oregon in an early day and there her death occurred. Ephraim Stringer, secured what little education he was able to get from the district schools of a frontier region and when twenty years old learned the carpenter's and wheelwright's trades, following these occupations together with those of farming and stock raising for fifty-one years in Oregon. In July, 1902, he left the state which had been his home for more than half a century and settled in the Horse Heaven region, Yakima county. However, he remained there only one year, in 1903 purchasing his present farm eight miles west of the city of Prosser, upon which he has since been successfully engaged in general farming.

Mr. Stringer and Miss Lucinda R. Beeler, then a girl of seventeen, celebrated the nation's birthday in 1865 by joining their fortunes as husband and wife and beginning life's journey together. Her parents, John and Jane (Powell) Beeler, were natives of Tennessee, who crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1852 and there lived until their death, the father's demise occurring in 1865. The mother was married at the age of sixteen and reared a family of seventeen children. In Missouri, 1848, Mrs. Stringer was born, crossing the Plains when a very small girl. The union of Mr. and Mrs. Stringer was blessed by a large family of children: Mrs. Robertie Grant, born April 22, 1866, the wife of a Baptist minister in Oregon; Mrs. Rhoda A. Williams, born 1868, deceased; Perry P., August 25, 1871, living in Yakima county; Mrs. Ledona Cyrus, born in 1873, deceased; Mrs. Eva R. Hanson, October 12, 1875, living in Oregon; Gilbert G., September 2, 1878, living in Yakima county; Chester A., November 1, 1880, at home; Curtis D., March 20, 1885, at home. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stringer are devout members of the Baptist church. Mr. Stringer owns a quarter section of wheat land south of Prosser, eighty acres irrigated by the Sunnyside canal, two acres of which are in orchard and twenty-five in hay, and a considerable number of horses and cattle. Mr. and Mrs. Stringer are held in high regard by all who have become acquainted or intimate with them, and as courageous, energetic pioneers of an ever-receding frontier have done their full share in transforming the erstwhile Northwestern wilds into one of the thriftiest and most progressive portions of the American Union.

HORATIO W. WELLS. The successful and widely known Yakima stockman whose life forms the subject of this sketch was born and reared in the province of New Brunswick, Canada, and is the son of two pioneer families of that region, his parents being William A. and Emma T. (White) Wells. They removed to Maine at an early age and were there married, she being twenty years old at the time. Subsequently they returned to Canada and engaged in farming and stock raising until their deaths. Horatio W. attended the common schools of New Brunswick and assisted his father until the spring of 1880. Then, in his twenty-first year, he sought his fortune in distant Oregon. Arriving in his newly adopted home, he entered the employ of his uncle, G. F. Wells, and L. Corbett, on their sheep ranch. Sixteen months later the young man rented the ranch and took the sheep on shares for a period of three years. At the end of that time the energetic Canadian purchased Corbett's interests, and the business proceeded under the name of Wells & Wells. This copartnership lasted nine years, the junior partner then disposing of his interest and removing to Portland. In 1897 he purchased the ranch five miles west of Prosser, upon which he now makes his home. Although the Prosser ranch is his home, Mr. Wells spends the greater portion of his summers in The Dalles. His stock interests still continue to demand most of his attention.

In 1890 Mr. Wells returned to his old home and claimed for his bride Miss Hattie E. Allen, the daughter of Harvey and Alice (Thompson) Allen, pioneers of New Brunswick. Mr. Allen is a successful stockman and farmer. Mrs. Allen was married when twenty years old and reared a family of five children; she died in 1903. Mrs. Wells was born in 1879, educated in the common schools of New Brunswick, and was married at the age of twenty-one. Four children blessed the union, the eldest of whom is dead: Alice T., born February, 1892, drowned in the Yakima river, 1898; Lloyd W., born October 6, 1894; Chlorinda, December 23, 1899; Charlotte, October 3, 1903; all of whom were born at The Dalles. Mrs. Wells is a member of the Methodist church. Mr. Wells takes an active interest in the political affairs of the country and is a thorough believer in the principles advocated by the Republicans. His ranch near Prosser consists of one hundred and seventy acres, all supplied with water; forty acres are devoted to raising Yakima's king crop—alfalfa—while there is an excellent four-acre orchard upon the place. In 1900 he purchased eight thousand acres of land in the Horse Heaven region, four thousand acres of which are good wheat land. This investment is sure to prove an extremely lucrative one, as the wheat belt is rapidly being settled. Mr. Wells owns about five thousand sheep ranging in Oregon and Washington. In all his business dealings he has been quite successful, due in most part to his straightforward methods of dealing with others, his keen foresight and his indomitable energy and perseverance. He commands the highest esteem of his neighbors and associates and is a loyal, public-spirited citizen of his adopted country. Mr. and Mrs. Wells are the fortunate possessors of a wide circle of warm friends and well-wishers.

EDWARD O. WILSON, engaged in the meat business in Prosser, and one of that city's popular young citizens, is one of Yakima's native sons, having been born, November 5, 1878, near Tampico, the postoffice of the upper Ahtanum valley. Nearly his entire life has been spent in Yakima county, whose wondrous growth into one of the leading sections of the west he has witnessed. In its progress he has taken an active part. His father, William T. Wilson, of Scotch descent, was born in Missouri in 1852, and at the age of twelve crossed the Plains with his parents. On the journey his mother was killed, and her mortal remains lie buried in the desert. Mr. Wilson settled on the Ahtanum about 1870, purchasing a farm near Tampico, and later filing a homestead claim to a portion of what is now known as Knob Hill. William Wilson's death occurred in 1890, on Knob Hill. In 1876 he married Ada Hawkins, born in Oregon in the year 1856, and to this union Edward was born. Mrs. Wilson, after her first husband's death, was united in marriage to Benjamin Miller, and is now a resident of North Yakima. The subject of our sketch received his education in the common schools of the county, and in the well known Woodcock academy near his home. From the time he was fourteen years old he rode the range for George Taylor and Zach Hawkins. Following this occupation he worked a short time with Burbank & Miller, contractors, but in 1898 went to British Columbia, where he worked in the mines two years. Upon his return to Washington in 1900 he wintered in Spokane. In the spring he returned to Yakima county and commenced ranching. The next year he purchased the meat market of A. J. Chambers, situated in North Yakima, conducted it a year, sold the property, and came to Prosser, opening his present market in the summer of 1903. The venture has proven a most satisfactory success, due to the aggressive industry and careful attention given it by its owner. Mr. Wilson has one brother dead, Claude G., killed in 1902, on the Sound, and three brothers and sisters living: Ray, Mrs. Ella L. Hawkins and Gracie, all living in Yakima county. He is affiliated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and politically is a staunch Republican. Mr. Wilson stands high in the regard of Prosser's citizenry, and is a young man in whom the Yakima country, as his birthplace and home, may well take pride.

THORPE ROBERTS, one of Yakima's prosperous wheat growers, residing in Prosser, is a native of Nova Scotia, born May 8, 1863, to the union of Matthew and Roseanna (Travis) Roberts, also natives of that famous peninsula. Matthew Roberts came of a sea-faring family, and himself was a sea captain, engaged in the fishing industry; he died in 1872 at the age of fifty-two. The Travis family is an early pioneer family of Nova Scotia. Ann Travis, who was quite young when married, is the mother of nine children. She is still living in her native country. Thorpe Roberts was obliged to enter life's struggle while yet a lad of twelve. Leaving home, he worked in various lumber camps and on various farms until he reached the age of seventeen. He then went to New Hampshire and worked in the logging camps of that state a year and a half. In the summer of 1881 he went to California. He followed the lumber business among the redwood forests awhile, spent a short time in the camps of western Oregon, and in 1882 settled in Dayton, Washington, where he followed lumbering seven and a half years. Some time prior to 1887 he visited the Horse Heaven region and decided to locate there, choosing his land. In 1887 he filed a homestead claim upon the tract chosen and removed his family thereto, and since that time he has been steadily improving and cultivating his fine ranch until it is now one of the valuable places in that district. He and his family spend the winter in their Prosser home, but in the summer they live on the farm.

Mr. Roberts and Emma Bishop were united in marriage at Pendleton in 1887. She is the daughter of two early pioneers of the Northwest, Bolliver B. and Luna (Palmer) Bishop, natives of Connecticut and Illinois respectively. The father, who was a lawyer, came to Oregon in 1852, and he and Putnam Bradford, her uncle, owned and operated the first steamboat on the lower Columbia, between the Cascades and Portland. He died in 1807. Mrs. Bishop was nineteen when she crossed the Plains with her parents in 1849, being a member of a very noted emigrant train. She is living in Pendleton. Mrs. Roberts was born at the middle cascades of the Columbia. After attending school at Pendleton a short time, she began teaching, though only fourteen years old, and she taught until she was twenty-one, then married R. Burk. Two children were born to that union: Roy, deceased, and Mrs. Luna Fisk, living in Yakima county. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts have had two children: Leon, born at Pendleton, in 1891, died in infancy; Herman B., born March 30, 1895, is still living. Mr. Roberts is an Odd Fellow, and belongs to the Rebekahs, as does also his wife, and Mrs. Roberts is a member of the Women of Woodcraft Order, and the organizer of the Prosser lodge. Mr. Roberts lost his brother, Everett, while harvesting wheat, the unfortunate man being run over by a combination harvester. Everett Roberts and a man named Traver had the distinction of having brought the first gang-plow into the wheat belt.

WILLIAM H. HAYDEN, residing eight miles east of Prosser, follows the lucrative vocation of raising wheat, and is one of Yakima's most prosperous and esteemed farmers. The Empire state is his native state. He was born in 1855. His parents, Robert B. and Maria D. (Snover) Hayden, were born in New Jersey and Pennsylvania respectively. The family removed from New York to Illinois, thence to Minnesota, later to Iowa, and in 1860 crossed the Plains by ox conveyance to California. Three years later they came to Washington Territory and settled in Clarke county. A little later they settled near Portland, living there until 1877, when they removed to Yamhill county. In September, 1893, Mr. Hayden and his wife took up their permanent abode in Everett, and there they reside at present, the father at the advanced age of seventy-five. The subject of this biography was five years old when he crossed the Plains, and eight when he entered the precincts of Washington. He remained with his father on the farm and attended school until his sixteenth year. Then he left the old home and followed various occupations in the Walla Walla valley until 1883, the date that marks his settlement upon a homestead in the Yakima wheat belt. Since that time he has devoted himself assiduously to the development of this fertile region with creditable success.

At Bickleton in the year 1891, Miss Wilhelmina Phipps, a daughter of William and Sarah (Boone) Phipps, was united in marriage to Mr. Hayden. Both parents of Mrs. Hayden are natives of Missouri, and crossed the Plains with that heroic emigrant band of 1849, rescued from the jaws of destruction only through the generous services of Dr. McLoughlin at Fort Vancouver. These honored pioneers are now living in the Moxee valley, Yakima county. Mrs. Phipps is a niece of Daniel Boone, the great frontiersman. Their daughter Wilhelmina was born in Yamhill county, Oregon, in 1873 and received her education in the public schools of her native state. Mr. and Mrs. Hayden have five children—Robert, Benjamin H., Mamie B., Walter and Laura, the oldest of whom is twelve and the youngest three years of age. Mr. Hayden is an ardent advocate of Republican principles and an active member of his party. His ranch, one of the most valuable in the region, contains 1,200 acres, all producing wheat, and is completely equipped with modern machinery and a select number of draught horses. It is such farms as his that lend permanency and value to the country. Mr. Hayden is an energetic, capable and public-spirited citizen who belongs to the state's most substantial class of settlers.

GUSTAVUS A. RYDHOLM is one of the Yakima wheat region's Swedish farmers, who came to Yakima county in 1884, settling upon pre-emption and homestead claims in the Horse Heaven district, about eighteen miles southeast of Prosser. He was born in Sweden, 1860, his parents being Lars and Morea (Mongnus) Rydholm, also natives of that country. The father is still living, but Mr. Rydholm's mother died when he was a child. Gustavus attended the public schools of Sweden and remained at home on the farm until he was nineteen years old. In 1880 he came to the United States, locating first in Illinois, where he followed farming pursuits three years. He then went to Portland, Oregon, and after having lived there a year moved to Pendleton. While in Umatilla county he was attracted by the opportunities offered wheat growers by the as yet almost virgin wheat region of Yakima county, and determined to settle there and devote himself to that industry and to stock raising. So he became a resident of Yakima county, and as rapidly as possible brought his land under cultivation and improved it with buildings. His endeavors have met with most satisfying results, and at present he has about five hundred acres in wheat. Mr. Rydholm and his brother Andrew are partners. Andrew Rydholm was born in 1863 and came to America in 1881. They have another brother living with them, Axell, born in 1870. He came to this country four years ago. The brothers are all members of the Lutheran church, and in politics are Republicans. They command the respect and esteem of all with whom they are associated either in a business or a social way. In the ranch are 640 acres of land, all under cultivation, producing wheat. Of this tract the eldest brother, the subject of this biography, owns half. The brothers have a small band of horses and stock, and have equipped their farm with modern machinery. Upon it also are a number of shallow wells which furnish sufficient water for all their needs.

IRA W. CARTER. Among the energetic sons of Illinois who, by taking advantage of the opportunities offered by the far West, have made themselves independent, the young man whose name initiates this review is certainly to be numbered. Commencing at an early age to fight the stern battle of life, he soon acquired a knowledge of men and affairs and a development of the hardy virtues which, applied under the favorable conditions obtaining in the Yakima country, have made him one of the most substantial and extensive tillers of the soil in the famous Horse Heaven region, noted as it is for large farms.

The enterprising young man with whom this article is concerned was born in Edwards county, Illinois, August 31, 1868, the son of John and Margaret (Mercer) Carter. The former had in his veins the blood of that hardy race whose sterling virtues are so well set forth by the pen of James Lane Allen, for his parents were pioneers of the Blue Grass state, and there, too, he was born and reared. In 1867 he moved to Illinois. Later he went thence to Eureka, Kansas, where he lived for three years, then going to Oklahoma, where he died in 1889. His family was of English and German origin. The mother of our subject, Margaret (Mercer) Carter, also has the honor of being able to claim Kentucky as her birthplace, and the place where her youth was spent. She was five years younger than her husband, whom she has outlived now for a decade and a half, and whom she still survives, her present home being the town of Gas, Kansas.

Mr. Carter received his educational training in the common schools of Illinois. Leaving home at the age of eleven, he then began working out, and he has ever since supported himself by his own unaided efforts. When sixteen he moved to Eureka, Kansas, where for the ensuing three years he worked at various occupations, but the call of the West was ringing in his ears, and in September, 1888, he alighted from the train in Yakima county. For the first two years he worked out, but he was wise enough to realize that that was not the easiest and best way to gain the start he was seeking, so as soon as the law would allow him, at the age of twenty-one, he filed a homestead claim to land seven miles south of Kiona. Upon this tract he made his home until 1901, putting one hundred and fifteen acres of the land into cultivation, though his main business was horse raising during all these years and continued to be until the spring of 1904. In the year 1900 he purchased a section of land four and a half miles southeast of Prosser, and this tract is his home at the present time. Already five hundred acres of it are in cultivation, but the energies of Mr. Carter are too great and his ambitions too exacting to permit his confining himself to such limits, and he therefore rents eleven hundred and eighty acres more, on all of which he raises wheat. Mr. Carter has one brother, Havilla, and one sister, Mrs. Olly Eastwood, of the town of Gas, Kansas.

At Prosser, Washington, on the 1st of January, 1901, Mr. Carter married Laura, daughter of James E. and Mary (Collins) Carter, both natives of Oregon. The father's parents crossed the Plains in 1849, and eventually settled in Benton county, Oregon, where James E. was born in 1854, and where he grew to man's estate. In 1883 he came to Klickitat county, and he is now living near Bickleton, as is also his wife, who was born in Polk county, Oregon, in 1856. Mrs. Carter, wife of our subject, was born in Benton county, Oregon, February 22, 1881, but as she was only two years old when her parents moved to the Bickleton country she was reared and educated there. She is a communicant in the Methodist Episcopal church. In politics, Mr. Carter is a Republican. Though a public spirited man, he has so far manifested no special ambition for political preferment, but has given most of his energy to his business, in which he has won, by his well directed efforts, a degree of success of which a much older man might well be proud.

FELIX T. SWAN, the subject of this biography, one of the later settlers in the Horse Heaven region, and yet one of its most successful young farmers, is a native of Rock Island, Illinois, born in 1879. His parents, John and Clara (Carlson) Swan, were born in Sweden. John Swan, whose occupation was farming, came to the United States in 1871, and settled in Illinois. He lived there until 1885, when he removed to Portland. His death occurred in that city. Mrs. Swan crossed to America in 1873, was married in Illinois and now lives in Portland.

Felix T., of this review, was educated in the public schools of Portland, Oregon, and supplemented his general education by a course in the Portland business college. Upon reaching man's estate he went to Coos bay, where he resided for six months. In 1900 he came to Washington, and was so deeply impressed with the prospects of Yakima county's great wheat belt that he settled upon a homestead ten miles east and three miles south of Prosser, upon which he is now living.

Last year (1903) Mr. Swan and Miss Sena Peterson were united in marriage at North Yakima. Mrs. Swan is of Danish birth and descent, the daughter of John and Christina (Nelson) Peterson. Her parents came to Yakima county in an early day, and in the public schools of this county Mrs. Swan was educated. Mr. Peterson is dead, Mr. and Mrs. Swan are consistent members of the Methodist church, and are highly esteemed for their commendable personal qualities. Mr. Swan is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen, and in political matters casts his ballot usually for Republicans and Republican policies, although as a believer in good government, he considers the fitness of the party's candidates. By hard work and perseverance Mr. Swan has placed his entire place in cultivation, and now owns one of the most thrifty looking farms in the community. He also handles considerable stock, having at the present time about two hundred horses. He is winning deserved success, and belongs to a class of energetic young men that is changing the face of the West by well directed industry. He enjoys the respect and good wishes of all with whom he is associated.

SAMUEL E. WHITE, of Prosser, farmer and stockman, until recently residing fourteen miles southeast of Prosser, is a native of the Willamette valley, Oregon, born September 1, 1863, to the union of Samuel M. and Elizabeth (Jones) White, two of Oregon's early pioneers. Samuel M. White was born in Michigan territory in 1835, and went to Iowa at the age of seven. From there he crossed the Plains by ox team to the California mines and for a number of years followed mining successfully. In 1859 he came north to Oregon, purchasing an immense herd of stock, which was destroyed by the severe winter of 1861-2. Then he spent two years in the Idaho mines, purchased a farm in Oregon and resided upon it until 1878, when he moved to his present home at Easton, Oregon. The mother of Samuel was born in Iowa, crossed the Plains with her parents, who were among the first in the Willamette valley, and was there married; she died in 1877. Samuel E. lived at home, attending school and assisting his father, who was an invalid four years, until the fall of 1885. That year he came to Yakima county, and settled upon a homestead in the Horse Heaven region, the land being his present home. As a boy of sixteen, Mr. White turned his attention to fine racing stock, riding as a jockey for a considerable time, and by the time he was ready to settle in Yakima county he was an experienced horse-man and owned several head. With these as a nucleus, he commenced breeding fine stock, and has met with excellent success in this line, as also in farming.

He was married in Yakima county, 1880, to Miss Minnie Anderson, the daughter of Lowiens and Christina (Nelson) Anderson, natives of Denmark. The father was a farmer and lumberman; he died in 1875. Afterwards Mrs. Anderson was married to John Peterson and subsequently to James Rasmussen. She is living in the Horse Heaven community, which has been her home for the past sixteen years. Mrs. White was born in Denmark, 1872, attended school in her native country, and came to the United States with her mother and step-father in 1880, the year of her marriage to Mr. White. Two children have resulted from this union: Flossie E., born in Milton, Oregon, January 27, 1891, and Jesse E., born on the Horse Heaven homestead, March 4, 1896. Mr. White is connected with the Methodist church, and his wife belongs to the Lutheran denomination. He is an ardent admirer of President Roosevelt and loyal to the Republican party. Mr. White has prospered exceedingly since he came to Yakima county, now owning eight hundred acres of land, of which two hundred and seventy acres are in cultivation, the remainder being grazing land at present. Upon his place he has four large cisterns and a very comfortable dwelling, besides other farm buildings. His stock interests consist principally of about three hundred range horses and some other stock. Mr. White, as is seen from the foregoing, is an energetic man, who has seized opportunity with a strong, skilful hand, and met with gratifying returns. He commands the confidence of all with whom he is associated, and the respect of his community.

WILLIAM B. MATHEWS, whose home lies a few miles south of Prosser in Yakima's great wheat belt, is one of the county's best known citizens, having resided in that region since 1886 and served four years as a county commissioner. There are few people in the southeastern part of the county who do not know and esteem him. His native state is Pennsylvania, which was also the home and birthplace of his parents and many of his ancestors. Into the home of John and Phebe (Mitchell) Mathews, William B. was born in the year 1858. His father, a blacksmith by occupation, enlisted in Company C, Eighty-fourth Pennsylvania volunteer infantry, during the Civil war. After three months' service he was seized by a serious illness and within a short time was sleeping the sleep of death—a sacrifice to his country's cause. The mother lives in Wisconsin at the advanced age of eighty-one. When nineteen years old, William B. left Pennsylvania to make his way alone in the world, after having secured a fair education in the Keystone state and Wisconsin, where he lived eight years. For two years he devoted himself to learning the carpenter's trade. Then he attended school four years, finishing his education by a three years' course in the Wisconsin state normal, in the meantime following his trade at times. With the opening of the year 1886 he went to California. After remaining there only three months he drove to Washington, where he settled upon a homestead. This claim is now his home, and upon it he has successfully farmed and raised stock for nearly eighteen years.

In 1886 Mr. Mathews was united in marriage to Miss Anna Erickson, a daughter of Eric and Betsey (Anderson) Nelson, natives of Norway, and farmers by occupation. Both parents lived and died in the old country. In 1880, at the age of nineteen, Anna Erickson came to America with one of her brothers, and she was married at the age of twenty-four. Mr. and Mrs. Mathews have been the parents of seven children: John C., born March 22, 1887; Eric N., November 22, 1889; Elizabeth, July 11, 1892; James W., October 7, 1894; May (deceased), November 24, 1896; Myrtle, December 28, 1898; Mitchell, January 1, 1902, all born in Yakima county. Little May, when about four years and a half old, met a tragic death which cast a gloom over the whole community. One day she strayed away from home, whither no one knew. For a whole week the community searched for the lost child, at last finding her, cold in death, near Lone Spring, eighteen miles from home. The end had come, apparently, only about two days before her body was discovered. Mr. Mathews has been prominent in the political affairs of his county for many years, and was elected on the Fusion ticket in 1896 as county commissioner for his district for a term of four years. He is a liberal man in his views and believes in good government rather than party domination. Mr. Mathews' property interests consist of his well improved ranch and a considerable number of cattle and horses, besides smaller interests. Industrious, capable, upright, loyal to his private and public responsibilities, he is a force in his community and an influential citizen of his county.

LEWIS C. RUDOW, who is a partner in the firm of Rudow & Schweikert, conducts a hardware and furniture store, with undertaking parlors attached, at Kennewick, Yakima county, Washington. He was born in Henderson, Minnesota, the county seat of Sibley county, in the year 1855. His father, Lewis Rudow, of German parentage, was a government contractor, and also ran a steamboat on the Minnesota river. He died when his son was ten years old. His mother, Wilhelmina (Swant) Rudow, was also of German descent. She married in Henderson, Minnesota, and is still living in that state. Her son was educated in the common schools of his native state, though at the age of twelve he went to Montana with a government freight train to look after the loose cattle, being away from home six months. The following year, in the spring, he made the same trip again, and he has since crossed the Plains twenty-one times. In the winter months it was his custom to work in the store, these trips being made in the spring and summer time. When he was eighteen years old he took a contract to drive cattle to supply the Indians farther west, and continued in this line of work for seven years. He then returned to Henderson, Minnesota, and for the next fifteen years had charge of a local store, being in the employ of the same firm for a period of twenty-one consecutive years. After leaving the firm's employ, he conducted a hardware store in his home town for twelve years more, the store being his own property. In 1900 he took charge of another hardware store in northern Minnesota, and continued in charge for a year and a half, then, selling his interest, opened a general merchandise store at another point in the state, selling out at the expiration of a year's time. In April, 1901, he came to Kennewick, Washington, and with his present partner opened a hardware store, which he is conducting at present.

At Henderson, Minnesota, in 1882, he was married to Emma Connick, whose father, Adam Connick, was of German birth and immigrated to this country in 1858, settling in Minnesota, where he died. Mrs. Rudow was born in Germany in 1857, receiving her education in the public schools of Henderson, Minnesota. One child has been born to this couple, a son, Lewis A. Rudow, born in Minnesota, June 20, 1884. Mr. Rudow is fraternally connected with the Masons and Knights of Pythias, and is also a member of the Lutheran church. In politics, he affiliates with the Republican party. He is the owner of a tract of land watered by the Kennewick ditch, this land being partly improved. By his strict attention to business he has won the esteem of his fellow townsmen, and is highly respected by everyone with whom he comes in contact.

HOWARD S. AMON, a banker of Kennewick, Yakima county, Washington, was born in Umatilla county, Oregon, August 18, 1877. His father, William R. Amon, was a native of Missouri, born in 1845, and a farmer by occupation. When six years of age he crossed the Plains to Oregon with his parents, and there grew up and received his education. He was married shortly after reaching his majority, removed to Umatilla county in the same state, and followed the stock business on the Umatilla reservation for a number of years. He was the first one to break land north of Wild Horse creek; that country having been previously considered worthless for any purpose except as a range for stock. He lived there until the year 1890; then moved to Lincoln county, Washington, and located near the town of Harrington, spending eight years in that neighborhood. He next removed to Waitsburg, Washington, where he now resides. His wife, and Howard's mother, Nellie (Wilder) Amon, was a Wisconsin girl, who married in Umatilla county, Oregon, and died when her son was three years of age. The subject of this article received his education in the public schools of Oregon; later taking a business course in the Western Business College at Spokane, Washington. He remained at home until reaching the age of eighteen; at that time he became connected with a ditch company, remaining in their employ two years. In 1897 he engaged in the livery business in Waitsburg, Washington, disposed of his interests at the expiration of twelve months time, went to Harrington, in Lincoln county, Washington, where his father was residing, and bought his entire interests in that neighborhood. Some four years later he induced the Great Northern Railroad Company to put in a siding on his property, and when this spur was completed it was given the name of Downs by the railroad company. This improvement greatly enhanced the value of his land, and he later sold the townsite and some of his other real estate in the vicinity to John O'Connor for something like thirty thousand dollars. The next year he disposed of the balance of his property holdings near Downs, and moved to Kennewick, there opening the first bank in the town, the institution being called the Exchange Bank of Kennewick. From the very start of this enterprise its success was assured, and its volume of business is rapidly increasing.

In Waitsburg, Washington, in 1900, he was united in marriage to Miss Belle Roberts, daughter of David Roberts, a native of Wales. Her father crossed the Plains from Illinois in the early seventies, and died in Waitsburg in 1800. Her mother is also dead, passing away when her daughter was very young. His wife was brought up in Waitsburg, and received her education in the academy there, marrying at the age of twenty-three. She is one of a large family of children, and six of her brothers and sisters are still living. Her married sisters, Mrs. Emma Morgan and Mrs. Maggie Hutchins, reside in Waitsburg. Her brother Arthur also makes his home there, and is now operating the electric light plant of the city. Another sister, Jennie, lives in Kennewick, and Bessie is engaged as a school teacher in Wilbur, Washington. A brother, Richard, is at present living in the vicinity of Waitsburg. There has been one child born to this family, Arthur H. Amon, born in Lincoln county, November 22, 1901. Mr. Amon is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and the Woodmen of the World. He is a member of the Methodist church, and politically, is a Republican. He is the owner of seventy-seven acres of land in the town of Kennewick, and also four sections of unimproved land in the Horse Heaven locality. In 1903 his father acquired a controlling interest in the Sunnyside Bank. Mr. Amon is a thoroughly reliable, wide-awake business man, and has a brilliant future before him.

JOHN S. SHERMAN, vice-president of the Exchange Bank, of Kennewick, and prominently identified with the real estate interests of his home town and Yakima county generally, is already widely and favorably known in this section, though he has been a resident of the county only two years. He is a native of Michigan, born in Sanilac county, October 18, 1872. Henry Sherman, his father, who was a native of Pennsylvania, was for a long period heavily interested in the lumber industry of the Peninsula state, being a pioneer of that commonwealth, to which he came in 1849. He was of German-Irish descent. His wife, whose maiden name was Caroline Rich, was of English parentage and birth, coming to this country with her parents when fourteen years old. The family settled at Lexington, Michigan, where she was married four years later. The subject of this review received his education in the public schools of Michigan and when fourteen years old entered the employ of Wellington & Lloyd, general merchants of his birthplace. After four years of service with this firm, the young man accepted a similar position with a firm in the northern part of the state and worked for it a year. In the spring of 1895 he came west, locating first at Reardon, Washington, where for the ensuing three years he was engaged in the general merchandise business with John Wickham as his partner. Then he became receiver of the W. S. Willis Company, of Palouse City, capably filling this responsible position for eight months. From Palouse City he went to Rathdrum, Idaho, entering the service of M. D. Wright. He remained in Mr. Wright's employ for a little more than three years and a half. In 1902 he came to the growing little town of Kennewick, and with H. S. Amon opened a general hardware store and the town's first banking institution, the Exchange Bank. Mr. Amon took charge of the bank, while Mr. Sherman devoted his time and energies to the hardware establishment. However, October 26, 1903, he sold the hardware business to H. A. Burr, dissolving partnership with Mr. Amon, and since that date he has devoted his attention to his duties as vice-president of the bank and to his rapidly expanding real estate business.

Mr. Sherman has two brothers, Frank A., of St. Paul, Minnesota, and Augustus H., living in Michigan, and two sisters, Mrs. Luella Lloyd and Mrs. Vira Rice, both residents of Michigan. Fraternally, Mr. Sherman is identified with the Masons and Odd Fellows. He is a regular attendant of the Methodist Episcopal church and in politics, he is an active Republican. His real estate holdings are large, including a half interest in one thousand four hundred acres in the Horse Heaven country, forty acres in section sixteen, and a number of small tracts near and in the town of Kennewick. He is a progressive and an energetic business man, commands the good will of his fellow men and is one of the most active workers in the development of his community.

HERBERT A. HOVER, the president and business manager of the Kennewick Land Company, Incorporated, and also a real estate agent in Kennewick, Washington, was born in Madisonville, Ohio, March 9, 1868. His father, Aaron S. Hover, was a native of New York state, and a real estate agent. He moved to Ohio in 1860, and became a commercial traveler, with headquarters in Cincinnati, traveling out of there for five years. He then went to Kansas City, Missouri, and engaged in business for himself, remaining there until 1876, when he returned to New York for a three years' stay. Again moving west, he settled in Lawrence, Kansas, making that his home for eight years; then removing to California, where he still resides. His mother, Amanda (Hollenbeck) Hover, was born in Pennsylvania, her father being a pioneer steamboat man on the Ohio river, and owning one of the largest river craft afloat. She was educated for a music teacher, which occupation she followed several years. She married at the age of twenty-one. Herbert A. Hover received his early education in the New York schools, and also attended the public schools of Lawrence, Kansas. He started out to make his own living when fourteen years old, and obtained a position as commercial traveler for L. K. Scotford, handling rubber stamp goods. He continued in Mr. Scotford's employ for six years. In the fall of the year 1887 he removed to California and enlisted in the regular army. He served three years and was discharged, on his application, in Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. In the latter part of 1890 he went to Seattle, Washington, and entered the employ of the Singer Manufacturing Company, remaining with the company one year. The ensuing two years were spent in the service of a firm handling school and bank fittings, and other furniture and supplies. He then re-entered the office of the Singer Manufacturing Company, being with them an additional four years, and then engaged with the New York Life Insurance Company in Tacoma, Washington. He was with them until 1901; then came to Spokane and was employed by the branch office of the same company for another year and some months. During his stay in Spokane, he bought and sold considerable real estate. He moved to Kennewick in the fall of 1902; bought the townsite from the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and incorporated the Kennewick Land Company, of which he is still president and business manager. This company have since transacted the largest real estate business in that section of the country. Mr. Hover buying and selling, in his own name, during 1902-3, over one hundred thousand acres of land.

Mr. Hover was married in Spokane, Washington, in 1893, to Miss Mata C. Purviance. Her father, Nathan Purviance, was a lawyer, brought up in New York state, of French parentage. He died when his daughter was but a child. Her mother was Emma (McGregor) Purviance, born in Illinois. Mrs. Hover is a native of Kansas, born in 1877. She was educated in Spokane, Washington, her mother removing to that city soon after her father's death. Mr. Hover is allied with a number of fraternal organizations; being a Mason, a member of the Knights of Pythias, an Elk, a Red Man, also a member of the United Commercial Travelers' Association. In matters political, he casts his lot with the Republican party. He is a large land-owner, holding seven hundred acres irrigated by the Kennewick ditch, one hundred and sixty acres of this land being in cultivation. He also owns two thousand acres of unimproved land in the Horse Heaven country, and is the possessor of an additional five thousand acres scattered throughout the state. He is considered a capable business man, and is very popular with his associates.

WILLIAM A. SMALLEY, a farmer by occupation, residing in the town of Kennewick, was born in Mitchell county, Iowa, in 1870. His father, John Smalley, was of German parentage, but a native of the Green Mountain state, born in 1848. He removed to Iowa with his parents when seven years old, becoming one of the pioneers of that state. In the summer of 1885 he came west and located at Wallula, Washington, in which locality he spent the next nine years of his life, but coming then to Kennewick, he lived there till the spring of 1901, at which time he removed to the Horse Heaven country, some ten miles southwest of Prosser, where he makes his home at the present time. His wife, whose maiden name was Martha Jackson, was of English and Scotch descent, but a native of Illinois, born in 1852. Her parents early removed to Iowa, then still in its pioneer condition, and she grew up there, marrying at the age of seventeen. William A., of this article, attended the common schools of Iowa for a time, but completed his education at Wallula, Washington. When sixteen years of age he started to ride the range for S. Smoot, and he continued in his employ for two years; then entering the service of J. B. Switzer, for whom he rode during the succeeding four years. He then started in business for himself, taking up farming and stock raising near the town of Wallula. In 1894 he removed to Kennewick, and opened a livery stable, establishing a business to which his best energies were given for a year and six months, then two years were passed in teaming. In 1900 he took a homestead in the Horse Heaven country, where he has since lived, though he has made a practice of moving to town in the winter months, in order to afford his children better educational facilities. His father is with him, and together they farm about one thousand four hundred acres of land. They also keep quite a large band of cattle.

At Wallula, Washington, in 1893, Mr. Smalley married Nellie, daughter of Napoleon Rand, a miner by occupation. Mr. Rand was a native of Vermont, but moved to Helena, Montana, in the early seventies, where for years he followed mining, and where he died in 1888. His wife's maiden name was Phoebe Mitchell. Mrs. Smalley was married in Helena, in 1876; she was also educated there, attending the public schools, and later the Sisters' academy. She was one of a family of five children, her brothers and sisters being: William and Charles, now at Wallula; Walter, in Yakima county, and Mrs. Alice Ludy, in Montana. Mr. and Mrs. Smalley have three children, all natives of Kennebec, namely: William, born January 24, 1894; Roy A., December 23, 1897, and Melvina A., March 11, 1896. Fraternally, Mr. Smalley is connected with the Knights of Pythias and the Modern Woodmen, and in politics, he is an active Republican. A young man of good natural endowments, he has already proved his ability to succeed in the important industry in which he is engaged, and his future seems indeed bright.

GEORGE DODSON, an energetic and capable farmer, of Yakima county, Washington, is the owner of a hundred and sixty acre farm, located six miles south and two miles west of the town of Kennebec, Washington. He was born in England in the year 1847. His father, John Dodson, was an English farmer, and his mother was also of English extraction, her maiden name being Eliza Ashley. His parents both died at their home in England some years ago. The son received his education in the schools of his native country, and when fourteen years old started out to make his own way in life. The two years after leaving school were spent in farming near his home. In 1863 he crossed the ocean to the United States, and located in New York state. He removed at the end of six months to Iowa, and worked on a farm for the space of a year, following which he was employed in a military school in Illinois for a period of fourteen months. He next changed his residence to Missouri, there purchasing a place, and farming his land for the following nine years. In the fall of 1874 he moved to California, and engaged in farming for a period of ten years. Moving to Washington in 1884, he took a homestead in the lower Horse Heaven country, and has since that time made it his home. During his residence there, he went to work for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and was employed at Kennebec for the better part of eight years.

In the year 1866, three years after coming to this country, he was married to Sarah Ashley, the ceremony taking place in the state of Missouri. Mrs. Dodson's father, Josiah Ashley, was a native of the Blue Grass state, and moved to Missouri when a boy. He was a pioneer of that state, and followed the occupation of a farmer. He later passed away in Missouri. His wife, unfortunately, died when her daughter was but a young girl. Mrs. Dodson was a native of the Blue Grass state, and removed to Missouri with her parents when she was twelve years of age. She was quite a belle. She attended the public schools of Missouri, and was married at the age of twenty-five. She died at Walla Walla, Washington, in 1893 leaving a family of seven children, born as follows: John H. Dodson, born in Missouri, January 18, 1868, living at Ellensburg, Washington; J. Ashley Dodson, born in Missouri, January 25, 1871, living in Trinidad, Washington; Kittie, now Mrs. W. Hettinger, of Yakima county, born August 31, 1874; James, born in California, July 14, 1876, a citizen of Yakima county, where he now looks after his own farm, and also that of his father; Ludie (Mrs. Neil Blue), now deceased, born in California, June 12, 1878; Georgie (Phral), born March 16, 1879, now of Miles City, Montana; Hattie, at home, born June 25, 1881. The mother was a member of the Congregational church. Mr. Dodson is a Methodist. While his wife was living she was at the head of the Sunday school in her church at Kennebec. Mr. Dodson, politically, favors the doctrines of the Democratic party, and is a representative member of the community, respected and liked by all.

CHARLES J. BEACH, a real estate owner and dealer of Kennebec, Yakima county, Washington, was born in Potsdam, St. Lawrence county, New York, in 1845. His father, Elisha W. Beach, was a native of the Green Mountain state, and born in 1814. He followed the trade of millwright, marrying in the state of New York, where he moved when a small boy. In 1853 he went to Minnesota and later, in 1856, brought his family there, being a pioneer of that state. Seven years later he removed to Nebraska, following his trade and dying in 1867. His parents were English people. His wife, Lucinda Dorothy Beach, was born in St. Lawrence county, New York, her parents coming from New Hampshire. She was married when twenty-four, and is still living in San Francisco, California. She is also of English parentage. Her son first attended the common schools of New York state, and later the schools of Minnesota, taking a course in the high school of that state, and attending the first normal school opened in the state. At the age of nineteen he took up his father's trade of millwright, and followed that business throughout Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa and other states, his father working with him until his death in 1867. After his father's death he removed to Chicago, and made that place his headquarters, but in 1871 he suffered with the rest of the inhabitants, being burned out by the big fire that devastated the entire city. Soon after this misfortune he migrated to California, and was in the employ of Whittier Fuller Company, in San Francisco, for a year and one-half, occupied in building paint works for the firm. He spent altogether six years in California, going to Portland, Oregon, in 1878, and again taking up his trade, and also engaging in the contracting business. In 1881 he left Oregon and went to Ainsworth, Washington, putting in a sawmill in that town; the mill later being removed to the Sound. He spent three years in Ainsworth, and in 1883 filed on a homestead on the present site of Kennewick. He moved to Kennewick a year after filing on his land, bringing his family with him, and living on his place for the next five years. In 1889, in order to give his children better facilities for their education, he moved to Ellensburg, Washington, living there until 1892. He then returned to Kennewick, and has since made that place his home.

He was married in Brownsville, Nebraska, in March, 1867, to Miss Hattie Harbidge, of Chicago. Her father, Joseph Harbidge, was an Englishman by birth, and a rope and cordage maker by trade. He passed most of his life in Chicago, Illinois, dying in that city. Her mother, Alice (Jakeman) Harbidge, was also of English parentage. His wife, Hattie, was born in England in 1845, and came to this country in 1856, being educated at Chicago, and married at the age of twenty-two. The children born to this family are as follows: Hattie, born in Nebraska and died in Chicago; C. Fred Beach, born in Chicago, passed away in Walla Walla, Washington; Daisy (Emigh) Beach, born in San Francisco, California, living in Kennewick, Washington; Harry E. Beach, born in Portland, Oregon, in 1880, is now conducting a livery stable in Kennewick. Mr. Beach is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is a member of the Congregational church. He is a Democrat in politics. He organized the first school district in the community, and served on the board of directors until two years ago. Ten acres of his land are given to a splendid orchard. His land is all within the city limits; thirty acres have already been platted and the balance of the property will soon be sub-divided by the owner into two and five-acre tracts. Mr. Beach is one of the representative business men of the town, and has done a great deal towards making Kennewick a rising town of this western country.

DE WITT OWEN, a resident of Kennewick, Yakima county, Washington, is a farmer by occupation, and was born in the state of Massachusetts, in the year 1831. His father, Eleazar Owen, was born in 1792 and was brought up in Connecticut. When twenty-nine years old he moved to Massachusetts, marrying there the same year. He became the proprietor of a woolen mill, which he operated for a number of years, and died in 1837. Clarissa (DeWitt) Owen, his mother, was born in Massachusetts, July 1, 1798, of French parentage. She was the mother of seven children, and died in the year 1882. The subject of this article was educated in the common schools of his native state, leaving home when he was very young. He at the age of sixteen years went to Connecticut, and was employed for two years by F. Curtis & Company as a burnisher of silverware. At the expiration of his service with that firm he went to Philadelphia, and worked at the same trade for the succeeding eleven months. He then returned to Connecticut, and entered the employ of Hall & Eltar, working for them two years. The following two years were spent in the service of another firm located in the same place. From there he went to Massachusetts, and after a short stay in that state removed to Kansas. He was among the second party of free state Democrats to land in that territory, where he remained for a space of eighteen months. His next place of residence was New York, where for two years he made his home. He then went to Michigan, and from there to Chicago, his stay in that city being of only six months' duration. His next stopping place was Wisconsin. He here engaged in millwright work, devoting the ensuing eighteen months to that occupation. From Wisconsin he went to Iowa and took up a farm, staying there until 1877. He then moved westward, and located at Goldendale, Washington, where for two years he made his home. Removing to Ainsworth, Washington, he in 1881 took up a homestead, where he remained until 1894, at which time he crossed the Columbia river and settled at Kennewick. Soon after his arrival in Kennewick he bought his present home, for which he has recently refused a very flattering offer. Mr. Owen is one of the substantial citizens of this fast-growing town. He is devoting considerable of his land to fruit growing, and has a fine orchard of choice standard varieties. The remainder of his land is set to alfalfa, the great hay crop of that district.

CHARLES H. PUTNAM, a dairyman and farmer residing two miles east of Kennewick, Washington, was born in the state of Illinois, February 2, 1860. His father, Henry Putnam, a descendant of the old colonial Putnam stock, was born in Warsaw, New York, in 1832, and was a veterinary surgeon, and a molder by trade. When twelve years old he crossed the line into Canada,

He returned to this country again in 1844, and, settling on a farm in Illinois, lived there for ten years. He then removed to the city of Rockford, and for the next five years followed his profession and trade in that place. The next five years were spent in visiting places of interest in this country and abroad, four years of this period being spent in Europe. He died at Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1886. His mother, Miranda (Wilcox) Putnam, was brought up in New York, her parents being pioneers of that state. She was born in 1833, and died at the age of seventy. Her son received his education in York State and Illinois; his parents moving to New York when he was nine years old. At the age of twenty he returned to Illinois, and served three years as an apprentice at the molder's trade. He then took up service with the United States Express Company, and was with them for four years as driver and express messenger on the Chicago-St. Paul run. His next venture was the furniture business, taken up in Rockford, Illinois, which he successfully conducted for three years. Having satisfactorily disposed of his furniture business in 1894, he came to Washington and located at Kennewick, buying considerable land there. Later he took up a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, which has been his home since.

He was married at Belle Plaine, Iowa, on July 5, 1886, to Margaret E. Creller. Her father, Lafayette Creller, was a resident of Illinois. In 1862 he enlisted in one of the regiments forming in his native state, and served eighteen months in the Civil war, when he was taken sick and died in one of the army hospitals. He was of German parentage. Her mother, Mercie (Robinson) Creller, was the daughter of an Illinois farmer, and was again married after her first husband's death in 1863, and moved to Iowa, dying in that state. Mrs. Putnam was born in Cherry Valley, Illinois, in 1861, and after receiving her education in the high school and State Normal followed teaching for several years. She was married at the age of twenty-four. To this family have been born two children, among the first in Kennewick: Calyborne, the youngest, August 26, 1888, and Stanley R., May 10, 1887. Mr. Putnam is fraternally connected with the Red Men and the Royal Arcanum. He is also a member of the Methodist church. His real estate consists of two lots with a house in Kennewick and one hundred and twenty acres of land watered by the Kennewick ditch. In connection with his dairy he has twenty head of fine stock. He is one of the enterprising business men of his locality.

WILLIAM A. MORAIN, section foreman for the Northern Pacific Railroad at Kennewick, Washington, was born in Dallas county, Iowa, in the year 1870. His father, John Morain, was brought up in Illinois, later removing to Iowa, where he was married. He became an extensive land owner in that state, and after a continuous residence there of some fifteen years he removed to Osborne county, Kansas. He is at present a resident of Oklahoma. His mother, Hannah (Daily) Morain, was born in Iowa in 1845, and became the mother of three children. Our subject was educated in the schools of Iowa and Kansas, to which latter state he removed with his parents at the age of fifteen. He remained at home until twenty-four, following farming. Upon reaching his majority, however, he engaged in farming for himself, pursuing this for three years. He was a resident of Oklahoma for a number of years, in which territory he met and married his wife. In 1895 he came to North Yakima, Washington, entering the employ of the Northern Pacific Railroad, which position he held for two years. At the end of this period he removed to Kennewick, in the same county, and again entered the railroad's employ, this time as section foreman, which position he still retains. He was married in Oklahoma November 30, 1893, to Ida M. Bowman. Her father, John Bowman, who was an Englishman by birth, came to the United States when a young man, having been married shortly prior to leaving England. He is at present engaged in business at Mulhall, Oklahoma, where he conducts a music store. Mrs. Morain was brought up in Indiana, and after receiving her education at Harper, Kansas, was married at the age of twenty. To this union two children have been born: Frank, the eldest, in Oklahoma in 1895, and Lolo, the youngest, in North Yakima, two years later. Fraternally, Mr. Morain is connected with the Modern Woodmen of America, and politically, he is a staunch Republican. Mrs. Morain has the distinction of holding the position of postmistress of Kennewick, to which office she was appointed January 1, 1902. Mr. Morain is one of the fortunate ones who has secured a holding of land under the Kennewick canal. He is a good citizen, a genial man, and is well esteemed by all.

JOHN STUIBLE, a Yakima county farmer, lives three miles south of the town of Kennewick, Washington. He is a native of Germany, born in Wurtemberg in the year 1842. His father, Fredrick Stuitable, was of German birth and came to this country in 1854, locating in the northwestern part of New Jersey, and following his trade of wagon making. He afterwards removed to Ontario, Canada, where he farmed for eleven years; then moved to Minnesota, passing away there some years later. His mother, Barbara (Schuesler) Stuitable, was also descended from German stock. Our subject received part of his education in his native land, being only twelve years old when his parents immigrated to this country. After a year's stay here, they removed to Ontario, Canada, and were there for a number of years. As a young boy he learned the cooper's trade, and while in Ontario followed farming part of the time, also completing his education in the Canadian schools. From Ontario he removed to Michigan, and in that state spent the two succeeding years; then again moving to the central part of Minnesota, where he followed the cooper's trade for an additional four years. In 1868 he returned once more to Ontario, and for six years took up farming again. Returning to the States in 1875, he bought land in Minnesota, and farmed there for a period of nineteen years. He removed to Washington in the fall of 1894, buying his present place, which was at that time but a waste of sage-brush. At present writing he has it fully improved and under cultivation.

He was married to Maria B. Beck, in Ontario, in 1869. Her father, George Beck, was a German farmer, born in 1819, and immigrated to the United States in 1848. Soon after he crossed the boundary into Canada, and settled in Ontario. Here he married and continued to reside until his death. Mrs. Stuble's mother, Rosina (Schmidt) Beck, was of German extraction, coming to this country when a young girl, and later moving to Ontario, where she was married. She passed away at a good old age. Mrs. Stuble was born in Ontario in 1849, received her education in the schools of her native town, and married when twenty. She is the mother of eight children, two sons and six daughters: Annie, born June 24, 1870, living in Oregon; Mary S. Stuble, born in Ontario May 26, 1872, deceased; Martha K., Ontario, July 25, 1874, deceased; Emma E., Minnesota, October 15, 1877, at home; Bertha C. Gihring, February 21, 1880, Portland, Oregon; George F. and John H., in Minnesota, July 13, 1882, and January 9, 1885, respectively; Wilhelmina E., February 12, 1888, lives at home. Mr. Stuble is a member of the Lutheran church, and a devoted admirer of Roosevelt. He is at present school director in district No. 17, and is one of the influential members of the community.

ANALDO H. RICHARDS, one of the largest land owners in eastern Yakima county, lives ten miles south and three west of the town of Kennewick. He is a native of Ohio, born in 1868, the son of Henry and Mary (Henderson) Richards. His father was a farmer of Ohio, to which state he came from Pennsylvania with his parents in the early days. He was of German descent. The mother of our subject was also born in Ohio, and died when Analdo H. was a boy. The subject of this article was educated in the common schools of his native state. He remained at home until he reached the age of twenty-two, then came west and located in the lower Horse Heaven country, where he began to work on his brother's farm. He was thus employed for the next two years, then he bought in with his brother, and they continued operations together for four years, after which the brother sold to a third brother, John, with whom Analdo has ever since been associated in the management of the farm. In 1895 they increased their acreage by buying two sections of railroad land, and from time to time since they have added to their holdings, until they now own three thousand acres, and hold an additional three thousand under lease for a term of years, devoting all their land to the production of wheat. They are the largest producers of this commodity in their district, a fact which speaks volumes for their ability and push.

Analdo was married in Ohio in the year 1892, to Elva V. Dick, whose father, George Dick, was a farmer in Ohio, to which state his parents had come from Germany in the early days. Her father is still living at the old homestead there. Sarah (Wolf) Dick, her mother, who was the daughter of Ohio pioneers, was married at the early age of eighteen; she also still lives in the state of Ohio. Mrs. Richards was born in Ohio in 1871, and was educated in the common schools of her native state. She and Mr. Richards have three children, all living at home, namely: George, born in Ohio, March 28, 1896; Charles and Elsie, both born in Washington, April 11, 1898, and December 20, 1900, respectively. Mr. Richards is a strict adherent to the Methodist faith, and in politics, he is a devotee of Republicanism. He holds at present the position of road supervisor in his district. Besides his large and valuable farm, he has nearly three hundred head of stock, his hundred and twenty-five horses being needed to harvest the immense crop of wheat each season. Thoroughly businesslike, he has already achieved the success in material things of which many an older man would feel proud, and youth and energy are still his with which to win still greater victories in the future.

FRED CRESSWELL, a well-to-do farmer of Yakima county, residing ten miles south and three west of the town of Kennewick, is a native of Oregon, born in the Willamette valley in 1865. His father, Donald C. Cresswell, a farmer by occupation, was born in Illinois in 1830. In 1835, he accompanied his parents to Iowa, where he lived for seventeen years; then he crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling in the Willamette valley. After thirty years residence there, he moved to the Horse Heaven country, in Washington; he is now living in the city of Walla Walla. The mother of our subject, Mary A. (Rush) Cresswell, was born in Iowa and also married there, crossing the Plains with her husband in 1852. She is still living.

Mr. Cresswell was educated in the public schools of Oregon. At the age of sixteen he started out in life for himself, going first to Umatilla county, Oregon, where he remained for more than a year. Coming thence to Washington, he rode the ranges for Switzler Brothers in Klickitat and Yakima counties for the ensuing twelve years, but in 1894, he went to Utah. A year later, however, he returned to Yakima county, where he again rode the range for two years; at the end of which time he bought land in the Horse Heaven country and engaged energetically in the wheat raising industry. That he has been abundantly successful is evident from the fact that last season he harvested fourteen hundred acres of wheat. Furthermore he cultivates his wife's homestead of a hundred and sixty acres. He is also a successful stock raiser, owning at this writing two hundred and fifty head.

In 1880, in Klickitat county, Mr. Cresswell married Birdie, daughter of Peter and Mary Noyer, residents of Oregon. She was born and educated in the Willamette valley, but came to Washington the year of her marriage. She was not long to be Mr. Cresswell's partner, however, and in February, 1903, he was again married, the lady this time being Mrs. Louise Bush. Her father, Jesse F. Bush, a native of Indiana, came to Washington in 1888 and took up farming as an occupation. He is now living in Oregon. Her mother, Sarah (Falconer) Bush, was a native of Ohio, but was married in Iowa and died in Nebraska. The present Mrs. Cresswell was born in Iowa, January 3, 1853, but received most of her educational discipline in Nebraska, to which state her parents moved when she was nine years old. In 1884 she married P. W. Bush and to this union three children were born: Roy, Mattie and Clyde, the first two natives of Nebraska, the third born in Washington in 1897. To the union of Mr. and Mrs. Cresswell one child, Anna B., was born in 1904. Mr. Cresswell holds the office of school director and clerk of the board, also is road supervisor of his district. In politics, he is a Republican. A capable, industrious man, he is achieving a splendid success in his farming and cattle raising enterprises, at the same time contributing his full share to the general development of the community of which he is an esteemed citizen.

DONALD F. CRESSWELL, a well educated farmer of Yakima county, Washington, lives on his ranch about ten miles south and a trifle west of the town of Kennewick. He was born in the Webfoot state, in Marion county, May 11, 1854, the son of Donald C. and Mary (Rush) Cresswell. His father was a native of Illinois, born 1830, and moving to Iowa with his parents six years later. In 1852 he crossed the Plains to Oregon, and settled in the Willamette valley, living there for a space of thirty years. From 1882 to 1901, he resided in Klickitat county, then going to Walla Walla, where he is now living with his daughter, Mrs. Eagen. He is of Scotch-Irish parentage. His wife Mary, Donald's mother, was born in Iowa, of German parents, her people being pioneers of that state. She was married when sixteen, crossing the Plains with her husband in the early fifties. Our subject first entered the Willamette University, located at Salem, Oregon, and after completing a course there, attended the Pacific University, at Forest Grove; also being a scholar at the State University at Eugene. For a period of four years he taught in the Oregon schools, next taking up the study of mining, and traveling throughout the states of Idaho and Montana for a further space of three years. He then joined a government surveying party, and was with them for six months, making extensive surveys throughout Utah, Montana, and parts of Idaho. The next year was spent in the employ of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Company as a field engineer, and the following four years in the service of the locomotive engineering department of the Central Pacific Railroad Company in Oregon. The ensuing six months were passed in California, in the same line of work. From railroading he now branched out into the steamboat service, devoting six months to that in the city of Seattle, there becoming connected with the Seattle, Lake Shore & Eastern Railroad Company, and remaining in their employ two years. It was during this time that Seattle was devastated by the big fire, and Mr. Cresswell was engineer of the first train moved over the burnt district of the city. He then removed to Salem, Oregon, and accepted a position at the State Insane Asylum, remaining there two years, then returning to Seattle, and engaging in the lodging house business for a year. His next move was to Umatilla, Oregon, there leasing the ferry, and operating it with success for two years. In 1895 he came to Yakima county, buying his present place, and engaging in stock raising, and later in raising wheat.

He was married at Salem, Oregon, in 1892, to Eva Allmer. Her father, John Allmer, a native of Sweden, born in 1838, came to this country in 1885. He lived for two years in Minnesota, thence going to Portland, Oregon, and later to Powell's Valley, Oregon, some fifteen miles from Portland, where he still resides. He is a minister of the Congregational church. Her mother, Christina (Johnson) Allmer, was also a native of Sweden, in which country she was married, and is now living in Oregon. Mrs. Cresswell was born in Sweden in 1868, and was there educated. She immigrated to this country when eighteen, and was married five years later. There have been two daughters born to this union: Edna, at Seattle, October 20, 1892, and Ruth, at Kennewick, January 23, 1899. Mr. Cresswell is affiliated with the Masons fraternally, and is also a member of the Congregational church. He is a Republican in politics, and has served three years as road supervisor, and two years on the school board. His farm consists of one thousand four hundred acres of land, nine hundred acres under cultivation. He also has leased one thousand four hundred and forty acres, nearly half of this tract being cultivated. He is quite an extensive stock raiser, making a specialty of O. I. C. hogs. As a public-spirited citizen and progressive farmer, he takes high rank in his community.

WILLIAM W. MASIKER, a Yakima county farmer and dairyman, resides on his property five miles and a half from the town of Kennewick in a westerly direction. He was born in Kane county, Illinois, February 10, 1848, the son of George and Palmira E. (Trumble) Masiker. His father was a native of York state, and removed to Illinois in 1840, and later married in that state. He crossed the Plains in 1852, and wintered at Fort Boxelder, the site of the present city of Ogden, Utah. The following spring he journeyed to Oregon and settled in Polk county, and a few months after his arrival took up a donation claim, residing in that locality for seven years. From 1860 to 1862 he made his home in Wasco county, and thence removed to Sherman county, in the same state, where he passed away in the year 1863. His mother is likewise a native of the state of New York, and removed to Illinois with her parents in 1840. She was married there. Her husband dying, she was in 1865 again married, to Mr. Price, with whom she still lives. Her son attended the common schools of Oregon, and as his father died when he was fifteen, he took care of the family for two years, at which time his mother was again married. He remained at home with his mother and stepfather, until he was slightly over twenty-two years old, when he engaged in riding the range for a period of eleven years. He also attended to the stock, and learned a great deal about the business. The two succeeding years were spent in the sheep business, and in the fall of 1882, he moved to Klickitat county, Washington, and bought a fruit ranch near Columbus, devoting the ensuing six years to that business, in which he met with success. Disposing of his place to advantage, he moved nine miles northwest of Goldendale, where he lived for eleven years. His next home was in the Moxee valley, and after two years' residence there he moved to his present place near Kennewick.

Mr. Masiker was married to Laura A. Henderson, at Columbus, Washington, in 1876. Her father, Joseph C. Henderson, a native of Indiana, was born in Clark county in 1827. He is a farmer by occupation, and a Civil war veteran, enlisting in 1862 in Company I, Seventieth regiment Indiana volunteers, and serving throughout the entire war. He left Indiana after the war and settled in Missouri, in 1873 moving westward to Columbus, Washington, where he still resides. He is of Scotch-Irish parentage. Mrs. Henderson's maiden name was Lucy A.

Stark. She is also a native of Clark county, Indiana, born in 1834. Her daughter Laura was born in Johnson county, Indiana, in 1857, attended the schools of both Indiana and Missouri, and was married at the age of twenty. She has two sisters and two brothers now living: Mary, the eldest, in Oregon; a married sister, Mrs. Ida Sanders, and a brother, Ira L. Henderson, at Columbus, and Oscar, near Portland, Oregon. This union was blessed with seven children, four of whom are now deceased. The eldest, Amos O., now living in Yakima county, was born in Klickitat county, September 16, 1877; Effie O., born in Sherman county, Oregon, December 13, 1879, is deceased; Walter O., born in Sherman county, Oregon, December 24, 1881, and Palmyra E., born in Klickitat county, April 21, 1889. Albert E., Omar and Lulie are deceased. Mr. Masiker is an Adventist in religion, and a Republican in politics. He was school director in Klickitat county for a number of years. His property consists of nearly a hundred acres, all watered by the Kennewick ditch, and his residence is a commodious nine-room house. He is making a specialty of Jersey cows for his dairy. He is successful in business, an energetic man and has a good future before him.

WILLIAM F. MARTIN, a Yakima county farmer and stockman living on the banks of the Columbia river, about three miles west of the town of Kennewick, is a native of Oregon, born in Lane county, on Christmas Day, in the year 1854. His father, Evin Martin, was of Welsh parentage, and a native of Green county, Ohio, born in the year 1828. He followed farming as an occupation. He removed to Missouri in the early days, and in 1853 crossed the Plains to Oregon by ox-team, the trip consuming six months. Locating in Lane county, he there took up a donation claim, upon which he made his home until his death, which occurred in 1900. Our subject's mother, whose maiden name was Mary A. Turpin, was a native of Missouri. She married in her native state and crossed the Plains with her husband to Oregon, in Lane county of which state she died when William was quite young. She was of English and Irish descent.

Our subject received his education in the common schools of Oregon, and worked for his father on the farm until he became nineteen years of age, then began to ride the range for various stockmen, an occupation which he followed for a period extending over five years. At the expiration of this time he took up farming and stock raising on his own account, and in 1890, some ten years before his father's death, he moved to Yakima county, settled at Kennewick and there continued in the stock business. Shortly after his father's death in 1900, he bought eighty acres of land three miles west of the town, on the Columbia river, and he has since made his home on this land. The same year he also purchased six hundred and forty acres of railroad land in the Horse Heaven district, and he has two hundred and ten acres of this tract now under cultivation and the entire property well fenced.

Mr. Martin was united in marriage in Union county, Oregon, in 1878, the lady being Martha E. Jasper, a native of Oregon. Her father, Merrill Jasper, was born in the Blue Grass state, and was by occupation a farmer and stockman. He crossed the Plains in the early fifties, and located near the town of Corvallis, Oregon, where he took up a donation claim. He then removed to Union county in the fall of 1868, which county he served one term as state senator some years later. He died there in 1885. Her mother, whose maiden name was Nancy Means, was married at fifteen years of age; she died in Benton county, in 1870. Mrs. Martin was born near Corvallis on the 28th of February, 1862. She attended the schools of Union county, and was married at the age of seventeen. She was one of a family of seven children, her brothers and sisters being: Terrell J., deceased; Mrs. Ella Bernough, deceased; George, William J., Mrs. Viney Grey and Mrs. Rodie Morton, all residents of Oregon. Mr. and Mrs. Martin have a family of six children: Jessie, who died when quite young; Clarence E. and William M., born in Oregon; Mrs. Ella McClemons, who now lives at Mission, Washington; Elizabeth and Van Buren, living at home with their parents. Elizabeth was born in Kennewick. Mr. Martin is a member of the Masonic fraternity, and in politics, an active Democrat. He owns over a hundred head of cattle. Mr. Martin is one of the prosperous farmers and stockmen of the county, and stands high in the esteem and regard of his neighbors.

JAMES N. SCOTT, a prosperous merchant of the town of Kennewick, in Yakima county, Washington, is a native of Missouri, and was born in Barton county, in 1872. He is the son of Robert and Sarah A. (Moorehouse) Scott, his father being of Scotch birth, a contractor by trade, and at present living in North Yakima. Their biographies will be found elsewhere in this volume. His mother is a native of Illinois, and the mother of a family of eleven children, three of them now deceased. Her son, James, received his early education in the common schools of Missouri and later attended the public schools in North Yakima, Washington. At the age of fourteen he started to learn the carpenter's trade, and worked with his father during this time. This occupation did not turn out to his liking, and two years later he took up the trade of a painter and thoroughly learned the duties in connection with this following. For a period extending over almost nine years he continued at the painter's trade, working for various people, also engaging in business on his own account, and prospered. During the Spanish-American war he enlisted in the First Washington volunteers; in 1898 his regiment was ordered to Manila, and on reaching that country, was engaged in numerous encounters with the Filipinos. Mr. Scott was promoted to a sergeantry, was taken sick on the Islands, and after a nine months' stay, was sent home with others of his regiment, and mustered out of the service in San Francisco. He then came to Washington, and once more took up his trade of painting. In 1901 he branched out into the retail business, and opened a clothing store in Everett, Washington. He continued in business in that place fourteen months, and in the spring of 1893 came to Kennewick and opened a clothing and gents' furnishing goods store, which business he still follows. He carries a large and well-assorted stock of furnishings, is an up-to-date and progressive business man, and is doing a lucrative business, which is expanding, with the town, in a rapid manner. Mr. Scott still remains single, and has seven brothers and sisters now living. His brother Walter, the eldest of the family, died in 1898, and his brother John passed away at the age of six months. Margaret, a sister, likewise died when an infant of six months. Robert W. Scott, another brother, born in Canada, is living in the Naches valley, and Charles E. Scott, born in Missouri, also lives in that locality with his brother Thomas H., likewise a native born Missourian. Harry H. Scott, a Missouri boy, lives in North Yakima. The other three brothers and sisters, by names: Amy K., Bert E. and George R. Scott, now live in Yakima county. James N. Scott is an Elk, and also belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. In politics, he is a Republican. He is a young business man of strict integrity, and is popular with his fellow citizens.

AUGUST E. TIMMERMANN, a prosperous Yakima county stockman, resides on his ranch situated eight miles west of the town of Pasco, Washington. He is a native born German, and born in the year 1857. William Timmermann, his father, was likewise born in Germany, in the year 1825. He followed the occupation of a farmer and died in his native land during the latter part of the year 1871, his son being fourteen years old at the time. His wife, whose maiden name was Christina Holler, was also of German parentage, and passed away in her native country some years ago. Her son received his education in the public schools of his home town, and at the age of eighteen took service in the army, and for a period of three years was a soldier; at the expiration of that time he returned home for a stay of twelve months. In May, 1881, he immigrated to the United States and located in Nebraska, only remaining there for six months, and then removing to Denver, Colorado. He made his home in Denver for almost four years, following various pursuits, and then made a trip to his home in the old country, crossing the ocean to America once more after a five-months' visit with his mother and friends. On his return he came west and located in Washington, at Washtucna Lake, residing there for nearly ten years. He built the Columbia Cable Ferry across the Columbia river at Pasco, during the year 1894, and the following year brought his family to Pasco. Since coming to the state of Washington, he has followed the stock business principally, and at present writing has a band of three hundred cattle, and is making a specialty of Herefords.

Mr. Timmermann was married in Walla Walla, Washington, in 1890, to Mary M. Sohl. Her father, Claus Sohl, was of German birth, and by occupation a farmer. He died in Germany a number of years ago. Her mother belonged to a German family by the name of Slechting, and also passed away in Germany some years after her father's decease.

Mrs. Timmermann was born in Germany in 1868, and was educated in the common schools of that country, marrying at the age of twenty-two. Mr. and Mrs. Timmermann have a family of five children: Walter E., the eldest, born in Walla Walla, December 31, 1892; Annie J., born in Franklin county, Washington; Edna M., born in Pasco, November 28, 1896; Christal A., born in Yakima county, January 10, 1901, and Norbet C., born in Yakima county, June 3, 1904. The father of this family is fraternally connected with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and is also a Mason. He is a member of the Lutheran church, and in politics, a Democrat. He has served two terms as county commissioner in Franklin county. His property consists of fifty acres in Yakima county, and one hundred and sixty acres near Pasco, in Franklin county, his residence being across the river from Pasco, and in Yakima county. He is an agreeable gentleman, making a success in his work, and is well liked by his neighbors and friends.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

KITTITAS COUNTY

PATRICK J. CAREY. Although not a native of the United States, P. J. Carey is thoroughly American in his ideas and is among the most successful ranchmen of Kittitas county. Mr. Carey was born in Ireland in 1839, and came with his parents to New York in 1847. He is the son of John Carey, who, after twelve years' residence in New York, became a pioneer of Minnesota, settling in Freeborn county in 1859. His homestead here consisted of a half-section of land, on which he lived until his wife's death, in 1879. P. J. Carey's mother, who came after her husband to New York in 1847, was Mary (O'Mara) Carey. She died in Minnesota in 1875.

Mr. Carey was fourteen years old when his parents moved from New York to Minnesota, and here, for a number of years, he worked with his father on the farm and attended the common schools. When still a young man he returned to New York, and in 1859 enlisted in Company E, Second Dragoons (now termed cavalrymen), regular army. After drilling at Carlisle Barracks for nearly a year, he was mustered into the service at Salt Lake in November, 1860. In 1861 his regiment crossed the Plains to Leavenworth, and was sent on to Washington, D. C. Mr. Carey served in a regular brigade throughout the Civil war under Generals Buford, Merritt and Pleasanton. He was in the battles of Bull Run, Manassas Gap, Manassas, Gaines' Mill, Whitehouse Landing, Malvern Hill, Winchester and the famous Sheridan ride, the Wilderness, through the Maryland and Pennsylvania campaign to the battle of Gettysburg, and in other important engagements. He was wounded in the battle of the Wilderness and, while attempting to assist a wounded comrade named Wilsie from the field, was taken prisoner, May 8, 1864. After spending eleven months in the Richmond hospital and in prison, he was paroled and exchanged. He rejoined his company later at Winchester. In 1863 he was made a sergeant for meritorious conduct. During two years of his service he was field messenger, carrying dispatches from one commander to another, both on the field of battle and during encampments. At one time he captured a rebel spy and thirteen Confederates, who were temporarily housed in a building outside of Gen. Kilpatrick's lines, known as the "Yellow Tavern." The spy was clothed in the blue uniform and was addressed by the members of the party as "Major Jones," but proved to be a woman.

Mr. Carey received his discharge at Winchester May 3, 1865, and went to Washington, D. C., where he was employed for a time in the Bureau of Freedmen under Gen. O. O. Howard. The period intervening between 1867 and 1872 was spent at his old home in Minnesota, in the latter year returning to Washington, D. C., where he remained in the employ of the government until 1874, going this year to California, making his home for three years in San Francisco. In 1876 he came to Old Yakima and shortly afterward took up a homestead in the Kittitas valley. During the Indian troubles in 1877 he carried the news of the supposed uprising to the people of Wallula and other settlements.

December 13, 1878, Mr. Carey married Mrs. Anna (Jullong) Frederick, a native of Ohio. The wife died in 1897.

April 14, 1899, he was married to Mrs. Clara Schroeder of Sprague, Washington. Mrs. Carey died September 11, 1900. There is one child of the second union, Essie L. Carey, now three years old. Mr. Carey has two stepchildren, who make their home with him: Jacob C. and William Schroeder. His sisters, Mary and Alice, live in Sabley county, Minn. He also has a sister, Sarah Moore, in St. Paul, and another, Hannah Doyle, in Montana. A brother, David, lives in Kansas City, Mo.

Mr. Carey is a Republican, and is always interested in the success of the party. He is a member of Stephen Post, No. 1, G. A. R.; also of the Hibernian Society. He owns 160 acres of land in Kittitas valley and 80 acres in Lincoln county, Washington. He has made a success of farming and stock raising, and has a comfortable and well-appointed home.

MRS. JOHN C. ELLISON is engaged in farming, a mile and a half south of Thorp, Washington. Her husband, the late John C. Ellison, was born in Missouri, November 11, 1853, and spent his boyhood days in Kansas. He lived in Nevada and Oregon before locating in the Kittitas valley. His father was Thomas Ellison, a Kentuckian and a farmer, who came to Washington in 1880, and his mother, Mary (McCubins) Ellison, was likewise a native of Kentucky. They both died after the family moved west. Mr. Ellison was married January 9, 1884, to Amy A. Childs, who survives him, he having passed away a few years ago. He had the distinction of having served at one time as assessor of Kittitas county.

Mrs. Ellison was the daughter of Isaac and Mary M. (Daniels) Childs. Her father was born in Virginia, but moved to Pennsylvania, where he met and married his bride. Mrs. Childs was born in the latter state in 1841. Mrs. Ellison is likewise a native of Pennsylvania, born August 7, 1867. When she was an infant her parents moved to Iowa and later to Nebraska, where she received her early education. Though only sixteen years old when she came to Washington with her parents, in the fall of 1883, the succeeding January she became the wife of the late John C. Ellison. Her brothers and sisters are: Elsworth Daniels, born in 1863, living in Pennsylvania; Martha J. Abbott, born February 9, 1866, living at Fairhaven, Washington; Isidore M. Bailey, born in 1879, a resident of Idaho; Warren J. Childs, born in Nebraska, in 1870; Frances Frederick, born in 1871, a resident of Washington; Hannah E. Stazer, born in 1873, now residing at Spokane.

Mrs. Ellison's children are: John W., born February 10, 1886; Rosa E., born March 13, 1889; Dora M., born December 13, 1890; Alice P., born March 17, 1892; Olive M., born September 18, 1894; Mary E., born June 6, 1896; Mabel H., born October 8, 1884; Lydia A., born May 22, 1887—the last two deceased.

Mrs. Ellison belongs to the Church of Christ, in which also Mr. Ellison was an elder at the time of his demise, and she is a member of the Order of Rebekahs. She has four hundred acres of land, of which one hundred and sixty acres are in the home place. She is a thorough business woman, well thought of and highly respected by all who know her.

JOHN ALDEN SHOUDY, son of Israel Shoudy, was one of the honored pioneers of Ellensburg and of the Kittitas valley. He was born in

Paw Paw, Illinois, December 14, 1842, and died at his home in Ellensburg May 25, 1901. Mr. Shoudy was the eighth in a family of nine children. When three years old his father settled with his family in Lee county, Illinois. Here he attended the common schools, and, while assisting his father on the farm, saved money enough to pay for a full course of study in a business school at Rockford, Illinois. Shortly after completing his studies he enlisted for service in the Civil war in Company K, Seventy-fifth Illinois infantry, and was sent to the front. At the end of three years, during which he took part in many of the hard-fought battles of the war, he received an honorable discharge, and, in company with a brother-in-law (Dexter Horton) and others, came to California by way of the Isthmus. He afterward went to Seattle, where he was employed by Mr. Horton in a general merchandise store. He remained in Seattle until 1867, then went to Heildsburg, California, again accepting a position with Mr. Horton in a store at that place. While at Heildsburg he met and married Miss Mary Ellen Stuart of Oakland, California. After his marriage he returned to Seattle, and from 1868 to 1871 engaged in the transfer business. In 1871 he sold out and crossed the mountains into the Kittitas valley as the representative of Seattle citizens who desired the construction of a road through the mountains to the settlers and Indians in the valley, that they might secure their trade. Arriving in the valley and realizing that a well equipped trading post was a much needed institution, and one that must prove a profitable investment, he purchased of Jack Splawn, in 1872, a small log hut, fourteen by twelve feet in dimensions, located on the present site of Ellensburg. The hut had been used by Mr. Splawn as a small trading post, but, as he had interests farther down the valley requiring much of his time, it did not become a trading point of importance until after Mr. Shoudy took possession. Mr. Shoudy sent thirteen pack trains across the mountains the first season he was in the valley. In 1872 a second log house was built, in dimensions sixteen by twenty-four feet and two stories high. Mr. Shoudy then sent for his family, who came by way of Portland and The Dalles, determined to make this his permanent home. From 1872 to 1878 there were occasional Indian scares throughout the valley, and Mr. Shoudy took an active part in quieting the Indians and restoring peace. While on a mission of this character to Chief Moses in 1872 he narrowly escaped death at the hands of a band of renegade Indians, his life being saved by the timely interference of Moses. In 1875 he laid off into town lots a portion of the land he had taken up about the trading post, and sold the lots, those for residences at two dollars each, and those for business buildings at ten dollars each. He named the town Ellensburg, in honor of his wife. He erected the third building, a large two story frame, in 1876, on the corner of what are now known as Third and Main streets. This building was eventually removed to be replaced by a more substantial and commodious brick, which was in turn destroyed by the great fire of 1889. Mr. Shoudy is known as the founder of Ellensburg. He constructed the first wagon road from the Kittitas valley, over the Cascade mountains, to Seattle. He was a member of the territorial legislature in 1883, and it was through his instrumentality that Kittitas county was formed. He was a member of the state constitutional convention in 1889. Politically, he was a Republican, but was not an office-seeker. He many times refused the nomination for office, but served as mayor and councilman of Ellensburg and was several times a member of the school board. He was a man of excellent business qualifications, of strictest integrity and most generous impulses. He was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and of the Grand Army of the Republic. No pioneer of the Kittitas valley is held in more respectful remembrance than John Alden Shoudy, and at the time of his death he was borne to his last resting place by his pioneer friends, J. H. Smithson, Thomas Haley, John Olding, R. P. Tjossem, J. L. Vaughn and W. A. Conant. His wife, the partner of his pioneer trials and triumphs, still lives, a resident of Ellensburg and one of its most respected citizens.

HON. JOHN H. SMITHSON. The present mayor of Ellensburg is John H. Smithson who has been a resident of the city continuously since June 29, 1879. Mr. Smithson has led a busy and honorable life and his history demonstrates what may be accomplished by a man who starts life in the right way, whose methods and ambitions are worthy, whose principles are unassailable, and who has the perseverance and determination to meet and master difficulties of great magnitude.

London, Canada, was Mr. Smithson's birthplace and the date of his birth was September 29, 1856. His father, Thomas Smithson, a native of the same town, was born in 1823 of English parents and was by trade a miller. Leaving London in 1861, the elder Smithson went to the Cariboo mines, where he died in 1867. The mother, Charlotte (Siddall) Smithson, of English descent, was also a native of London, Canada, where she died in 1870. At the time of his father's death, the son was attending the common schools of his native town. In addition to the training received in these schools he spent two years in the schools of Park Hill, Canada. At the age of fourteen, both father and mother were dead and young Smithson found it necessary to assume the duties of life unaided by rich inheritance and unsupported by the advice of elders. In two years he left school and began farming on his own account, following this occupation until twenty-two years old. At this age he left Canada and removed, first to San Francisco; thence to The Dalles, Oregon; thence to Ellensburg on the date previously given. Mr. Smithson arrived at Ellensburg practically penniless, having but fifty cents in pocket, but he at once engaged himself to a stockman at thirty-five dollars a month, spending the first few months of his residence in Kittitas county on the adjacent stock ranges. At that time stock raising was the chief industry of the valley, but little hay and almost no grain being grown; there were no fences; irrigation was in its infancy, and stock grazed unrestrained over the whole country. In Ellensburg there were five residences, one store, one blacksmith shop, two small frame hotels, and a saloon.

In 1882 Mr. Smithson opened a meat market on a small scale. The following year the Northern Pacific railroad survey was made up the valley, and in furnishing the employees of the company with supplies, Mr. Smithson accumulated sufficient capital to place his business on a solid foundation. By the year 1887 he had become extensively interested in stock and each year since has added materially to his holdings in this industry. For two years, from 1887 to 1889, Mr. Smithson was principal stockholder in a wholesale and retail meat supply company which he organized in the former year, and from which he retired in the spring of 1889, devoting his time thereafter more exclusively to his stock and land interests. In the disastrous fire which visited Ellensburg July 4, 1889, his business building was destroyed, but fortunately it was well protected by insurance and his individual loss was nominal. In the severe winters of 1889-90 and 1890-91 Mr. Smithson lost most of his stock, but he continued in the business, eventually recovering his losses and in future years adding materially to his investments. In 1889 he purchased from the railroad company 160 acres of land, one-half of which he platted into the Smithson addition to Ellensburg. This property he sold in 1890 to an eastern company for $18,000, afterwards re-buying it at greatly reduced figures. In 1882 he entered into partnership with F. A. Williams in the hardware business, the company being organized under the name of the Williams-Smithson Co., the name being still retained and the business continued. Mr. Smithson was one of the few business men who weathered the financial storms of 1893 and succeeding years. He has continued to invest in land, now having under irrigation 400 acres adjoining town and 7,600 acres in other portions of the county. He is president of the Washington State Bank of Ellensburg, of which he was one of the charter members. As one of the promoters and stockholders of the Ellensburg Irrigation Co., he has done much to enhance the value of real estate throughout the valley and invite new settlers to become residents therein. He was one of the promoters of the Cascade canal and is now vice-president of the company.

Mr. Smithson has been twice married; the first wife, whom he married in 1882, together with her infant child, died within a year from that date. In 1885 he was again married, on this occasion to Miss Jennie Goodwin, daughter of David and Cathrine Goodwin, of Bureau county, Illinois, where Miss Goodwin was born in 1861. In 1884 she came to Ellensburg with her father and brother, meeting and forming the acquaintance of Mr. Smithson shortly after her arrival. Mrs. Smithson has three brothers and one sister, one of the brothers living in Kittitas county. Mr. Smithson's immediate relatives who are living, are three sisters, Elizabeth, Emaline, and Tressa. To Mr. and Mrs. Smithson have been born four children, William, Frankie, John, and Alice, all of whom are with the parents in Ellensburg. The family attends the Episcopal Church of which the parents are members. Mr. Smithson has served the city either as councilman or mayor for twelve consecutive years, and has also represented the county in the state legislature. In 1893 he was nominated in the Republican convention and was elected. In the following session of the legislature he worked untiringly for the location at Ellensburg of the State Normal school and was active in the passage of the bill which has given to Ellensburg deserved prominence as an educational center. Mr. Smithson is recognized at home and throughout the state as a progressive and public spirited citizen; he is respected for those sterling qualities which have made his life a success both from a moral and a financial standpoint, and, by all who are honored by his personal friendship, he is esteemed, not alone as a public officer and a representative citizen, but also for those personal traits of character which have given him the prominent station in life he now occupies and which have made of him a man among men.

HARVEY J. FELCH, M. D., a physician and surgeon of Ellensburg, Washington, is a striking example of what the inborn pluck and enterprise of a western boy will accomplish even against the most adverse conditions. Dr. Felch never wavered in his purpose to become a physician and triumphantly overcame every obstacle in his way. He was born near Eugene in Lane county, Oregon, in 1865. His father, a native of New York, David C. Felch, now 70 years old, and his mother, Mrs. Sophronia (Killingsworth) Felch, who was born in Missouri in 1843, are both living and now reside in California. The father went to Wisconsin before the days of the telegraph or the steam railway and moved to California and later to Oregon ahead of these modern necessities. He was chief of police at Eugene City, Oregon, for a term of years, and in 1872 moved to Washington, and settled at Colfax, about fifteen years prior to the advent of railroad and telegraph. He engaged in farming and the raising of fine stock. During the Indian war in 1877 a fort was erected by neighbors at the family farm for mutual protection. The elder Felch was entitled to the distinction of being the first person to prove up on a timber culture claim in the United States, the claim being located near Colfax. His papers were in the land office at Colfax ready to place on record when they were destroyed by fire. By the time they had been rewritten a delay had occurred so that the filing took the number 7.

Dr. Felch was but seven years old when his parents took a homestead in Whitman county. There he lived on the farm and attended country school and later finished his literary education at Colfax College. His early ambition was the study and practice of medicine, a "notion" which was not encouraged by the members of his family. Yet the dream of youth was never lost sight of, but ever remained a cherished hope. With this purpose in view (a subject little discussed in the family circle, as the boy felt that his desires in the matter were little appreciated), he began the study of Latin while he was working on the farm, copying his lessons on slips of paper which were carried in his pocket, and often referring to them while at work. He thus began the study of the higher branches. After graduating from Portland Business College, at Portland, Oregon, he succeeded his father in the nursery business at Colfax, which he later abandoned to follow his ambition. He went to Kansas City and entered the Kansas City Medical College, where he took the regular course, and, one year previous to graduation, practiced medicine in Kansas, going to Saxman, Rice county, and meeting with great success. Following graduation in 1900 he came to the coast and spent four months at Roslyn, where he practiced as company physician for the Roslyn Coal Co. He then moved to Ellensburg and opened an office, where he now resides. He has built up a fine practice and now has a good home and a well appointed office.

He was married at Colfax in November, 1892, to Ida Lewis, a native of Missouri. She is the daughter of Thomas L. Lewis, for years associate editor of the Baptist Flag of St. Louis and a minister of high standing with his people. He is now residing at Missoula, Montana. He is a branch of the same family tree as that of Capt. Meriwether Lewis, the famous explorer. Mrs. Felch's mother was Martha (Surface) Lewis. Dr. Felch has one brother and two sisters: Charles Felch, a traveling man; Anna Ballaine, wife of J. E. Ballaine, secretary of the Alaskan Central railway system; and Emma Chestnut, wife of a prosperous farmer at Colfax. Dr. and Mrs. Felch have two children, Elaine, born at Colfax in 1893, and Lewis, born at Ellensburg in 1901. Both Dr. Felch and his wife are members of the Baptist church, of which he is a trustee. He is a Republican, and on that ticket was elected coroner of Kittitas county in 1902; he is also county physician and health officer of Kittitas county. He is a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen; Royal Tribe of Joseph, and of the Woodmen of the World; also of the Whitman County Pioneers' Association. He is a strong advocate of good schools and educational progress, as is attested by his own efforts for higher education.

CARROLL B. GRAVES. Carroll B. Graves, senior member of the firm of Graves & Englehart, is an Ellensburg lawyer of marked ability and address, whose profound knowledge of the law and acumen in its practice are well known, not only in his county, but throughout the entire Northwest. He was born at St. Mary's, Hancock county, Illinois, November 9, 1862. His father, John J. Graves, born in Kentucky, of English descent, is still living in Spokane at the good old age of eighty-two. His grandfather, Reuben Graves, settled in the state of Illinois in the early days of that commonwealth. He took a prominent part in the early struggles with the Indians of that section, and at the time of the death of the illustrious Tecumseh he was serving as aid-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Johnson. The mother of Carroll B. Graves, Orilla Landon (Berry) Graves, was born in Vermont, and died at her home in Spokane in 1894. Her father, Johnathan Berry, M. D., was a surgeon in the army during the War of 1812, serving on Lake Champlain under Commodore McDonough.

When a boy, Judge Graves worked on his father's farm until, at the age of fifteen years, he entered Carthage College, Carthage, Illinois. During his college course he assisted in defraying his expenses by teaching, and at one time he was principal of the public schools of Vermont, Illinois. Upon his graduation from college he began the reading of law with the firm of O'Harra and Graves, the latter named member of the firm being his brother, Frank, now a leading member of the Spokane bar. At the law as well as in his course in college, young Graves was an apt student, and at the early age of twenty-three he was admitted to the bar. He at once came west to North Yakima, where he formed a partnership with Judge James B. Reavis, late justice of the supreme court of Washington, and Austin Mires of Ellensburg, with offices in both cities named. This partnership continued until the fall of '89, when Mr. Graves was elected judge of the superior courts of Kittitas, Yakima and Klickitat counties, on the Republican ticket. In this capacity he served until 1897, he having been re-elected for a second term. Upon his return to practice he formed his present partnership with I. P. Englehart, of North Yakima. The first years of Judge Graves' tenure of office were the years of the transition of Washington from a territory to a state. Naturally, during these years many perplexing questions of law and equity came up for decision. Thus it fell to Judge Graves, together with the other superior court judges of the state, to interpret the technicalities of the newly made statutes. These unusual duties furnished a severe test of the legal capabilities of the judges, and upon no occasion when called upon for a decision was Judge Graves found wanting. It was during his incumbency, too, that the "boom days" of the state were on. The depression following in the wake of the inflation caused more property to pass through the courts than had done during any prior periods in the state's history. Especially was this the case in Ellensburg, nearly all of the business property of that town passing through the channel of mortgage adjustment. While these were trying times for the judge, they furnished him with a wealth of experience that will stand him in good stead to the end of his career at the bar.

Mr. Graves has been twice married. In 1888 he was married to Ivah Felt of Iowa, who died in August, 1892, leaving two children, Marion and Florence, without a mother. He married again in June, 1898. His bride was Catherine Osborn of Ellensburg, a native of Chicago, Illinois. Her mother, Mrs. Sarah J. Osborn, is still living. Mr. Graves has one child by his second marriage, Carolyn L., now four years of age. Judge Graves has three brothers: Frank H., who was mentioned previously in this sketch as being an attorney of Spokane, Washington; Jay P., a wealthy mining man of Spokane and part owner of the Grandby, B. C., smelter; and Will G., also an attorney of Spokane. The first and last named are of the law firm of Graves & Graves. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks fraternities. He is not connected with any church, but his family are Episcopalians. Politically, Mr. Graves is, as has been intimated, a staunch member of the Republican party, in the councils of which, ever since entering politics, he has been an active and predominating spirit. With the exception of one or two he has been a member of every state convention of his party since Washington was admitted to the Union, and is universally conceded to be one among the ablest and most eloquent campaign orators of the state. Judge Graves prefers rather to adhere to the practice of his profession than to devote his time and energies to politics. Since leaving the bench he has been identified with most of the prominent cases in the courts of Central Washington. During this time he has defended five cases in which his clients were charged with murder in the first degree, which, in each instance, resulted in acquittal.

AUSTIN MIRES. One of the most successful pioneer lawyers of the Northwest is Austin Mires. The events of his life form an interesting record of intellectual and material advancement well worthy a place in the annals of county and state history. Born near Burlington, Iowa, in 1852, when scarcely one year old he was taken by his parents on the long overland journey across the Plains to Oakland, Oregon, where his father located on a half-section of land donated by the government as an inducement to settlement, and which became the home of the family until the death of the father, which occurred in 1888. In the common schools of Oregon, in the Umpqua Academy, and at Monmouth College, Mr. Mires received his early education, spending several years thereafter as a school teacher and printer, and as mail route agent in the railway postal service. Resigning his position as mail route agent, he entered the law department of the Ann Arbor university, Michigan, from which institution he graduated in 1882. Returning to Oregon, he practiced law for one year with W. R. Willis in Roseburg; at the close of this period coming to Ellensburg, where he formed a partnership with J. H. Naylor in June, 1883. In later years he became a partner with Reavis and Graves, the firm name being Reavis, Mires & Graves, and, in 1894, formed a new partnership with C. V. Warner, now county attorney. Mr. Mires was the first mayor of Ellensburg, serving two terms in this capacity, and has ever since been prominent in the affairs of the city and county. He was a member of the state constitutional convention, and in 1900 was supervisor of the United States census bureau in the second district of Washington, was president of the state bar association in 1902; was for six years vice-president of the Ellensburg National Bank, now defunct, and is now a member of the Republican state central committee. As an expression of their appreciation of his services as a working and active member of the local Republican organization, the county central committee recently presented to Mr. Mires a cane crowned with gold from the Swauk district and engraved with an appropriate inscription. When Mr. Mires wishes to vary with pleasure the business cares of life, he goes to the mountains for a hunt, in which pastime he is an expert, having already to his credit six bears and several other specimens of "big game." John H. Mires was the father of the Ellensburg attorney and was born in Ohio in 1823, a descendant of the Bates and Livingston stock of New Englanders. The grandfather was Solomon Myers, the family name having been changed by later generations; he was of German extraction. He was with William Henry Harrison in 1811 when he fought the famous battle of Tippecanoe. The mother of Austin Mires was Anna (Deardorff) Mires, who was born in Ohio in 1818 and whose brother came to California with the Argonauts of 1849; she died in Spokane, Washington, in 1894. Her mother was a descendant of the Harshburgers, a Swiss family tracing its ancestry back for hundreds of years.

Mr. Mires was married March 5, 1884, to Miss Mary L. Rowland, daughter of J. and Hester E. (Simmons) Rowland, pioneers of Oregon, to which they immigrated in the forties, and where the wife was born May 24, 1862. Mrs. Mires' mother and stepfather, H. H. Davies, were among the first settlers in Yakima county. She has one sister, one brother and three half-sisters in the Northwest. Mr. Mires has two brothers, one half-brother, two sisters and three half-sisters: W. Byars, Benton Mires, of Drain, Oregon, John S. Mires, of Republic, Washington, Anna Bonham, of Tyler, Washington, and Addie Cole, of Spokane. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mires are Anna W., age seventeen, John R., age sixteen, and Eva H., age ten years. Mr. Mires is prominent in the lodges of Ellensburg, being a Mason, an Elk and an Eagle. He is a man of pleasing address and possesses rare social qualities, making friends of all with whom he comes in contact. His success in life is due to thorough education, excellent business capacity, indomitable energy, and in all his dealings with others, courage and uprightness.

FREDERICK D. SCHNEBLY. Thirty-three years ago, in 1870, F. D. Schnebly came from Walla Walla to the Kittitas valley and took up a homestead; since which time he has been closely identified with the public affairs of Ellensburg and of Kittitas county. In 1878, when Yakima county extended from the Klickitat line to British Columbia, Mr. Schnebly was elected sheriff on the Democrat's ticket. It was just previous to his first term of office that the massacre of the Perkins family and the subsequent Indian scare occurred; he was instrumental in the capture of the Indian murderers, executed three of their number, and assisted in the killing of the remainder. A detailed account of this massacre and of the capture and execution of the Indians will be found in the chronological history of the county. Before coming to the Yakima valley Mr. Schnebly was variously engaged in different parts of the west, having immigrated from Maryland to California in 1854, after the completion of his collegiate education at the Franklin and Marshal college, at Lancaster city, Pennsylvania. He remained in California, mining and trading, until 1858, when he organized a company and went to the Frazier river district. After spending some time in the mines of this section he went to Walla Walla and engaged in farming and trading; also in driving stock to the British Columbia mines. During the severe winter of 1862-63 all of his stock perished and he was forced out of the mine supply business. The five years intervening between 1865 and 1870 were spent in Helena, East Bannock and other Montana mining camps, where he followed both mining and trading, returning to Walla Walla and coming to the Kittitas valley, as previously stated, in 1870. In the fall of 1872 he stocked his Kittitas ranch with cattle and during his residence here brought all his supplies by wagon from Walla Walla and from The Dalles.

At the close of his second term as sheriff he returned to Ellensburg and for a number of years, until 1898, dealt in real estate, buying and selling lands in various parts of Kittitas county. Some time previous to this D. J. Schnebly, a cousin of our subject, who had for years been editor and proprietor of the Spectator at Oregon City, Oregon, established at Ellensburg a weekly newspaper which he called the Localizer. In 1898 F. D. Schnebly quit the real estate business and became editor and proprietor of the Localizer, which he conducted for several years as the only Democratic paper in Kittitas county. Although he has retired from active participation in political and business affairs, he has always been a leader of the local Democratic forces, declining since his terms as sheriff to become a candidate for other offices, but always taking part in local conventions and several times representing the county in state conventions. He has four times been a delegate to national editorial conventions and has for the fifth time been elected to serve in that capacity. He was one of the first members of the city council, serving in that body for many years; is a member of the Masonic fraternity; takes a lively interest in all public measures and is highly esteemed as a man of intellectual worth, excellent business judgment and commendable principles.

Mr. Schnebly is a native of Hagerstown, Maryland, where he was born June 27, 1832. His father was Daniel H. Schnebly, a farmer, born at Ashton Hall, on the Pennsylvania-Maryland state line. He was of German stock, his ancestors coming to this country from Switzerland several generations ago, his great-grandfather, a physician, settling on the homestead in Cumberland valley. The mother of our subject was Anna M. (Rench) Schnebly, a native of Maryland. Both parents have been dead many years. Among the pioneers of Kittitas county and of the Northwest there is none who has experienced more fully the ups and downs, the hardships and crude comforts of frontier life than has Mr. Schnebly, who began life in Kittitas valley with few neighbors and no conveniences, with little capital and with markets far removed from the field of his endeavors. That he has been successful is due alone to that courage, perseverance and honorable dealing so characteristic of many who braved the perils of the early sixties in the Northwest and opened the way for the later march of the forces of civilization.

BRIGGS F. REED. The first successful creamery man in Ellensburg and in Kittitas county, and an exceptionally successful business man, is B. F. Reed, the subject of this article. At the present time he is president of the Ellensburg Creamery Company, director of the State Dairy-men's Association, chairman of the business men's committee having in charge the proposed Highland canal for irrigating purposes, president of the Miller-Reed-Peas Company, of Seattle, dealers in dairy products, and, in addition to the performance of his duties in these various capacities, he buys stock for shipment to Seattle and speculates to a considerable extent in lands, besides keeping up, for his own use, several ranches that are well stocked with cattle, dairy cows being made a specialty. Mr. Reed occupies with his family a beautiful residence on the outskirts of Ellensburg, adjoining which is one of his stock ranches. He was born in Warsaw, Illinois, December 28, 1863. His father, W. H. Reed, was a stockman and merchant, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1830, and whence he removed in 1850 to Warsaw, Illinois, laying out in later years Reed's addition to that city. The elder Reed's father and grandfather were physicians and surgeons. Our subject's mother was Elizabeth Davis (Bliss) Reed, a native of Watertown, New York, where she was born in 1833; her family was closely connected with that of the noted evangelist singer, P. P. Bliss, and she was the descendant of a long line of professional men and women. In 1869, when Mr. Reed was six years old, his parents moved from Warsaw, Illinois, to Topeka, Kansas, and here he spent the earlier days of his youth and manhood, in the schools of the city and in the business house conducted by his father, commencing his business career at the age of sixteen. After spending his seventeenth year in the mines of Gunnison county, Colorado, he returned to Topeka, re-entering business with his father, and, a year later, came west via San Francisco to Portland, where he entered the service of the Northern Pacific railroad as private secretary to an official. He continued for several months in the employ of the railroad as check clerk, yard agent, shipping clerk in handling material for the line from Tacoma to Seattle, and in other capacities, at the age of nineteen having under his direction ninety of the company's men. Leaving the employ of the railroad he next spent two years in travel, endeavoring to recover his health, which had for some time been poor. He went first to British Columbia; from there by water to San Francisco, during the voyage narrowly escaping shipwreck; thence to Old Mexico; to St. Louis, and at the end of two years back to Topeka, where he again went into business with his father, who carried the largest stock of furniture in the city. He remained in full charge of this business until his twenty-sixth year, when he again found it necessary to travel that he might regain lost health. After two years of wandering, having exchanged his interest in the Topeka business for bank stock at Manhattan, Kansas, he came to Ellensburg in 1891, purchasing what is now the Grand Pacific hotel. Shortly afterward, however, he associated himself with C. I. Helm, under the firm name of Helm & Reed, and dealt for a time in imported blooded horses and cattle; organized the Okanogan Stage Company, which operated a continuous line of stages from Wenatchee to Virginia City and British Columbia, conducting at the same time a number of stock ranches. The financial panic of 1893 ruined the business of the firm, but Mr. Reed eventually recovered lost ground, and by the year 1895 was well established in the creamery business, having purchased the Ellensburg station and placed it on a solid financial basis; with its cheese factories and various separating plants, it is now one of the best systems in the state.

Mr. Reed was married in 1890 to Miss Harriet Burbank, a daughter of Joseph Burbank, of Topeka, Kansas. Mr. Burbank was a native of Canada; the mother of Mrs. Reed was a Washington. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Reed are Rainer F. and Winona B. Mr. Reed is a prominent Mason and a member of Knights Templar Commandery, No. 5, of Topeka, Kansas. He is recognized as one of the most successful business men of Ellensburg, and, because of his stock and creamery interests, is perhaps the most widely known business man in the county.

EDWARD PRUYN. Among the professional men of Ellensburg, and indeed of the state of Washington, Attorney Edward Pruyt is one of the highly respected and most successful. Receiving his early education in the common schools of Iowa, he next took a collegiate course at Iowa College and followed this with a post-graduate course in the Iowa State University, where he secured a degree. He was admitted to the practice of law in the supreme court of Iowa in 1877 and continued the practice of his profession in that state until 1878, when he came west, locating first in Yakima and remaining there until 1886, the date of his settlement in Ellensburg. During his residence in Yakima he was associated for a time in the practice of law with Attorney Reavis, removing eventually to Ellensburg in the hope of benefiting his health by the change of climate. He was in attendance upon the first term of court held in the new county of Kittitas in 1886 and has ever since attended strictly and exclusively to the practice of his profession in this and other county and district courts and in the supreme court of the state. Mr. Pruyt has had cases in nearly every session of the supreme court held in the past fifteen years, some of them involving most important principles, and in the majority of cases has secured decisions favorable to his clients, in many instances reversing the finding of the lower court on appeal. A few years ago Mr. Pruyt became interested in the Red Mountain mines, located between the Yakima and Cle-Elum rivers in the northwest part of the county, was in fact the promoter of the company which has done considerable development work in opening the mines. Although these mines are not yet on a paying basis from a miner's point of view, there is an abundance of ore in sight assaying good values and thus far eighteen claims have been taken on the mountain. There is reliable evidence that the mines will eventually develop into paying properties, thus adding materially to the wealth of the individual owners and indirectly to the wealth of the county.

Edward Pruyt was born near Troy, New York, in 1844. His father was Samuel Pruyt, a merchant, who was born near Troy, New York, in 1794 and died in 1889. The father's ancestors came from Holland in 1617 and settled at Albany, New York, they being among the first sixteen settlers locating in this part of the state. The paternal grandmother, Maria Van Ness, was given a grant of land by George III, near Hoosic, and on this old homestead the father and a brother were born. The father was in the War of 1812. The mother of our subject was Mary (Sears) Pruyt, who was born in Saratoga county, New York, and died in the early sixties; hers was a family of note at Searsport, Maine; she was a lineal descendant of the noted Richard Sears, an Englishman who came to the United States early in the seventeenth century and was prominent in the affairs of the old colonies. When Mr. Pruyt was twelve years old his parents moved from Troy, New York, to Iowa, where were spent the earlier years of his life. At sixteen years of age he entered the army, serving in the Civil war with Company K, 139th Illinois infantry, the regiment being engaged during the greater portion of its service in Kentucky, Tennessee and Missouri.

In 1882 Mr. Pruyt was married, in Ellensburg, to Mrs. Nellie (Chandler) Brooks, a native of Auburn, New York. Her father was Winthrop Chandler, whose mother was of the Winthrop family of Massachusetts. Mrs. Pruyt's mother was Elizabeth (White) Chandler, also native of Auburn, New York. Mrs. Chandler's grandfather, White, built the Auburn penitentiary and other state buildings, and later built a female seminary at Auburn in which his daughters became instructors. Mr. Pruyt's mother being one of them. Mr. Pruyt is a Republican and takes an active part in all campaigns; he has not been an office seeker, but has represented the party as candidate for county attorney. As a member of the law firm of Pruyt & Slemmons he is meeting with marked success in his profession.

WILLIAM EDWARD WILSON. Prof. William E. Wilson, principal of the state normal school at Ellensburg, and recognized as one of the ablest educators in the Northwest, was born March 26, 1847, among the hills of western Pennsylvania, in Beaver county, near the town of Zelenople. He is the son of Francis Thomas and Mary Ann (Morrison) Wilson. His ancestors on both sides came from the northern part of Ireland early in the eighteenth century. The Wilson ancestry lived for a time in Northampton county, afterward in Centre county, and in 1803 his grandfather crossed the Alleghenies with a pack train and settled in Beaver county. Mr. Wilson was brought up on the farm that had been cleared by his grandfather and father, his early life not differing widely from that of the average country youth, just prior to the War for the Union. His boyhood schooling was gained in a log house standing at the edge of a wood, which building was later replaced by a less primitive one of brick. From the beginning young Wilson was an apt student, and with no higher school education than that given by the common schools of the day, he began teaching at the age of eighteen, during the winter time in the country schools. The money thus gained he spent in his educational advancement, attending the state normal school at Edinboro, Pennsylvania, and subsequently the West Virginia state normal school at Huntington, and, having prepared himself for college in an academy at Jamestown, Pennsylvania, he entered Monmouth College, Illinois, where he took a classical course, and was graduated in 1873. He was at once appointed teacher of the natural sciences in the state normal school at Peru, Nebraska, to succeed Prof. H. H. Straight. In this position he labored for two years, a part of which time he was acting principal of the institution.

In 1875, Prof. Wilson went abroad to see the world and to study. He took a course in literature and history at Edinburgh University, and later toured on the continent and studied the educational systems of France, Germany, Switzerland and Belgium. Upon his return to the United States he taught in Morgan Park academy, Chicago, and subsequently became in turn principal of the high schools of Tekamah, North Platte and Brownville in the state of Nebraska. In 1881 he accepted the chair of natural science in Coe College, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, an institution just then chartered as a college under the synod of Iowa. He contributed largely to the work of establishing the institution upon a broad and progressive basis, and also entered actively into educational work in the state at large. In 1884 he was invited to the state normal school of Rhode Island, upon the recommendation of his former associate and friend, Gen. T. J. Morgan, who had become principal of that institution. He taught physics and the biological sciences, and assisted in administrative work, and later became teacher of pedagogy. In 1892 he was advanced to the principalship. During the six years of his administration the school passed through the period of its most rapid development. A training department was established upon a unique plan, which continues to be characteristic of the school system of the state. A new building for the school was erected during the years from 1895 to 1898, which cost more than $300,000, and which was at the time of its erection regarded as the most complete and suitable for its purpose in this country. In connection with his work as an educator, Prof. Wilson has held the office of superintendent of schools both in Nebraska and in Rhode Island, and has worked for the cause of higher education both with the pen and on the lecture platform; in each capacity he has been eminently successful.

On June 30, 1881, Prof. Wilson was married in Ceredo, West Virginia, to Miss Florence May Ramsdell, a native of Abington, Massachusetts. In 1858, she was taken by her parents to the place where she later met and married Prof. Wilson. Here she attended the grammar school, and afterwards the state normal school at Huntington, West Virginia. She then taught for a time, after which she finished her education at Hillsdale College, in Michigan. Her father was Zophar D. Ramsdell, a native of the state of Maine, and by occupation a shoe manufacturer. His paternal ancestor came from England in the seventeenth century. The ship on which he came was wrecked off the Massachusetts shore, and Mr. Ramsdell was forced to swim to land. He settled on the coast, north of Plymouth, and from this point his descendants spread to other parts of Massachusetts, and to Connecticut, and later to Maine, where Mrs. Wilson's father, Zophar D. Ramsdell, was born. When grown to manhood, Mr. Ramsdell removed to Abington, Massachusetts, and began manufacturing shoes. In 1858 he removed with his family to West Virginia, settling on the Ohio river at Ceredo. He took an active part in the heated political discussions of the time, and with ardent, loyal citizens of Wayne county, conducted a vigorous and successful campaign to prevent the county from voting for secession. His father had served in the Continental army, under Washington, and also in the War of 1812, and he was among the first to enlist in the War for the Union in 1861. He served throughout the war, first as quartermaster of the Fifth Virginia infantry and afterward as a brigade quartermaster in the Army of the Potomac; he was among those who witnessed the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox. After the war he was appointed by President Grant to establish post-offices in the reconstructed states, and afterward as a postal detective, in which capacity he traveled widely throughout the central and southern states. He died at Ceredo, West Virginia, in 1886.

Mrs. Wilson's mother, Almeda (Alden) Ramsdell, was the daughter of Chandler Alden, who was eighth in descent from the immortal John Alden. She still lives in Ceredo. Mrs. Wilson has one brother, William Ramsdell, who likewise lives at Ceredo, and three sisters, Mrs. J. H. Whorton, Lake City, Florida; Mrs. Cowley, Ceredo, West Virginia, and Mrs. Blood, Portsmouth, Ohio. Prof. Wilson has one brother, Charles Cist, and four sisters, Mrs. Anna Scott, wife of Rev. T. L. Scott, D. D., Jhelam, India; James Leibendorfer, Elwood, Pennsylvania; Mrs. J. W. Maxwell, of Celia, Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Samuel McKinney, Zelenople, Pennsylvania. To Prof. and Mrs. Wilson have been born five children: Ralph, born April 28, 1882; Florence Alden, born August 5, 1883; Stanley Ramsdell, and Francis Thompson, born August 23, 1887, and Carrie Lucile, born September 1, 1889. The eldest son, Ralph, died July 27, 1882.

In 1898 the board of trustees offered to Prof. Wilson the principalship of the state normal school at Ellensburg. This offer he accepted, and left Rhode Island at once to assume charge of that institution. His superior capabilities were soon felt in the school and recognized in the state. The prosperity of the school continued and increased, the faculty was strengthened, the course of study was revised and lengthened, and the accommodations improved. In 1899 the state legislature passed an act providing for opening the normal school at Whatcom, and for the support of the one at Cheney. Naturally, these two institutions located near the centers of population, and at the opposite ends of the state, drew from the attendance at the Ellensburg school. It has maintained its prestige and grown in favor as one of the leading normal schools of the Pacific slope. Prof. Wilson holds membership in the Beta Theta Pi, and in the Temple of Honor fraternities. Both he and his wife are social leaders in their chosen city.

R. LEE PURDIN. Among the citizens of Kittitas county who are filling positions of honor and trust, none is held in higher esteem than the county treasurer, R. L. Purdin. Mr. Purdin has been in the treasurer's office since January, 1897, first serving as deputy under C. H. Flummerfelt. In 1900 and in 1902 he was the regular nominee of the Democratic party for the office of treasurer and was both times elected. In 1896 he was appointed assistant postmaster at Ellensburg and served in this capacity until his appointment as deputy treasurer of the county. Previous to this period he was a teacher in the common schools of the county, having received his education in the State Normal at Ellensburg and in the common and high schools of North Yakima, to which place he came with his parents from Walla Walla in 1875. Mr. Purdin was born in Walla Walla in September, 1873. His father was James H. Purdin, a native farmer and horse dealer of Boone county, Missouri, where he was born in 1835. The father was of Irish extraction, his parents having immigrated early in the eighteenth century direct from the Emerald Isle. During the Civil war he was a member of the home guards, having been rejected from the regular army on account of physical disabilities. At the close of the war he crossed the Plains to Idaho, and after a few years spent about the mining camps of that region, still in the horse business, he eventually settled in Walla Walla. The wife and mother, Adaline (Cleman) Purdin, who still lives, was born in northwest Missouri, in 1846, her ancestors being of English descent.

In November, 1897, R. L. Purdin was married in Ellensburg to Miss Mary Huss, a daughter of Harvey Huss, who crossed the Plains with Mr. Purdin's father in 1864. Mr. Huss was born in Ohio in 1840 and the daughter in Canyon City, Oregon, in 1876. Mrs. Purdin's mother is a native of Missouri. The mother's name is Jane (Graham) Huss. The parents now live in the Kittitas valley. Mrs. R. L. Purdin has nine brothers and sisters, all living in Kittitas valley: William S., Katherine, Edward, James, Naomi, Osear, Frank, Bird T. and Anthony. Mr. Purdin has seven brothers living in North Yakima: Hugh B., Owen E., Lloyd W., Walter J. and Wallace A., twins, Charles J. and Ralph N. Mr. and Mrs. Purdin have two children, Edith and "Baby." The family is identified with the Presbyterian church, of which the parents are members. Mr. Purdin is a past chancellor commander of the Knights of Pythias and for four years has been clerk of the local camp of the Woodmen of the World. He has always been an active participant in both local and state politics and is at present a member of the state central committee of the Democratic party. He was for several years secretary of the county Democratic committee, and since he has been old enough to vote, has at all times been a hard working and an influential member of this party. He was a member of the city council for a time, but was compelled to resign this position because of the press of other duties. Having grown to manhood in the Yakima and Kittitas valleys, and being a close student of affairs, Mr. Purdin is familiar with the history of the settlement and development of this section of the country, with which he has become thoroughly identified. Besides having invested in farm lands here, he is an operator in the oil fields of California. Mr. Purdin has had a successful past and has a promising future.

SAMUEL T. PACKWOOD, whose home is two and one-half miles west of Ellensburg, came to the Kittitas valley in 1874. He was born in Platte county, Missouri, July 4, 1842, and previous to coming to Washington resided in Barry county, the same state. He is the son of John and Abigail (Tinder) Packwood, the former a native of Virginia. The elder Packwood was born February 22, 1804, and moved from Virginia to Jackson county,

Indiana, in 1825. He was married here in 1831 and in 1836 moved to Platte county, Missouri. In 1845 he crossed the Plains with his family, passing through the Willamette valley and locating on Puget Sound. From the Sound country he removed in 1849 to California and in 1853 returned to Barry county, Missouri, where he died in 1879. His wife, who was a native of Kentucky, died in 1852, during their residence in California, and was buried near Salmon Falls. Her parents were pioneers of Indiana. Samuel T. Packwood accompanied his parents across the Plains, both to and from the Northwest, and continued in the Missouri home until the outbreak of the Civil war, working on the farm and attending the common schools of his native county. In 1861 he enlisted in Shelby's division of Gen. Price's army and served until the spring of 1863, when he was captured by the Federals and taken to the government prison at Rock Island, Illinois. In 1864 he enlisted in Company K, Second U. S. volunteers, serving with this regiment until his honorable discharge, November 22, 1865, participating in the battles of Wilson Creek, Pea Ridge and many other noted engagements of the war. At the close of the war he returned to Missouri, settling in Barry county and engaging in farming and kindred pursuits. In 1874, by mule team conveyance, he crossed the Plains with his family, settling in West Kittitas valley, on what is still known as the S. T. Packwood homestead. In 1901 he removed to the S. R. Geddis place, also in West Kittitas, where he still resides. Mr. Packwood was married in Rocky Comfort, Missouri, December 24, 1860, to Miss Margaret F. Holmes, daughter of Oliver and Midia (Jones) Holmes, the father a native of Virginia and the mother of Mississippi. Both parents are dead. Mrs. Packwood has two sisters living in Ellensburg: Mrs. Modina Russell and Mrs. Ann Murray. Mr. Packwood has six sisters living: Mesdames Margaret Shaser, Lucinda Proctor, Melinda Smith, Elvira Lee, Elizabeth McClure, and Miss Mary Packwood. One brother, Isaac, and one sister, Ann, are dead. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Packwood are: John L., born September 29, 1861, living in Cle-Elum; Mrs. Colly Bradshaw, born June 4, 1874, now in Ellensburg; Oliver Franklin, born January 11, 1878, living in West Kittitas valley; Willam, born September 23, 1879, residing on the old homestead; Harvey and Harry (twins), born April 28, 1880, living at home. Samuel T., Jr., Farnetta and George W. (twins), and another daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Hollenbeck, are dead. Although making his home in the country, Mr. Packwood is identified with numerous business interests and maintains offices in Ellensburg. He has been prominent in the political as well as in the industrial history of the county; has served two terms as justice of the peace for West Kittitas; was active in securing legislation providing for the creation of Kittitas county, and, in 1883, was appointed one of the commissioners for the new county. At the first election held in Kittitas county, 1884, he was chosen sheriff; resigned as commissioner in December, 1884, and served as sheriff until 1889. For many years he has devoted his energies and his capital to the construction of irrigation canals throughout the county and he is a recognized leader in this field of enterprise. He has been closely identified with the construction of every canal of importance in the county, from the Tanum ditch, built in 1875, on which he worked for $1.50 per day, to the Cascade canal now building. Of the company having this great work in charge, he is president and principal stockholder. He was president of the Ellensburg Canal Company and of the West Side Canal Company. Mr. Packwood figured prominently in the pioneer life of the county; was chosen captain of the home guards during the Indian troubles of 1878 and has ever been an active factor in the development of the county's resources. Besides his extensive canal holdings, he is heavily interested in valley lands and in livestock, and owns one of the most comfortable homes in the valley. Politically, he is affiliated with the Democratic party. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and also belongs to the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is one of the most influential and highly esteemed pioneers of the Kittitas valley and of central Washington.

JOHN C. McCaULEY, M. D. Prominent in the medical fraternity and among the business men of Ellensburg is John C. McCauley, physician and surgeon, the subject of this biographical sketch. He was born March 29, 1861, in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, where the first four years of his life were spent. His father, Samuel D. McCauley, from whom the son evidently has inherited his choice of a profession, was born in Scotland, in 1820, and at the advanced age of eighty-three is spending his declining years at the home of his son in Ellensburg. From young manhood the father has followed the medical profession, practicing first near Mansfield, Ohio, then in Cedar Rapids, Iowa; in 1865 he emigrated from Iowa to Oregon, settling in Portland. He has ever been an active man in political affairs, being identified with the Republican party, first as one of its founders and subsequently as one of its most ardent and influential supporters. Bathsheba (Smith) McCauley, the mother, was born in the state of Iowa, 1829, and died in Cedar Rapids in 1895. She was of German and English extraction, her parents having been pioneers of Iowa and also of Oregon. Her father founded the Oregon Pottery Company of Portland, which his son, A. M. Smith, operated until the year 1901, when he died, leaving the valuable property in the hands of his son, A. M. Smith, Jr. This pottery, the oldest in Oregon, was established at Buena Vista, with headquarters in Portland. Shortly after coming to Portland the elder McCauley removed his family to Salem, where they lived until 1872; at that time the family took up its abode at Staten. There the subject of this biography grew to young manhood, receiving his early education in the public schools. From the public schools he went to the state university at Eugene and later attended the Willamette University, from the medical department of which he was graduated in 1884. Following his graduation, the young physician began the practice of his chosen profession at Brownsville, Oregon, where he was a successful practitioner for three years. Leaving Brownsville, he went to Seattle, where he remained a year, then became a resident of Ellensburg. Besides pursuing his profession with creditable success, Dr. McCauley has operated extensively in real estate since coming to Ellensburg, and is at the present time prominently identified with the mining interests of the state.

Dr. McCauley and Miss Maria Elizabeth Sprague, the daughter of Edward J. and Elizabeth (Lafferty) Sprague, of Portland, Oregon, were united in marriage in 1885, the ceremony taking place in the city mentioned. Mr. Sprague is a native of England. He came to Portland in 1878 and for many years filled the responsible position of superintendent of the Portland Iron Works machine shop. Mr. and Mrs. Sprague are now living in Washington. Dr. McCauley has only one sister, Mrs. E. B. Sellwood, who resides in Portland. Mrs. McCauley was born in Youngstown, Ohio, and came west with her parents in 1878. One son, John W., fifteen years of age, has blessed the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. McCauley. The family are members of the Episcopalian faith. Since coming to Ellensburg, Dr. and Mrs. McCauley have been closely connected with the social life of the city and have gathered around them a wide circle of loyal friends. Fraternally, the doctor is affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, Odd Fellows, Woodmen of the World and the Elks. Politically, he is an influential and active Republican and has been honored by his fellow men with the offices of mayor and councilman of Ellensburg. Probably no man in the city has been more interested in and closely allied with the upbuilding and advancement of his community than Dr. John C. McCauley.

WARREN A. THOMAS. Among the educators of central Washington, Warren A. Thomas, superintendent of public instruction in Kittitas county, is one of the most successful, both in the work of the schoolroom and in the organization of teachers and schools for the most effective work in the advancement of educational matters toward a higher degree of perfection. The fact that he has been twice elected to the same position is conclusive evidence of his special qualifications as an educator. Mr. Thomas came to Kittitas county in 1888 and settled in Ellensburg, since which time he has been almost continuously in school work. At one time he left the county, going to Port Orchard, on the Sound, where for eighteen months he was engaged in editing a weekly newspaper. With the exception of this short period, however, he has lived in Ellensburg, where his time has been spent in school work. In 1866 Mr. Thomas was the regular candidate, on the Fusion ticket, for county superintendent of schools and was elected. Two years later he was again the Fusion candidate, but was this time defeated. During his first term he became convinced that the country schools should and could be graded; that it would make the work of the teachers and the advancement of the pupils in every way more effective and satisfactory. In the work of grading these schools he met with a great deal of opposition, the country school boards not being in sympathy with the movement, believing it to be an innovation that would prove a hindrance rather than a help. This opposition is believed to have been responsible for his defeat in the second campaign. In 1900 he became the candidate of the Democratic party for the same position and was elected by a good plurality. For the second time he took charge of the office in August, 1901. During this term he has graded all the country schools of the county and has had the satisfaction of witnessing the complete success of his efforts and of receiving the approval of all the county boards. King county is the only other county in the state where the country schools have been successfully graded, and the superintendent of Kittitas county is certainly deserving of great credit for the accomplishment of this difficult task. His second term of office expired August 31, 1903. Mr. Thomas was born in Brown county, Illinois, December 28, 1861. James R. Thomas, his father, also a native of Brown county, now lives at Thorp, Washington. The father is a veteran of the Civil war; was a soldier of the 115th Illinois infantry, which was with General Thomas at Resaca, and in many other of the famous battles of the rebellion. The grandfather before him was a pioneer of Illinois and was in the War of 1812. James R. Thomas was a pioneer of Nebraska, the family having moved to Hamilton county, that state, in 1873. Warren Thomas' mother was Rachel A. (Cline) Thomas, a native of Indiana, where she was born in 1836; she is still living in Kittitas county. The parents of our subject first moved from Illinois to Missouri during his infancy; thence, at the close of the war, to Iowa, near Monroe, where the father operated a sawmill for a number of years. When the family moved to Hamilton county, Nebraska, in 1873, the father took a homestead, and here the son Warren grew to manhood, working on the farm and attending the common schools, beginning his career as a teacher at the age of nineteen. A few years later he learned telegraphy and worked for a time as an operator, but eventually took up his life work as a teacher.

In 1887 Mr. Thomas was united in marriage to Miss Bertha E. Shears, a daughter of George N. and Charlotte (Storrs) Shears, of New York, where Mrs. Thomas was born in 1860. Her parents are living at Norman, Oklahoma, the father being engaged in the mercantile business. He is a veteran of the Civil war; is a skilled mechanic and a successful inventor. Mr. Thomas has three brothers living; James, at Cle-Elum; Ira E., an Oregon farmer, and Charles, a teacher, who lives at Thorp. His sisters are Ella, Anna (deceased), Alice and Nora. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas, all of whom are at home, are Francis, Myrtle, Florence L., Sylvan and Frances I. Mr. Thomas is a member of the Modern Brotherhood of America; is independent in his political views; is public spirited and keeps well posted on educational and other matters that occupy the minds of the thoughtful and progressive men of the day. He is the editor and publisher of the School Bulletin, which was established in 1901, and is devoted to educational affairs purely. Mr. Thomas is esteemed by all as a man of learning and especial executive ability, and is one of the foremost citizens of Ellensburg.

JULIUS CAESAR HUBBELL, manager of the Ellensburg Water Supply Company, dealer in real estate and insurance agent, is one of the unique characters of his town. He was born in Clinton county, New York, June 4, 1863. His father, John W. Hubbell, is still living in New York, his native state, at the age of seventy-five. Mr. Hubbell, Sr., at one time held the office of colonel in the Thirty-second New York infantry. The subject's grandfather and namesake was once numbered among the wealthiest men of New York; and his great-grandfather has the honor, during the Revolutionary war, of marching and serving under Gen. George Washington's command. The line of ancestors numbers Richard Hubbell, one of the famous Mayflower's passengers. J. C. Hubbell's mother was, before her marriage, Miss Margaret Beckwith, daughter of Judge Beckwith of the county of Clinton, New York, and she as well as her husband boasted a good, patriotic family, for her mother's father was Gen. Benjamin Moores, a commander at the battle of Plattsburgh in the War of 1812. J. C. Hubbell passed his boyhood in the state of his birth. At the age of twenty-two he was graduated from Williams college, whereupon he assumed the position of chemist of the Crown Point Iron Company. Later, he occupied a like position in the employ of the Chautauquay (Oregon) Iron Company. In the spring of '93 Mr. Hubbell came to Ellensburg under engagement to take the management of the Ellensburg Water Supply Company, which position he still holds. Besides his work for the water company, Mr. Hubbell has carried on an extensive insurance business. That his executive ability and capacity for business are recognized by his constituents is shown by the fact that upon the Kittitas Valley National Bank's becoming insolvent he was appointed by the court to act in the capacity of receiver, July 10, 1896, and in a creditable and satisfactory manner he closed up the business of that defunct institution.

June 11, 1880, Julius Caesar Hubbell was united in marriage to Miss Carrie L. Loomis, a member of a prominent old Massachusetts family. Mrs. Hubbell was born in Springfield, Massachusetts, and is a college graduate. She is a niece of Judge Hoyt, a widely known jurist of St. Albans, Vermont. To Mr. and Mrs. Hubbell have been born four children; Wolcott, Francis, Beckwith and Ruth. The father himself is a member of a family of eleven children. The religious connections of the family are with the Congregational church. In politics Mr. Hubbell has always taken an active interest. He is allied with the Republican party. During his residence in Ellensburg the subject has accumulated a considerable amount of valuable property, being the owner of the Geddis block and the Brick Bank building, the only brick building left from the fire of 1889 in Ellensburg, and several hundred acres of choice valley land, besides one of the handsomest homes in the city.

THOMAS F. MEAGHER. The proprietor of the People's meat market at Ellensburg, Washington, has had an adventurous career. Son of Nicholas Meagher, a California pioneer who crossed the Plains at the time of the gold excitement, Mr. Meagher started out to battle with the world when but ten years of age. His father was a resident pioneer of Shasta, California, where Thomas Meagher was born March 16, 1853. His mother died when Thomas was a small child and he was taken to raise by outside people and has never been with his own folks since. He worked on a farm and when he had a chance he attended school. When he was eighteen years old he went to work for wages, the first he ever received, and from that time on was independent. His father, in the meantime, had located at Port Angeles, Washington, and owned nearly the whole town, so he went there for a year. He remained at different places on Puget Sound for about eight years, and in 1877 he moved to Ellensburg. That was at the time of the Indian war. In partnership with Mr. Kenneth he ran a threshing machine in Kittitas county for three years and took up a farm. Later he spent several years riding the range and then went into partnership with J. H. Smithson in the butchering business. They were partners for seven years.

and supplied meat to the railroad contractors at the time the road was built into Ellensburg. In 1885 he sold out to his partner and started mining in the Swauk district. He was the discoverer of Williams creek. The town of Meagherville was named in his honor. He took out about $65,000 from the Discovery and Teresa claims, which he worked until 1898, when he sold them at a good price. He still owns a part of the Bigney mine and the town of Meagher. He returned to Ellensburg and engaged in copper mining at Mount Stuart. He was also in the fish business for a year, and disposed of it. Then he started up his present butcher business. William Rhempke, his partner, died a few days after they started out, and Mr. Meagher bought the interest of the estate and has since conducted it alone.

Mr. Meagher was married in 1885 to Elizabeth Mitchels, a native of Minnesota. Her parents, Martin and Margaret Mitchels, are natives of Germany, and are pioneer residents of the Kittitas country, owning a farm near Ellensburg. They have four children, Martin and Marguerite, who are attending school, and Louis and Agatha. The family are members of the Catholic church. Mr. Meagher is a Republican and an active party worker. He attends caucuses and conventions and is at present a member of the Ellensburg city council, representing the second ward. In addition to his butcher business he has large mining interests and owns considerable farm and city property.

FREMONT L. CALKINS is the principal of the public schools, at Ellensburg, Washington, a position he has filled with conspicuous success since 1901. Since his graduation from the Northern Indiana Normal school at Valparaiso, in 1882, Mr. Calkins has been constantly engaged in his profession with unvarying success. The high reputation of the city schools of Ellensburg is a testimony to his ability as an educator. Mr. Calkins was born in Knox county, Illinois, February 12, 1860. His father, Albert Calkins, born in New York in 1808, was a pioneer Illinois farmer, having bought land from the government and settled in that state in 1836. He was of English descent and traced his ancestry back to 1636. He died in 1896. Mr. Calkins' mother, Lois M. (Park) Calkins, was born in Massachusetts in 1815 and died in 1887. She was of Welsh extraction. Her ancestors were early settlers in Massachusetts. Mr. Calkins grew to manhood in Illinois, working on his father's farm and attending the common schools. He graduated from the normal school in 1882 and was in turn principal of the Chatsworth, Illinois, schools for four years; of the Chenoa, Illinois, schools for two years; at Gilson, Illinois, for a year; at Washington, Illinois, for five years, and at Delavan, Illinois, for seven years, before coming to Washington to accept his present position. He has four brothers living: Calvin, of Mount Pleasant, Iowa; Leonard, of Oneida, Illinois; Leroy, of Galesburg, Illinois, and Dwight, of Cambridge, Nebraska.

Mr. Calkins was married in 1895 to Hellen P. Parker, a native of Fredonia, New York, who was educated in that city and in the State Normal school there, and who taught for a number of years. Mrs. Calkins was the daughter of J. J. and Mary (Wheelock) Parker. Her father was a member of the firm of Parker & Co., large seed dealers of Fredonia. Her mother was the daughter of Rev. Dr. Wheelock, a noted divine of the Baptist church and an extensive traveler. Mr. and Mrs. Calkins have five children, named Frederick Park, Forrest F., Frances Mary, Julius Brown, and Norman Floyd Calkins. Husband and wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Calkins is a Mason and a Knight Templar and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America. He is a member of the Republican party. He owns a fine ranch near Ellensburg.

CAPTAIN ALFRED C. STEINMAN. One of the substantial business houses of Ellensburg is that of Steinman, Bros., grocers, which was established in 1898. Alfred C. Steinman, of this firm, has had an interesting history, which we take pleasure in publishing in this volume. Born in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 2, 1862, he was taken by his parents when two years old to Waubashaw county, Minnesota, where until his sixteenth year he worked on the farm and attended the district schools. At this age he entered the city schools, completing eventually the high school course and teaching one term after graduation. He then went into a general merchandise store, clerking for seven years, at the end of which period he came to the Pacific coast, settling soon afterward in Ellensburg, where for eight years he was associated with Mr. Stowell in the dry goods and grocery business. In 1898 the partners dissolved, Mr. Steinman taking the groceries, and with his brother, William, establishing the business in which the two have since been engaged. He has been connected with the National Guard since 1890, a good portion of the time as the captain of the Ellensburg company, and in 1898, the entire company offering its services to the state, it was mustered into the United States forces as Company H, First Washington infantry, U. S. volunteers. Mr. Steinman remaining the captain of the company during its period of service in the Spanish war. October 28 he shipped with the company from Presidio, California, reaching Manila December 1st. The force spent two hundred and thirty-six days on the firing line and took part in engagements around Manila, at Laguna de Bay, Pasig, Petaros, Morong, Tay Tay, Montaloupe, Calamba, Santa Cruz and other places. For nine months Captain Steinman commanded a battalion as acting major, on a major's pay, while in the field. The company left Manila September 3d, arriving at San Francisco October 11, 1899, and, taking advantage of Senator Levi Ankeny's generous offer, sailed for Seattle on the vessel Queen, which the senator had chartered for this purpose. Arriving again at Ellensburg, Captain Steinman re-entered business with his brother at the old stand, where they are enjoying a prosperous trade. Mr. Steinman is now captain of Company C, Washington National Guard, organized under his directions at Ellensburg May 27, 1903.

Mr. Steinman was married in 1887 to Jennie Reynolds, a native of Winona, Minnesota, where her mother is still living, her father having died many years since. Mr. Steinman has two brothers and three sisters: Christian John, Mary and Lucy, living in Minnesota; Anna, living in Washington, and William, the partner, at Ellensburg.

The parents of Alfred Steinman are Christian and Mary (Wheeler) Steinman, both natives of Switzerland, where the father was born in 1829. They were married in their native land and came to the United States in 1851, settling in Minnesota and engaging in farming, the father also working for a time at his trade, that of a wagon maker. He cleared a farm here, which he conducted with the assistance of his older sons. The ancestors of the mother were educators in Switzerland for several generations through which she traces her lineage. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Steinman are members of the Methodist church. Mr. Steinman is a Republican and keeps well posted on the varied issues of the day; he was the candidate of the Republican party for county treasurer in 1900, but failed of election. He is president of the board of education and has been connected with that body for the past twelve years. He believes in affording the best possible educational facilities to the youths of city and country and is untiring in his efforts for advancement in this direction. Mr. and Mrs. Steinman own a pleasant home in Ellensburg and are held in high esteem by a large circle of friends and neighbors. One pleasant event in Captain Steinman's life which he remembers with pride is the visit of President Roosevelt to Ellensburg on his tour of the west in the summer of 1903. With that feeling of comradeship which one brave soldier holds for another, President Roosevelt upon alighting from the train called for Captain Steinman, and after a hearty greeting and complimentary remarks insisted upon his being seated upon the platform while he made his address.

burg to require mention in this volume for commercial reasons. It is not the purpose of this article to make special mention of the business, but to write biographies of Mr. and Mrs. Elwood as representative citizens of Ellensburg. Harry S. Elwood was born April 4, 1866, in Leesburg, Ohio. His father is Clark Elwood, who was also born in Leesburg, Ohio, in 1839; he is now a resident of Ellensburg and, like his son, has been in the drug business. The paternal grandfather, Robert Elwood, was a pioneer of Ohio. He had three brothers in the Civil war, one a private, one a surgeon and the third a captain. The mother of Harry Elwood was Charlotte (Hiskay) Elwood, a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1839; her parents were natives of the same state and were pioneers of Jasper county, Iowa; she had one brother, Jehu, in the Civil war. Her father still lives, at the age of eighty-six. The subject of this biography spent his early life in the public schools of Leesburg, Ohio; attended school later at Cincinnati, taking a regular course in pharmacy, and, at the age of twenty, returned to Leesburg, where he established himself in the drug business. After a short time he moved to Washington Court House, continuing in the same business. In 1887 he came west, settling in Ellensburg, and accepting a position in the drug store of G. B. Heuton, remaining in his employ for several years. In 1895 he formed a partnership with W. V. Stephens, but in 1897 purchased Mr. Stephens' interest in the firm and has since been sole proprietor; he has built up an excellent trade and enjoys the patronage of the best citizens.

In 1888 Mr. Elwood married Miss Florence Kinzer, a native of Ohio, who died in 1892. In 1898 he married Miss Elvira Marquis, a native of Pulaske, Pennsylvania. Mrs. Elwood was educated in the high schools and in the Normal of her native state and at once became an instructor; was for six years a teacher in the State Normal at Beaver Falls, and for five additional years in the Indiana (Pennsylvania) Normal. She came to Washington to accept a position as instructor in the State Normal at Ellensburg and continued for five years in charge of the department of literature. She has served two years as recording secretary, and two years as president, of the Washington State Federation of Women's Clubs; she is also an active worker in the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Elwood is the daughter of Andrew Marquis, a farmer and a native of Lawrence county, Pennsylvania; he was of the Neerar stock, of Pennsylvania, of Scotch-Irish descent, and died when the daughter was a child. Her mother was Saphronia (Dickey) Marquis, a native of Sharon, Beaver county, Pennsylvania; she died in December, 1858. The mother was descended from the Adams family of Massachusetts, Captain Benjamin Adams, of Revolutionary fame, being an ancestor. The maternal grandfather, John Dickey, was a prominent politician of Pennsylvania, a member of the state constitutional convention, of the state legislature and, in later years, a member of congress for several terms from western Pennsylvania. At the time of his death he was United States marshal for the state. His son, Oliver J. Dickey, was a law student under Thad. Stevens and eventually succeeded Mr. Stevens in congress. Another son, Charles Dickey, organized a company and served as its captain in the Civil war under General Logan, and was breveted major at the close of the war. Andrew Marquis' brother, D. C. Marquis, is now professor of Hebrew in the McCormick Theological Seminary of Chicago. Mrs. Elwood has a brother, Charles, living in Philadelphia, and a sister, Mrs. Lydia Brothers, in Tacoma. John L. Elwood, a physician of Tygh Valley, Oregon, and Robert W. Elwood, a farmer near Ellensburg, are brothers of Harry S. Elwood. Mr. and Mrs. Elwood have one daughter, Lucile. Mr. Elwood holds membership in the fraternal orders Knights of Pythias and Woodmen of the World. He is a Republican, but not an active politician. By close attention to business and by adherence to honorable methods in all his dealings with others, Mr. Elwood has made a success of life and has earned the lasting friendship and esteem of all his associates.

DAVID MURRAY, a pioneer and son of a pioneer, having done his share and more toward the "winning of the west," had retired from active business to devote his entire attention to caring for his large interests, at his home in Ellensburg, Washington, when the death message called him from the scene of action June 8, 1904. Mr. Murray was born in Montville, Waldo county, Maine, in October, 1831. His father was a native of Maine, where he was a farmer and merchant. He was a pioneer in Iowa, moving to Dallas county in 1856, where he died in the early nineties. He was an active Republican and a temperance man, and had served as selectman of the town. His wife, Rhoda (Clifford) Murray, was a native of New Hampshire. She died in the early nineties, also after fifty-six years of married life. David Murray was educated in the common schools of Maine and learned the trade of stone cutter. He left there and came around the Horn to California in 1852-3, traveling in the ship Queen of the East, on which the dry dock was brought to the Mare Island navy yard, where he worked for a time. Later he engaged in mining, lumbering and farming. At the time of the placer gold excitement he joined in the rush to the Frazier river fields in 1862. His business instincts induced him to take up a farm on the banks of the Frazier river, from which he furnished supplies to the miners. When he disposed of the ranch in 1868 he had made about $10,000. After a visit east he came to the Yakima valley and settled in Parker Bottom and engaged in stock raising. Having the necessary means to engage in the business extensively, he ranged his cattle on the hills as far as Kittitas county. He was living on his ranch there at the time of the Indian uprising in 1877, when his neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Perkins, were murdered by Indians at Rattlesnake Springs, only twenty miles away. In 1883 he moved from Parker Bottom to Ellensburg. Here he made his headquarters until the time of his death. He was a successful stockman, ranging as high as four thousand head of cattle at one time and branding as many as one thousand head of calves in a season. He sold out the cattle business about ten years ago.

Mr. Murray was married in 1878 to Minnie May, who died in 1883. His present wife was Miss Catharine Mayer, a native of Pennsylvania and raised at Elmira, New York, who was employed for a number of years as bookkeeper in a large Elmira drygoods store. Mr. Murray's only brother, Alfred, is a retired merchant, living at Rockland, Maine. One sister, Mrs. Eliza Peppard, lives in Iowa and the other, Mrs. Ella O'Dell, is a resident of North Dakota. Mr. Murray was an active and energetic Republican and served as a member of the Yakima county board of commissioners for several years and was also a member of the Ellensburg city council. He was progressive in his educational ideas and had much to do toward securing fine school buildings for the city where he lived. At the time of his death he owned in real estate a 200 acre farm adjoining town, and also the Murray addition to Ellensburg, which, in addition to looking after numerous loans and investments, occupied his time. He was an enthusiast concerning the Kittitas country, particularly regarding its advantages for stock raising and farming, in which pursuits he acquired his fortune, and always contended that it was the best country on earth for an industrious poor man to get to the front in.

REV. WILLIAM PARK, the pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal church of Ellensburg, Washington, determined when a youth to become a merchant. For five years he was in business as a druggist, becoming thoroughly qualified as a pharmacist and studying medicine, when, at the age of twenty-two, he determined upon religious work, feeling that he was called to this higher walk in life. He was born in Windsor, Ontario, March 18, 1865, being the son of Joseph and Isabella (St. Clair) Park, both natives of Scotland. His father was a marine engineer and for thirty-three years prior to his death in 1899 was chief engineer of the car boats running between Detroit and Windsor. Mr. Park first engaged in evangelistic work in Canada and later extended his field to the New England states. For eleven years he labored in this line, seeing hundreds of souls brought to Christ through his efforts.

Mr. Park was married in 1890 at Windsor to Jennie Nister, daughter of James and Anna M. (Boise) Nister, both natives of Holland, in which country Mrs. Park was born. Her parents came to this country when she was an infant and her father was a successful merchant at Grand Rapids, Michigan. Mrs. Park was converted at the age of seventeen years and at once began active Christian work. Three years later she was engaged in evangelistic work in Michigan and Indiana. She followed this line of endeavor four years with much success. She then met Mr. Park and they united in a double sense, joining in heart and hand and in a common effort for Christ's cause. The ill-health of Mrs. Park brought their labors in the evangelistic field to a close. Rev. Mr. Park was first admitted to the Northern Minnesota conference and took his first charge at Ada, a county seat in the Red River valley, where the church had been abandoned. In his three years there he built a fine church for the congregation and restored and built up the membership. He then took a three months' vacation, traveling in California, and then in March, 1902, took up the work at Ellensburg, which he has since prosecuted with untiring vigor. The work has grown under his ministrations and he never fails of a hearing when he preaches, a large attendance being the rule at his preaching and prayer service, as well as on all other occasions. He is a man of ability and has ever been a consistent and vigorous fighter of sin in high places. He has been agitating the question of open saloons on Sunday and vigorously denouncing it from the pulpit. The congregation of the church not only meets all its own bills promptly, but is a liberal contributor to outside work. Mr. Park has two sisters and two brothers living at the old home town, Windsor, Ontario. The sisters are Mrs. Jonathan Robson and Miss Mary Park. The brothers are James Park, an engineer, and Albert Park. Mrs. Park's parents are dead. Four sisters survive. One, who by adoption bears the name of Miss Elizabeth Jones, is a deaconess at St. James' M. E. church in Chicago. Mrs. J. C. Long, another sister, is also a resident of Chicago. Mrs. E. L. Knowlton, who resides in Connecticut, and Mrs. Jessie Wiseman, of Oregon, are the other sisters.

JERRY W. VANDERBILT. Kittitas county is distinctively a stockman's country, and many of the pioneers of the county are indebted for the comforts of life they now enjoy to the profits of the stock raising industry, in which they have been engaged for many years. Prominent among the stockmen of the county, and one who has been especially successful in the business, is J. W. Vanderbilt, who has had cattle and sheep on the Kittitas ranges for seventeen years. First engaging in the business in Oregon, where he bought a band of sheep in 1885, he came with his stock to the Kittitas valley in 1887 and, until 1901, devoted his time almost exclusively to stock raising, at the same time adding yearly to his landed possessions in various parts of the county. Before coming to Washington Mr. Vanderbilt had been a resident of Oregon, Illinois and New Jersey. He was born at Rocky Hill, Somerset county, New Jersey, in 1852. His father was Peter Vanderbilt, a farmer and carpenter, who was born in 1822, at Flatbush, Long Island, and who died in 1901. The paternal grandmother was a member of the noted Beekman family that settled on Long Island generations ago. The mother of J. W. Vanderbilt was Sarah (Hutchinson) Vanderbilt, a native of New Jersey and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. J. W. Vanderbilt spent his boyhood and early manhood days in New Jersey, where he attended the common schools and worked on the farm. At seventeen he began doing for himself, conducting at this time a large farm on the Raritan river belonging to a cousin, a lady of considerable property and a descendant of the Beekman family. This farm was the old homestead of the Beekmans and Mr. Vanderbilt was the seventh generation to live on the place. He continued here seven years, then went to Illinois, expecting to remain away for a few months only, but prolonging his stay to two years, at the end of which period, instead of returning to New Jersey, he went first to California; then to Portland, Oregon; then to The Dalles, where for several years he worked on stock ranches, eventually investing in sheep and, as has been stated, coming to the Kittitas valley in 1887. Among other landed possessions, he owns a fine farm east of Ellensburg, which he purchased in 1892 and, in addition to this, in 1900, he became the owner of the Vanderbilt Hotel, in Ellensburg.

Mr. Vanderbilt was married in 1902 to Mrs. Henrietta English, a native of Iowa. For six years previous to the marriage she had been engaged in the millinery business in Albany, Oregon. Her father was Warren Lucre, a stonemason and a native of Pennsylvania; he was among the Argonauts of '49 in the California mines and was for several years a successful miner; he died of dropsy in Sacramento. In his earlier days he did considerable mason work on the Capitol building at Washington, D. C. Mrs. Vanderbilt crossed the Plains with her mother to Virginia City, Montana, in 1865. The mother of Mrs. Vanderbilt was Mary (Wright) Lucre, a native of Washington, D. C.; the year of her death was 1888. Mrs. Lucre's father was a soldier of the Revolution and died at its close while on his way home. Mrs. Vanderbilt has one brother living: Warren Lucre, of Minneapolis, Minn., and four sisters: Millissa Williams, Eliza Stuart, Truelove McCarthy, and Lydia Gleason. Mr. Vanderbilt's brothers and sisters are: Samuel, Summerville, New Jersey; Elizabeth Abbott; Cornelius, Kittitas county; Aaron R., Amsterdam, New York; Etha Chase, Princeton, New Jersey; Edward, Kittitas county. William, an elder brother, is dead. Mrs. Vanderbilt is a member of the Presbyterian church. Politically, Mr. Vanderbilt is a Republican, but does not take active interest in politics. His straightforward methods and correct principles have won for him the respect of friends, and his energy and business capacity have enabled him to accumulate a fair share of this world's goods; in addition to the Vanderbilt hotel and to his extensive holdings in livestock, he owns 700 acres of land in the valley. He is one of the very successful stockmen of Kittitas county.

SEVERIN C. BOEDCHER. No higher compliment can be paid American institutions than that which is implied in the fact that many of the more intelligent men of foreign birth find in these institutions much that is conducive to the higher development and to the rapid advancement of the individual in commercial and in professional pursuits. Severin C. Boedcher was born in Denmark in 1868 and remained in his native land until his twentieth year; his boyhood days were spent in the primary, normal and high schools of that country, and when they were completed he became a teacher, continuing in this profession only a short time, however, when he entered the army in compliance with the provisions of the military laws of the country, remaining in the service the allotted number of years. His military career ended and he received his discharge from the army in December, 1888. He had always held liberal views regarding the relations that should exist between the government and the governed and believed the United States offered better opportunities to the young man seeking preferment than were offered in his native land. January 11, 1889, he started for America, coming direct to Olympia, where he eventually took out naturalization papers. After his arrival in this country he spent five years in the logging camps, studying diligently during leisure hours to master the language of his adopted country. In this he was remarkably successful; not satisfied, however, with the superficial knowledge he was able to acquire by intercourse with his daily associates, he sought more accurate scholarship in the schools, going first to the Los Angeles Normal in 1895 and attending one term. In 1897 he entered the State Normal at Ellensburg, remaining a student during two terms, following which he taught school for one term. In 1898 he was appointed deputy auditor of Kittitas county, holding the position until June, 1902, at which time he determined to engage in the real estate business and resigned his deputyship for this purpose. He has found the real estate business congenial and remunerative and continues one of the most active and successful agents in the valley. He holds a commission as a notary public.

The parents of S. C. Boedcher are Peter and Anna (Brogger) Boedcher, the former born in 1843, the latter in 1847, and both still living in Denmark. The Ellensburg townsman was married in 1867 to Mary A. Crew, who was born in Illinois and grew to womanhood in Iowa. Mrs. Boedcher received her education in the common and high schools of Iowa, finishing with the regular course in the Cedar Falls Normal. She holds a life teacher's certificate and was for ten years engaged in school work. Her parents are both dead. Christen, Mary, Christina, Carrie, Christian, Peter and Doratha are brothers and sisters of Mr. Boedcher living in Denmark; James Boedcher is another brother living in Ellensburg. Hazel, Laverna and Florence are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Boedcher. The fraternal instinct is strong in Mr. Boedcher, and he holds membership in the I. O. O. F., the M. W. A., and the B. A. Y. and the Royal Neighbors. Mr. and Mrs. Boedcher are members of the M. E. church. Aside from his real estate business Mr. Boedcher has varied interests; he is one of the proprietors of the Ellensburg Steam Laundry; he is interested in the Western Coal & Iron Company of Tacoma; he is secretary of the Ellensburg Business Men's Club; he also owns a small tract of land adjoining town. He is actively progressive in all public and private affairs, being especially interested in the educational institutions of the community, believing firmly in education as the foundation of all progress.

JOHN A. SHOUDY, JR. Not many of the business or professional men in any of the townships of the Yakima valley have the distinction of having been born in the valley. Although settlements were made here in the sixties they were not as a rule by men who became permanent residents, and the period of active and permanent settlement did not commence until a decade later; it is not therefore surprising that but comparatively few now live in the valley who claim it as their place of birth. J. A. Shoudy is one of the few business men of Ellensburg who are native residents; he was born here July 26, 1873, and, with the exception of three years spent away at school and a short time spent in Roslyn and Cle-Elum, he has been a life-long resident of this, his native town. In his boyhood days he attended the Ellensburg public schools, following this later with a course in the old academy and then entering the State University at Seattle, where he took a three years' course from 1893 to 1896. In the fall of the year 1896 he became agent for the Northern Pacific Coal Company at Ellensburg, a year later going to Roslyn and afterward to Cle-Elum and taking charge of the company's stores. Returning to Ellensburg October 1, 1900, he purchased Frank Bossong's interest in the bakery and grocery business and formed a partnership with his brother-in-law, Earnest Koepke, under the firm name of Koepke & Shoudy, in which firm he is still the junior member. From the beginning they have had an excellent trade and they have developed into one of the substantial business houses of the city. The father of the subject of this article was John A. Shoudy, Sr., who is commonly spoken of as the father of Ellensburg. He was born in Pawpaw, Illinois, in 1842, and died in Ellensburg in 1901. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving as sergeant of Company K, Seventy-fifth Illinois infantry. At the close of the war he came by way of the Isthmus to Seattle in 1865; going later from Seattle to California and in 1870 coming to Ellensburg. At that time the town had no distinctive, legitimate name, but was known among cattle men and miners as "Robbers' Roost"; for what reason we are unable to state. The town was eventually named for Ellen Shoudy, the wife of J. A. Shoudy, Sr., and the mother of our subject. Here in 1870 Mr. Shoudy, Sr., bought out Jack Splawn, who had some years before established a trading post at the present site of the town, and during that fall made six trips back and forth to and from Seattle, bringing in goods for the store. The business was conducted under the firm name of Shoudy & Dennis, Mr. Dennis being the partner. Mr. Shoudy, Sr., was a prominent figure in the early history of Ellensburg and of Yakima and Kittitas counties. He was postmaster for several years; represented old Yakima county in the legislature in 1883 at the time of the formation of Kittitas county, being elected on that issue; was a delegate to the constitutional convention; was for two terms mayor of Ellensburg; was prominent in the settlement of the Indian troubles in 1877. As an inducement to the Northern Pacific railroad to build through Ellensburg, he, with others, bought and deeded to the company 120 acres of land in Shoudy's second and third additions to the town, with 200 feet additional right of way and a block for machine shop purposes. He also gave to the company one-half of his town property. The mother of J. A. Shoudy, Jr., is Mary Ellen (Stuart) Shoudy, a native of Kentucky, where she was born in 1846. With her brother, Mrs. Shoudy crossed the Plains in an early day to California; she is still living.

J. A. Shoudy, Jr., was married December 17, 1898, to Ollie Davis, a native of Missouri and a daughter of Addison H. and Hattie A. (Umber) Davis, both now living in Seattle. Mr. Davis is a retired Methodist Protestant minister. Dexter Shoudy, a brother of our subject, is general sales agent for the Northwestern Improvement Company at Spokane; another brother, Chester, also lives in Spokane; Loyal is in school in Seattle. He has three sisters: Laura Armstrong and Etta Koepke, of Ellensburg, and Lillie Jenkins, of St. Louis. Mr. and Mrs. Shoudy have one son, John Addison, three years of age, and one daughter, Helen. The father and mother are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Shoudy is an active Republican. In addition to his Ellensburg business he has mining interests at Blewett and recently sold one claim for $6,000; he also owns a fine farm five and one-half miles northeast of town. He is one of Ellensburg's most respected citizens.

DEXTER SHOUDY, proprietor of the Palmerston hotel, Spokane, was born in Seattle, Washington, August 21, 1868. He is the eldest son of John A. and Mary Ellen (Stuart) Shoudy, the former a native of Illinois, where he was born December 14, 1842, and the latter a native of Kentucky, where she was born in 1846. John A. Shoudy, Sr., died in Ellensburg May 25, 1901. His wife was a pioneer of California, as well as of Washington, having crossed the Plains with her parents in early days, and is still living. John A. Shoudy, Sr., was one of the most honored and respected pioneers of the Kittitas valley and his biography will be found on another page of this work. In 1870 he purchased of Jack Splawn the log cabin and trading post located on the present site of Ellensburg and engaged in trading with the Indians and cattle men. Two years later, in 1872, he moved his family, consisting of wife, his son Dexter and his daughter Laura, from Seattle to the trading post, and here Dexter Shoudy grew to manhood. He attended the public schools of Ellensburg and at a very early age began clerking for his father in the store, at times also looking after his father's herd of horses on the range. In later years he acquired a practical knowledge of bookkeeping and assumed management of his father's business. In 1888, at the age of twenty, he became half owner of the Ellensburg electric light plant and also of the city flouring mills, taking an active part in the management of both enterprises.

In 1890, Mr. Shoudy was married in Seattle to Miss Hattie A. Johnson, a native of Rockland, Washington, where she was born September 3, 1868. Mrs. Shoudy is the daughter of Thomas and Anna (Connell) Johnson, the father now a citizen of Cle-Elum. Thomas Johnson was a pioneer of Goldendale, Washington, and came to Ellensburg many years ago, engaging in the merchandise business. Mrs. Shoudy's mother was a native of Canada. Mr. and Mrs. Shoudy were schoolmates in Ellensburg. Mrs. Shoudy has one sister and two brothers: Mrs. Elizabeth Dickson of Ellensburg; Edward and William Johnson of Cle-Elum. Mr. Shoudy has brothers and sisters as follows: Mrs. Laura Armstrong, John A. Shoudy, Jr., and Mrs. Etta Koepke, residents of Ellensburg; Mrs. Lillie Jenkins of St. Louis, Missouri; Loyal Shoudy of Seattle, and Chester P. Shoudy of Spokane. When Mr. Shoudy returned from his wedding trip in 1890, he found the old signboard over his father's place of business removed, and in its stead was a new one bearing his own name, telling him that, as a wedding present, his father had turned over to him the stock of merchandise and all outstanding accounts. He at once took charge of the business and remained in charge until 1894, when he was elected county treasurer. He filled this office in an acceptable manner until January, 1897. In March of this year he went to Portland as agent for the Northwestern Improvement Company, and, later in the same year, was transferred to Spokane, where he established the present agency at that place. In 1898 he was made general agent of the company and retained this position until March, 1904, when he assumed management of the Palmerston hotel, Spokane. Previous to his connection with the Northwestern Improvement Company, Mr. Shoudy's life having been spent in Ellensburg, no one of the pioneers of that city is more conversant with its history or with the reminiscient incidents connected with its early days. He has in his possession the first money order issued by the Ellensburg postoffice. It is dated September 4, 1883, and was drawn on the Chicago postoffice for forty-seven cents. Mr. Shoudy is a blue lodge Mason and also belongs to the Elks, the Sons of Veterans, the uniform rank, K. of P., the D. O. K. K., the Junior Order of American Mechanics, and the W. of W. He is an active Republican and always takes a lively interest in the success of the party. Although not now a resident of Ellensburg, he is classed with the earliest pioneers of the city and of Kittitas county and is one of the most highly esteemed of those who were factors in the settlement and development of both city and county.

EDWIN A. WILLIS. One of the popular trading places of Ellensburg is the Willis Bazaar, where is kept a general stock of merchandise and an extensive assortment of imported notions. The business was established in Ellensburg in 1868, having gradually developed from a very small beginning. When Mr. Willis first came to Ellensburg he opened an auction store, building up a good business which was totally destroyed by fire in 1889. Although left by the fire practically penniless, he had previously ordered a small stock of lamp chimneys, fruit jars, etc., which he stored in a shed back of the Durgan house and sold from the sidewalk. That he has developed his business from this beginning to its present proportions is highly creditable to the proprietor, showing as it does that he possesses rare qualifications for commercial pursuits.

Mr. Willis is an Englishman by birth. His parents, Robert and Ann Willis, died in England a few years after the birth of their son Edwin in 1833. After the death of his parents Edwin lived with his maternal grandparents until their death, during which time he received his education in the common schools of his native country. In 1854, at the age of twenty-one, he came to the United States, joined the regular army as a dragoon, later became a member of the Third Artillery band and was afterwards transferred to Company G of this regiment; in the following year he settled in California. In 1858 he went to Oregon with the regular army and, at his own request, was sent with the regiment to join Colonel Wright in his famous campaign against the Indians. Mr. Willis was in the battles of Spokane Plains and Four Lakes and assisted in the work of collecting and killing the 1,500 horses belonging to the Indians, in the execution of bad Indians on the Spokane and on Hangman's creek, and in the peace councils which followed the cessation of hostilities. After the close of the Indian war Mr. Willis engaged for some years in the hotel and restaurant business, first in The Dalles, then at Vancouver and later at Portland. In 1861 he sold his Portland business and passing up the Yakima valley by the present site of Ellensburg, went on through Okanogan to the mines of the Similkameen and Kettle rivers in British Columbia. At this time the international boundary was being surveyed, and Mr. Willis assisted in the construction of the British commission quarters at the mouth of the Kettle river on the American side of the boundary. In the spring of 1862 he went to Orofino, Idaho, and became a partner in the Big Bend Mining Company. The following winter and summer he spent in the Florence mines, returning in 1863 by way of Lewiston and Walla Walla to Vancouver, and, after a short period spent in steambating on the Columbia and in mining at Ringold near White Bluffs, he returned to The Dalles, working there at the Umatilla House and afterwards for several years in the O. R. & N. machine shops, later taking charge of a bar on a boat plying between The Dalles, Cascades and Portland. Quitting the boat he again went to Portland, where he became interested with Captain Foster in a steam ferryboat plying between Vancouver and the Oregon side of the Columbia. He afterwards sold this business and for a time prospected in southern Oregon and at Gray's Harbor for Portland people, going then to Vancouver, where he engaged in the hotel business, the venture proving a failure, a prospective boom for the town collapsing and resulting in serious financial loss. Returning to Portland he was employed for a while in the Willamette Iron works, but eventually came to Yakima just prior to the building of the railroad, and there secured the contract for clearing sagebrush from a tract of land within the present limits of North Yakima, receiving therefor $3 per acre. After a year spent in the Yakima country Mr. Willis came to Ellensburg and has since made it his home. Mrs. Anna Manners and Mrs. T. Liddell of Ellensburg, are sisters of our subject. Mr. Willis is independent in politics, has declined to hold office and spends his entire time in looking after his business affairs, which are constantly growing in magnitude.

PROFESSOR J. H. MORGAN. Among the leading educators in the Northwest none, perhaps, enjoys a more enviable reputation than does Professor J. H. Morgan, vice principal of the state Normal school of Ellensburg, Washington. Born on the 9th of September, 1852, in western North Carolina, he began at an early age the pursuit of letters, taking his first lessons in private schools. His secondary education was obtained in Mills River Academy, in which for a number of years he was a student. Upon leaving this institution, he engaged in teaching. The wages of his two and a half years of work in this occupation enabled him to take a course in Furman University, of South Carolina, from which institution, after four years of faithful work, he received the degree of A. M. in 1879.

The call to the west had been sounding in his ears for some time, and he had not long bidden farewell to his alma mater before he became a citizen of the territory of Washington. For three years after his arrival he labored in the country schools of the Walla Walla valley. Then he accepted a position as principal of the Dayton public schools. Having taught there during the school year of 1882-83, he accepted a call to the principalship of the Waitsburg schools, which position he held for four years. During this time the electors of Walla Walla county gave a substantial testimony of their faith in his abilities by electing him county superintendent of common schools and from January, 1885, to January, 1887, he combined the duties of that office with those incident to the principalship of the Waitsburg schools.

Professor Morgan's connection with the cause of education in Ellensburg dates back to the spring of 1887, when he became principal of the public schools of that town. In the meantime, however, he had been appointed by Governor Eugene Semple to the important office of superintendent of public instruction. In the fall of 1889 he was nominated for that office on the Democratic ticket, but though he secured many more votes than did the other Democratic nominees for state offices, no personal popularity could overcome the Republican majority of that year and he was defeated. Soon after the state election he was chosen principal of the public schools of Montesano, but his work in Ellensburg had been eminently satisfactory and after he had taught in Montesano for a year he decided to yield to the pressure which was brought to bear upon him by citizens of Ellensburg and to accept again the principalship of the schools of that town. During the fall of 1890 he was called by the franchises of the people to the superintendency of the common schools of Kittitas county and in the summer of 1891 he resigned the principalship of the Ellensburg schools that he might give his undivided attention to the duties of his office. In the spring of 1892 he was for the third time called to the principalship of the Ellensburg schools and before the close of that year was elected vice principal and head of the department of mathematics in the Washington State Normal school, which position he still holds. His abilities as an educator have been frequently recognized in the highest educational circles of the state. In the fall of 1892 the Democratic party again made him its candidate for the superintendency of public instruction, but it was again unable to elect him. From March, 1897, to March, 1899, he served by appointment of Governor John R. Rogers as a member of the state board of education. In April, 1880, when the State Teachers' Association was organized at Olympia, Professor Morgan took an active part in the councils of that body and at the close of the first session the association bestowed upon him the honor of serving as its president for the ensuing year. He has always been interested in the development of the schools of the state, attending most of the meetings of the State Teachers' Association, of the executive committee of which body he has twice served as chairman. He attended the first territorial institute held in eastern Washington and all subsequent ones, and he has the unique distinction of having labored as an institute worker in twenty counties of this state. He has been an active member of the National Educational Association since 1898.

In his present position he has been eminently successful and without doubt the excellent reputation of the school is due in part to his labors. His popularity and efficiency as a teacher are attested by his long tenure of his position and by the uniform kindness and respect which the graduates and other students of the normal uniformly manifest toward him.

Unfortunately, during the summer of 1888, while traveling in the interests of the schools of Washington territory, Professor Morgan met with a serious accident in a runaway stage and was permanently crippled, though, except for a period of one year, not to the extent of interfering with his school duties.

Fraternally, the professor is identified with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World, the first two of which orders he has represented in the grand lodges. On the 25th of February, 1801, he married Margaret B. Hawkins, then of Tacoma, and to their union has been born one daughter, Nessa H. Morgan, born October 28, 1893.

ALANSON T. MASON. It is a noticeable fact that many of the successful pioneers of the Northwest are men who have assumed the responsibilities of life at an early age, and who have learned its valuable lessons in the school of experience, unaided by aught save their individual energies and resources. Such is the history of the man whose name stands at the head of this article. A. T. Mason was born in Cayuga county, New York, in 1822. His father, Martin Mason, a farmer and lumberman, was a native of Vermont, where his English ancestors settled several generations ago. He was a soldier in the War of 1812, participating, among others, in the battle of Plattsburg; his father before him was a soldier of the Revolution. The mother of our subject was Polly (Grizwold) Mason, also a native of Vermont.

A. T. Mason spent his early life in Jamestown, New York, where he received his education in the common schools, associating himself later with his father in the lumber business. At the age of twenty-one he began life as a lumberman on his own account, at first in New York and afterwards in Forest county, Pennsylvania, where he remained for twelve years. At the end of this time he went to Michigan, settling in his former business, in Big Rapids, Mecosta county, when there were only six voters in the township and only two teams of horses in that part of the state. After clearing a large farm of a dense growth of timber he became both farmer and lumberman, making his home here for twelve years. At the breaking out of the Civil war Mr. Mason was temporarily in New York; returning in 1862 to Michigan, he enlisted in Company I, Eleventh Michigan cavalry, under General Stoneman; this regiment was afterwards known as Stoneman's Raiders, was attached to the Army of the Cumberland and was engaged in the battles of Lookout Mountain, Stone River, and many others. Mr. Mason served throughout the war and was mustered out the last of June, 1865. During the various engagements in which he took part, he had three horses killed under him and experienced many other narrow escapes; on one raid during the winter of 1864-65 the troopers were out four months, during which time they were without tents and without change of clothing, subsisting the while on whatever could be found in the way of provisions. Returning to Michigan at the close of the war, Mr. Mason continued in the lumber business until 1876, when he moved to California, and in May, 1877, came to Kittitas valley and took up land near the present town of Thorp. He was just in time to assist in the protection of the settlers against the Indians, who were supposed to be planning a general massacre; he assisted in the construction of a fort and did considerable scouting for the purpose of investigating numerous rumors of massacres and forming bands of Indians. Although the Indians were restless and there were many indications of a general uprising Mr. Mason brought his family to his ranch in August and prepared to make it his permanent home. This he did and they were not molested by the Indians. He remained with his family on the ranch until 1893, when he moved to Ellensburg, purchasing grounds and erecting a substantial residence, where he has since resided, in the meantime renting the farm until 1899, when it was sold.

Mr. Mason was married in New York in 1843 to Miss Nancy Hollenbeck, a daughter of Daniel and Phoebe (Lonsdale) Hollenbeck, both natives of New York, the former being of German and English extraction. Mrs. Mason died December 23, 1900. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Mason are Martin, living in West Seattle; James, a citizen of Whatcom, and Mrs. Luna Packwood, of Ellensburg. Mr. Mason is a staunch Republican; he has never been an office-seeker, but has served the party as county commissioner and as a member of the city council of Ellensburg. Since the death of his wife he has traveled a great deal, visiting among other places his old homes in Michigan and in New York and attending the Buffalo exposition. He is an honored and highly respected pioneer of the Kittitas valley.

CARLOS S. BULLARD. Among the young business men of Ellensburg, Mr. Bullard occupies an enviable position as a man of energy and correct business principles, who is winning deserved success in the commercial pursuit to which the best efforts of his life are now being applied. The same activity that characterizes his management of business affairs enters into all the doings of every-day life and, as this trait is coupled with a jovial and at the same time earnest disposition, he makes personal friends of all with whom he comes in contact and commands their lasting esteem and confidence. Although a resident of Ellensburg but little more than two years, he is already recognized as one of the most progressive and enterprising citizens of the town.

Mr. Bullard is a native of Ashtabula county, Ohio, born January 4, 1872. His father, Wallace H. Bullard, was one of the pioneer settlers of Ashtabula county, coming in the very early days from Massachusetts, where he had for years been engaged in the agricultural and stock business and where he was born January 6, 1823. At Cherry Valley, Ohio, he built the first woolen mill in that part of the state, a building that still stands, a monument to the venturesome and progressive spirit of the pioneer of the then "Northwest Territory." The elder Bullard was a veteran of the Civil war, having served for three years and four months as captain in the Sixth Ohio cavalry. In his Ohio county and district he was a prominent and influential Republican, was a Knight Templar and a man respected by all for his sterling qualities of mind and heart and for the motives by which he was actuated in every-day intercourse with his fellows. He was of Scotch descent, his ancestors coming to Massachusetts before the close of the seventeenth century.

The mother was Mrs. Sallie (Slater) Bullard; born in Connecticut in 1830, she died in Ohio in 1896 after a long exemplary life of devotion to husband and family. The Massachusetts Slaters, of whom she was a descendant, were voyagers with the Puritans in the Mayflower, and her line of descent is traced directly back to the pilgrim sojourners near Plymouth rock.

The subject of this sketch grew to manhood in Ohio and, at the age of twenty-four, had completed the high school course after having spent his earlier years in the common schools of Jefferson and Salem. His early education completed, he learned the carpenter's trade, after which he removed to Wisconsin. Here he again entered school, completing a two-years course at the State University. Following this, he engaged for a few months in the creamery business in Wisconsin. Disposing of his creamery interests in 1879, he came to Spokane, where he remained in the employ of the Hazlewood Creamery Company and in that of Ryan & Newton until 1901, when he came to Ellensburg. Here he owned for a time a half interest in the Ellensburg Creamery, of which he was assistant manager. A few months ago he disposed of his creamery property and bought a half interest in the hardware establishment of G. W. Hornbeck, with whom he is still associated.

Mr. Bullard was married at Spokane April 18, 1899, to Miss Etta Belle Hitchcock, a daughter of Alvin and Mary Hitchcock of Jefferson, Ohio. Miss Hitchcock received a careful and thorough education, adding to the usual training a post-graduate course. For several years she taught in her native state, where her name was well known in educational and literary circles.

Mr. Bullard has three brothers and one sister; Rolland is assistant manager of the Bell Telephone Company at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Henry is a citizen of Salem, and William of Richmond Center, Ohio; Charlotte Russell resides at Cherry Valley, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Bullard are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Bullard is prominent in Masonic circles, is an active Republican and takes a lively interest in the caucuses and conventions of the party. In addition to his hardware business he is interested in real estate to some extent, and in all respects he is public-spirited and has progressive ideas, and he is destined to become an influential factor in the advancement of Ellensburg and of Kittitas county.

SUSAN E. COOKE, widow of the Hon. Charles P. Cooke, was born in Waterford county, four miles from Troy, New York, in 1832. She was the daughter of Abraham and Amelia (Van der Cooke) Brewster. Abraham Brewster was a merchant at Waterford, New York. Mrs. Brewster was born in New York state in 1803. She was a member of one of the old Holland families which settled in that state in the early days.

At the age of three years Mrs. Cooke was left an orphan, whereupon she was taken and reared till twelve years of age by her maternal grandfather, then at Sandusky, Ohio. She was given a good education, first in the grammar schools, finishing in the Methodist university at Norwalk, Ohio. At the age of nineteen she crossed the Plains in company with her aunt and uncle, the Hon. E. N. Cooke, late state treasurer of Oregon. The entire journey was made by wagon. On October 29, 1851, she was married to Charles P. Cooke, at Salem, Oregon. The couple moved to Polk county, settling on a homestead near Independence. Here they remained until 1867, when they took a pre-emption claim in the Moxee valley east of Yakima, where they lived until the spring of 1870. Their next and final change of location brought them to the farm where Mrs. Cooke now resides, in the northeast part of the Kittitas valley on Cooke creek. This stream is known to the Indians as Put-chem-mee creek, in English meaning "plenty." Here they lived and reared a family of nine children, as follows: Clara, now Mrs. Charles Coleman, Orilla, Washington; Edwin N., mining near Wenatchee; Morand D., stockman and farmer, Ellensburg; Edward, dairyman, Ellensburg; Eliza F., now Mrs. P. H. Schnebly;

George B., stockman, Ellensburg; Rufus, stockman and farmer, Ellensburg; Nellie R., now Mrs. Al Whitton, and Jay Cooke, a farmer and stock raiser.

Mrs. Cooke was a member of the old and historic Dutch family, Van der Cooke, which settled in New York on the Hudson river during the seventeenth century. Mr. Cooke was a cousin of the widely known New York railroad promoter and financier, Jay Cooke, who offered to float the United States government bonds during the Rebellion. Charles P. Cooke was a veteran of the Mexican war, having enlisted in Company F, First Ohio regiment, under Captain Bradley and Colonel Waller. This regiment was attached to General Hammer's command. He was a participant in the battles of Monterey, Cerro Gordo and Buena Vista, serving in the same army corps with General Grant, then a captain, and Jefferson Davis. In 1868 Mr. Cooke was appointed auditor of Yakima county, which office he held until 1872, when he was elected to the legislature. This office he held two consecutive terms. In 1876 he served as county commissioner, and later he was made county superintendent of schools. In 1884 he was again elected to the legislature and served until 1887. He afterward served in the territorial council. He was always a staunch Democrat, and was each time elected to office as a candidate of that party. He was the first county commissioner for the new county of Kittitas, receiving his appointment through the efforts of John A. Shuddy, who at that time was a member of the legislature. Mr. Cooke was an Odd Fellow and Mason of high standing, and an honorary member of the G. A. R. He died in the fall of 1888, leaving a wide circle of friends and no known enemies. Mrs. Cooke is a member of the Rebekah fraternity. She was reared under the influence of the Methodist Episcopal church. Like that of her deceased husband, her reputation and standing in the community are of the best. She is a woman of more than ordinary intellect and refinement, is honest and straightforward in all affairs, social or financial.

WILLIAM H. KIESTER, one of the Kittitas valley's successful and most widely known farmers and a pioneer of 1869, lives on his valuable ranch eleven miles northeast of Ellensburg. He was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, March 24, 1839, and is the son of Jesse, a native Pennsylvania farmer of German descent, and Margaret (Wolffard) Kiester, of German extraction, also born in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Kiester received his early education in the district schools of his native county. In 1861 he enlisted as a private in the Eighteenth Ohio volunteers, Company I, under Colonel

Timothy R. Stanley and Captain John J. Hoffman, and saw his first service in West Virginia as a guard along the railway lines of that state. He was honorably discharged from this regiment after a service of ninety days, being mustered out in Jackson county, Ohio. He re-enlisted, however, as a second lieutenant in the One Hundred and Third infantry, under Colonel T. F. Lachmann, attached to the Fourth army corps under General Keys, and with that command fought in the battles of Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, the Seven Days' battle before Richmond, Jones's Ford, the four Blackwater fights, at Kinston December 16, 1862, Whitehall on the 17th, Goldsboro on the 18th, and Little Washington, besides many other less important battles. He was taken prisoner by the Confederates under General Hoke's command at Plymouth, North Carolina, and with 2,300 other captives was sent to Andersonville prison. He was transferred to Macon, Georgia, thence to Charleston and finally was ordered to Columbia, South Carolina. While en route to the last named prison, Mr. Kiester with two companions leaped from the train and temporarily made their escape, avoiding recapture for twelve days. During this freedom they passed the Confederate lines by means of guessing the passwords, but were finally retaken at Rutherfordton, North Carolina, and taken to the prison at Salisbury. From this prison they were removed to Danville, Virginia, where they were kept all winter, and then sent to the famous Libby prison. February 22, 1865, Lieutenant Kiester and his comrades were paroled. Upon returning to his command, Lieutenant Kiester was granted a thirty days' furlough, after the expiration of which he returned to his regiment, then stationed at Roanoke Island. His final discharge from the army took place in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, July 12, 1865. During his career as a soldier, Mr. Kiester served under Generals Keys, Foster, Pack, Butler, Casey and McClelland, saw some of the hardest fighting of the war, suffered the agonies of confinement in rebel prisons, and frequently distinguished himself by skill and bravery under fire. He rose to the rank of first lieutenant. His war record throughout is one of credit and honor.

He came west in 1865, via the Isthmus of Panama, to Puget Sound, settling near Seattle. There he lived until 1868, when he assisted Tillman Houser to establish a home across the Cascades in the virgin Kittitas valley. Late in the fall he returned to the Sound and wintered on the western slope, but the beautiful, grassy valley proved too irresistible an attraction to the pioneer and in 1869 Mr. Kiester settled upon a pre-emption claim in the Kittitas valley, founding a permanent home. He was preceded in the valley by only four white settlers and their families: Fred Ludi, of Ellensburg, John Goller, now living on the Wenatchee, William Wilson, formerly of Missouri and Oregon, and Tillman Houser, still a resident of the county. Mr. Kiester has one brother, Winfield S., a farmer living in Butler county, Pennsylvania; and two sisters, Mrs. Emma Boyles, living in Grove City, Pennsylvania, and Mrs. Amelda Mortland, of Indianapolis, Indiana. With characteristic generosity and loyalty, Mr. Kiester has reared two boys, sons of an old friend, W. A. Bull, a Kittitas pioneer. They are still living with him and are both prominent young men in the community. Mr. Kiester is a man of truth and honor, prominent in all affairs of his county, and every man who knows the brave old veteran and doughty pioneer, it is safe to say, is his friend.

TILLMAN HOUSER. One of the earliest settlers to come into the valley with his family was Tillman Houser, a pioneer of 1868. After having farmed for about six years in the Puget Sound country he arrived in Kittitas valley June 16, 1868, pre-empting a claim ten miles north-east of Ellensburg. Upon his arrival he found but three others settled here, Fred Ludi, John Goller and Bell Wilson, the latter a transient who left the same fall. After erecting a cabin Mr. Houser returned to Renton, Washington, for his family and with them at once began permanent improvements on his place with a view to making it his future home. In 1870, however, he sold to Walter A. Bull and shortly afterward took a homestead in the same neighborhood. After living on the second claim four years he again sold and this time invested in land. He at first took sheep on shares, but found the business unprofitable owing to losses from disease and other causes. Rigid economy was necessary in the early days that the wolf might be kept from the door, and Mr. Houser's experience in the Kittitas valley was as trying as it could well be. Nothing was known, at that time, of irrigation and in one instance Mr. Houser secured eight bushels of wheat for seed at Old Yakima, sowing it on his place with results scarcely in keeping with his expectations. He had hoped that the crop would relieve him from some of the hardships that were falling to the lot of himself and family, but when the harvest came the yield from the eight bushels of seed was only seven bushels of grain. Wheat flour was a luxury in those days, and Mr. Houser tells of grinding corn in a coffee mill for family use; making coffee from peas, and in other similar ways battling with the difficulties of pioneer life. But better times followed and by the early seventies Mr. Houser had accumulated quite a herd of stock, which proved highly profitable and which became in fact the foundation upon which he has built the successes of the past twenty-five years. By the year 1890, in addition to his stock interests, Mr. Houser owned several tracts of land in the north part of the county. Selling these about this time, he bought a place seven miles southeast of Ellensburg, and in 1890 another small tract just east of town. He resided by turns on these two farms until September, 1901, when he settled in Ellensburg. Mr. Houser was born in Monroe county, Pennsylvania, March 31, 1840. His father, Charles Houser, a Pennsylvanian, was born in 1803 and died in 1883. He moved into the interior of that state when it was an unsettled wilderness, and during the Mexican war became an officer of the militia. He was of Swiss parentage. The mother, Mary C. (Eyer) Houser, also a native of Pennsylvania, died in 1860. Tillman Houser grew to manhood in Pennsylvania, alternately working on the farm and attending school. At the age of twenty-one he took charge of his father's farm, conducting it for three years, until 1861, when he became a soldier of the Civil war, serving for three years under Captain Kinney in the Seventeenth Pennsylvania cavalry. At the close of his military service he went to California; thence to the Sound country, from which he came to the Kittitas valley.

He was married in 1860 to Miss Louise Werkhiser, a daughter of John and Sallie (Boyer) Werkhiser, both natives of Pennsylvania, where the father was born in 1812. The mother died in 1861 and the father in 1901. Mrs. Houser's parents were of German descent. She has five sisters and four brothers now living in Pennsylvania. Mr. Houser has one brother, Josiah, and one sister, Susan, living in Nebraska. Children of Mr. and Mrs. Houser are Sarah Messerly, Harrison, Clarence, Perina, Alva, and Amelia C. Churchill. Mr. and Mrs. Houser are members of the Presbyterian church and are prominent in church and social circles. Mr. Houser is Republican in politics; he is a substantial and influential citizen; holds the esteem and respect of all, and is recognized as one of the most successful of the pioneer citizens of the valley.

WILLIAM A. CONANT, farmer and stockman, living some six miles west of Ellensburg, Washington, is one of the most progressive farmers of the county. Into his vocation he throws the same enthusiasm which as a soldier in the Union army during the Civil war won him the distinctive appellation at the hands of the Confederates of the "Red Shirted Devil." As a farmer Mr. Conant is as successful as he was as a soldier. He was born in Bainbridge, Chenango county, New York, July 24, 1832. His father, Elihu C. Conant, was a lineal descendant of Roger Conant, of Salem, Massachusetts, of Mayflower fame. His mother, Jennett E. (Johnson) Conant, also from old colonial stock, was born in New Haven, Conn., in 1807 and died in Kittitas county, Washington, at the ripe age of ninety-one years. The Conant family traces its lineage directly to Captain W. E. Walker, a prominent tactician who drilled General George Washington's officers. Mr. Conant received his education in the common schools of Saratoga county and in the academy at Glens Falls, New York. When he was fourteen years old his parents moved to Lee county, Illinois, and there his father bought land with warrants secured from Mexican war veterans. Mr. Conant left home when he was twenty-one, remaining in Lee county until the outbreak of the war, when he enlisted in the Seventy-fifth Illinois volunteer infantry, commanded by Colonel George Ryan, in the Fourteenth army corps under command of General Jefferson C. Davis. He engaged in the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, and later, October 8, 1862, was wounded in the left arm. This wound caused his confinement in the hospital at New Albany, Indiana, some time before he rejoined his regiment at Edgefield, Tennessee. He served under General Rosecrans in the battle of Stone River, known as the "five days fight," against General Bragg, and was in the capture of Liberty Gap. He was also at the battle of Chattanooga, doing provost duty, and assisted in the capture of Atlanta, serving on the skirmish line as a crack shot. He was mustered out at Nashville, Tennessee, June 30, 1865, and discharged and paid in Chicago. He arrived at home July 4, 1865, after having fought in several of the most severely contested engagements of the Rebellion. He again engaged in farming, and in 1876 began breeding thoroughbred Durham cattle, making a specialty of them. He has continued to raise this breed of cattle ever since, although not to the exclusion of all other breeds. He now has on his farm some of the finest pedigree Shorthorns in the west, and has in his home a complete series of the American Shorthorn Herd Book. In February, 1889, Mr. Conant left Lee county for Washington, thinking to thus obtain relief from asthma, from which he was a great sufferer. He brought all of his livestock and farm implements with him, settling first on the "Voice" place, five miles east of Ellensburg, but after a short stay there moved to his present home. His farm is one of the best in the county, consisting of 160 acres of farm land with 640 acres of pasture.

Mr. Conant was married at Dixon, Illinois, in 1855, to Miss Charlotte L. Erwin, a native of New York. She died May 29, 1882. Her father, Elder Burton, of German descent, is a resident of Battle Creek, Michigan. Her mother, A. S. (Lovell) Burton, was a native of New York. Mrs. Conant had one sister, Mrs. Sarah J. Richardson, a resident of Iowa. To this union were born three children, Mary E., in Paw Paw, Illinois, December 4, 1856; Sarah J., November 8, 1858, and William T., October 26, 1873. Mr. Conant is a member of David Ford Post, G. A. R., at Ellensburg. In political matters he has always been a staunch Republican.

JOHN G. OLDING is a successful farmer, whose farm is located four east and two miles north of Ellensburg, Washington. Here he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land as a homestead in 1871, and the following year hewed out the logs and built the first house on the place. Mr. Olding was born in Nova Scotia, July 24, 1844, and was educated in the common schools until he was nineteen years of age. During the following three years, he learned the carpenter trade, which he followed for three years. Upon leaving Nova Scotia he settled at Virginia City, Nevada, where he worked at his trade for four years, and later, for a short time, in Walla Walla, Washington. After this he ceased carpentering, as a vocation, and moved to the homestead above mentioned. His father, a farmer and also a native of Nova Scotia, was born about 1819. The mother, Jenny (Roy) Olding, was born in Scotland, in the year 1819. Both are now deceased. Besides John G., our subject, there were children as follows: Pardon Olding and Anna Olding, both now dead; James W., twin brother of John G., now a carpenter at Fall River, Massachusetts; Liza J. Olding, deceased at the age of three; Daniel Olding, now living on the old homestead in Nova Scotia; Michael Olding, now deceased, and Robert Olding, a contractor, who resides in Nova Scotia. All of the children were born in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Olding was married at Virginia City, Nevada, February 9, 1869, to Miss Elizabeth Love, who was born in Nova Scotia, April 29, 1844. She was the daughter of David and Elizabeth (Cameron) Love. Both parents died when Elizabeth was a young girl. Her only brother, John C. Love, now lives at San Francisco. Flora, the eldest sister, is dead. Mr. and Mrs. Olding are the parents of the following children: Mrs. Eva (Olding) Shaw, wife of a farmer, born January 5, 1875; Mrs. Nettie (Olding) Galvin, born November 15, 1876, wife of a butcher, now residing at Nome, Alaska; Eliza J. Olding, born October 23, 1878, who was educated to be a teacher; Mrs. Anna (Olding) Mitchell, born May 23, 1880, wife of a farmer; Margaret Olding, born August 16, 1882, now residing at Ellensburg, and Mary Olding, born November 6, 1884, who graduated from the Ellensburg high school in 1903. All of the children are natives of Kittitas county.

Politically, Mr. Olding affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally, with the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. By industry and integrity he has built up property interests which give him an enviable position among the well-to-do citizens of this county. He owns two hundred and thirty-eight acres of land, fifty head of range cattle, twenty-two milch cows, nine horses, and is a stockholder in a co-operative creamery. He has an elegant ten-room house and a large barn on his farm, and has property in Ellensburg. He has done well in the education of his children, and is considered to be one of the most substantial residents of his community.

VALENTINE C. WYNEGAR, whose home is in Ellensburg, Washington, is one of the pioneer farmers of the Kittitas valley. He was born in Union, Ohio, June 19, 1843. His father, John Wynegar, was born in Virginia in 1803, and died at the age of ninety-four years. His mother was Elizabeth (Dilsaver) Wynegar and she was born in Pennsylvania in 1818, and died in 1896. Mr. Wynegar was educated in the common schools of Illinois, and worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-one. He was a member of Company C, 146th Illinois volunteers, during the war, and was mustered out July 7, 1865. He then returned to Illinois and engaged in farming until 1871. He spent two years each, farming in Osage and Morris counties, Kansas, and in 1875 moved to Kittitas valley, Washington, where, December 17th of that year, he took up a pre-emption claim. He later lost this claim and took up a homestead, but rented a farm some four years before taking up his residence on his homestead in 1880. He lived there eighteen years and still owns the land. In 1898 he removed to Ellensburg, where he has continued to reside. His brothers and sisters are: Mary A. Kenney, born in Ohio in 1839, now living in Nebraska; Peter, born in Ohio in 1845, a resident of Kansas; David, born in Ohio in 1847, in Nebraska; Samuel P., a native of Ohio, a resident of Cedar Falls, Iowa; Joseph A., born in 1851, a resident of Nebraska; Jane Anderson, born in 1853, living in Illinois; Carry L. Wynegar, born in 1855, in Alaska; Pauline Humphrey, born in 1857, a resident of Washington, and John F. Wynegar, born in 1863, a resident of Nebraska. These five last named are natives of Illinois.

Mr. Wynegar was married in Ellensburg, May 14, 1870, to Miss Octavia E. Newman, who was born in Farmington, Iowa, March 26, 1851. Her father, Abner M. Newman, was born in Virginia, June 12, 1825, and came from an old pioneer family. His ancestors came to America in 1632. He died March 13, 1879. His wife, Mary A. (James) Newman, was born in Virginia, September 26, 1825. Mrs. Wynegar was educated in Iowa and taught school in that state and in Colorado. She came to Washington in the spring of the year previous to her marriage. Her sisters, Gertrude M. Chinesmith and Roberta E. Newman, are dead. A brother, Theodore R. Newman, born in Iowa, June 12, 1855, is living in British Columbia. Mrs. Wynegar is the mother of one child, Rosa O. Wynegar, who was born March 22, 1891. Mr. Wynegar, by his industry and thrift, has acquired a competency which assures himself and family from want. He owns a fine farm of 380 acres in one body and also has about fifty acres in the city of Ellensburg. He is a Republican and takes considerable interest in political matters. He is also a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

THOMAS W. FARRELL, manufacturer of harness and saddles, of Ellensburg, was born in Stillwater, Minnesota, March 1, 1863. He is the son of James Farrell, a native of Ireland, a mechanic, who came to America when a young man, settled in Minnesota, and died in 1863. The mother is Elizabeth (Downie) Farrell, who still lives on the homestead at Stillwater, Minnesota. Mr. Farrell was educated in the common schools and in St. John's university, from which he was graduated in 1886, having taken a business course. He followed bookkeeping for a number of years in Minnesota, also for Ames & McCarthy, at Ellensburg. He was next engaged with W. P. Mason in canal and railroad surveys. For seven months he again kept books for J. E. Farrell, and bought out the business in 1891. He has been exceptionally successful, handling more goods in his line than any other firm in the county. Mr. Farrell was married April 15, 1891, to Louisa Manners, daughter of Henry and Elyria (Wilks) Manners, both natives of England. The father was a live stock dealer, born in 1835; he died in 1887. After the death of her husband, the mother, with her nine children, came to the United States, the family now residing at Ellensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Farrell have three children, Morris, Stanley and Eugene, all at home. Mr. Farrell belongs to the W. of W. fraternity, and is an active Democrat, having for several years served on the county central committee. He attends county and state conventions, usually as a delegate.

Mr. Farrell has an uncle, a brother of his mother, whose Civil war record was filled with intensely interesting incidents, and he is well worthy a place in this work. We refer to Col. Mark W. Downie, who was born March 15, 1836, at Chatham, New Brunswick, and moved to Minnesota when a lad of nineteen years. At the breaking out of the Civil war he was cashier of a bank at Stillwater, Minnesota. He was captain of the Stillwater Guards and eventually became colonel of the First Minnesota regiment of volunteers. During a series of battles about Richmond, General Lee had cut off the retreat of General McClellan, and it became necessary to build a bridge over the Chickahominy river in a single day. The Federal engineers said it could not be done. Gen. Sully sent for Maj. Downie, who was fever-stricken in his tent. He arose promptly, however, and reported for duty, saying: "General, give me a thousand lumbermen from the Northwest, and the bridge shall be built." The task was performed and McClellan released from his trying situation, but the builder was at once taken to a New Haven hospital, where he was confined by a wasting fever for two months. At Atlanta, a few years ago, a Federal officer, on hearing Col. Downie's name mentioned, said of him: "Mark Downie was the bravest soldier in the army." Capt. McGill, a Southerner, replied: "Well, he was surely the kindest," and related the following occurrence: After the battle of Fredericksburg the ladies had entreated permission to take the Confederate wounded to their homes, and were refused by the commanding officer. Two hours later Col. Downie became commanding officer and at once revoked the refusal, and released a prisoner, Capt. McGill, who was a surgeon, to assist in the care of the wounded. Capt. McGill reported the facts to Gen. Lee, who said: "Col. Downie is a soldier and a gentleman; send his name to the adjutant general's office at Richmond, and if ever he is taken prisoner, let him be released at once on parole." Such is an unadorned narrative of some of the characteristic events which make the record of a gallant and brave soldier and a kind, patriotic and honorable citizen.

Mr. Farrell has the sword, presented to Col. Downie by the citizens of Stillwater, Minnesota, and which he carried throughout the rebellion. Mr. Farrell is prominent in business circles and a most successful and respected citizen of Ellensburg.

ROBERT A. TURNER. The editor and founder of the Dawn, Ellensburg, Washington, as might be inferred from the vigorous, manly character of his editorials, comes from a family which never feared to battle for the right. His father, Ephraim Turner, was a soldier in the Civil war, as were his four uncles on his mother's side. His mother, Sarah (Hukel) Turner, like his father, was of English descent and a native of Kentucky. They moved to Audrain county, Missouri, about 1839, at a time when there were but three other white families in the county. Mr. Turner was born in that county, October 30, 1859. His father died in 1881 and in 1896 his mother passed away. His parents had moved to Bates county, Missouri, when he was seven years of age. He worked on the farm and attended school, when a boy, walking from three to seven miles to school. At twenty he went to do for himself, working on a farm.

At the age of twenty-one he was married to Minerva C. Brownfield, a native of Missouri, daughter of John J. and Mary Brownfield, both of whom are now dead. Mr. Turner and his bride began married life on a farm, but after five years,

Mr. Turner, who had a natural turn for newspaper work, embarked in that business. He purchased a plant and established the Western Farm Journal at Lone Oak. He ran that publication for five years, establishing it on a firm and paying basis, then sold it and established Turner's Emancipator, at the same place. He ran this for five years, when failing health decided him to move west, to see if the change would benefit him. He moved his plant to Seattle, but failing to secure a building there he moved it to Phimey, Island county, and resumed publication of the Emancipator. After eleven months, September 6, 1891, he moved the plant to Ellensburg, where he conducted it under the same name for two years. Then he sold out, deciding to quit the business.

In August, 1894, the old liking for the business proved too strong and drew him back to work, and he established his present paper, the Dawn. It was started as an ardent defender and promulgator of Populism pure and simple. The party failing to establish itself as an active factor on the platform originally advocated by it, the Dawn, in 1900, was changed to an independent paper and turned its undivided efforts to the upbuilding of the town of Ellensburg and county of Kittitas by every legitimate means in its power. Mr. Turner purchased some property in Ellensburg when he first arrived there and later bought twenty acres additional, which has become quite valuable. He is a member of the Central Christian church of Ellensburg, of which he is an elder. He has been a candidate for office several times. In 1884, in Missouri, he ran for coroner on the Greenback ticket, and polled twice as many votes as any other man on his ticket. In 1892, he was nominated for county clerk on the Populist ticket, after but one year's residence in the county. The whole ticket was defeated. Two of his brothers and two sisters are living. One brother, John A. Turner, is a resident of Enid, Oklahoma, and the other, James Turner, lives at Eugene, Oregon. A sister, Celia Brownfield, makes her home at Toppenish, Washington, and the other married sister, Narcissa Wix, is a resident of Pryor Creek, Indian Territory.

Mr. and Mrs. Turner are the parents of two sons, John Ephraim and Joseph Leslie, and two daughters, Mary Elizabeth and Ida May. The latter died while quite small.

The Dawn printing office is one of the best in Central Washington and the Dawn enjoys the splendid reputation and distinction of being the most widely read paper published in the county. The plant is worth perhaps $3,000.

EUGENE E WAGER. Twice elected to the office of prosecuting attorney of his county, and held in high esteem by a wide circle of friends, the name of Eugene E. Wager stands out prominently as a member of the Kittitas county bar. The son of a leading lawyer of Virginia and veteran of the Civil war, he was born in Culpeper, Virginia, in 1808. The boyhood of Mr. Wager was spent at the place of his birth, where he was given the benefit of a common school education. He then attended the University of Virginia, from which institution he was graduated in 1830. Coming to Ellensburg the same year, he at once engaged in the practice of his chosen profession, the law. For the first seven years of his practice he was with Will G. Graves, when the partnership was dissolved and since that time Mr. Wager has practiced alone.

His married life dates back to the year 1806, when he was married to Miss Byrd Aard, of Covington, Kentucky. Her parents died in her infancy and she was reared by an aunt. Her guardian was Richard Ernst, one of the ablest attorneys of Kentucky. Mr. Wager is also an aggressive Democrat and stands high in the ranks of his party. He was elected to the office of prosecuting attorney for the first time in 1892, shortly after coming to the county. In 1894 he was elected to succeed himself in office, enjoying the distinction of being the only Democrat elected to office in the county that year. It will be remembered that it was during his incumbency the famous Roslyn bank robbery and the subsequent trial of the robbers, Tom McCarthy and Ray Lewis, took place. This affair formed one of the interesting items of the county's history.

CHRISTOPHER A. GRAY. Himself a pioneer, Christopher A. Gray, farmer and stock raiser of Ellensburg, Washington, is descended from a hardy family of pioneers accustomed to the untried frontier and famous in the annals of Indian wars. The date of his birth was September 14, 1852. An early frontiersman of Indiana, Werley Gray, the subject's father, was born in Ohio in 1823. He is still living at the advanced age of eighty, engaged in stock raising at Britton, Oklahoma. Christopher Gray's grandfather, Jesse Gray, a determined and relentless Indian fighter, was the first white man to cut a trail into the wilds of what is now the state of Indiana. Jesse Gray's hatred of and bitterness toward the savages was brought about by their cold-blooded massacre of his father's family. By the side of his dead relatives the bereft son and brother registered a solemn vow to wreak revenge. So faithfully did he carry out this vow, that, in 1791, he had become a noted character, so vigorous in his destruction of the Indians and so active in the development of the country and the protection of the whites, that a monument has been erected over his grave at Camden, Indiana, by his fellow citizens as a mark of their appreciation and honor. Besides his participation in desultory Indian fights, Jesse Gray served in the War of 1812, and was under Gen. William Henry Harrison at the battle of Tippecanoe.

Christo, her Gray's mother, Elizabeth (Huey) Gray, born of Scotch parentage in 1823, died in 1857. Her parents were among the first to tempt the wilderness of Indiana. Her father took part in the War of 1812. In the early sixties Werley Gray removed to Kansas, settling at Fort Riley, where border ruffians were almost as plentiful as buffalo and Indians. Here Christopher, growing to manhood, hunted buffalo with his father and other plainsmen, being inured to border life thus preparing him for the trail which he later followed from the fort to Texas. In 1872 he crossed the Plains, through the Kittitas valley and on to Seattle. Here, for three years, he engaged in the meat market business and lumbering, when he went to New Castle, where he continued in the meat market business. Unfortunately for himself, he came to Ellensburg and went into the sheep business in 1880. The winter of that year is remembered by pioneers as being the severest ever experienced in the Northwest. All species of live stock, sheep, horses and cattle, died almost by thousands on account of the exceptionally deep snow and extreme cold. Like many another stockman, Mr. Gray lost so heavily that he failed. In the spring he returned to the coast and again entered the logging business. In this he was so successful as to soon be able to re-establish himself in the stock raising industry in the Ellensburg country; this time, however, he invested in cattle instead of sheep, and has since continued in the business coupled with farming and butchering.

Mr. Gray was married, September 25, 1880, in Seattle, to Mary A. Agnew, a native of Van Buren county, Iowa. Mrs. Gray's father, Peter Agnew, a miner, born in Ireland in 1826, came to the United States in 1844. Her mother, Mary (Dolan) Agnew, also of Irish birth, spent the first fifteen years of her life in England. In 1844 she was married and she came to America with her husband the day following her wedding day, continuing their eventful wedding journey westward with a Mormon excursion. She has five brothers: James, John, Michael, Joseph and Thomas, and one sister, Alice Williams. Mr. Gray has one brother, George Gray, of Miltonville, Kansas, and one sister, Dorothy Gentry, Clay Center, Kansas. His only child is a son, Arthur W. Gray, who lives on a farm in Kittitas county, Washington. Although a Republican most of his life, so far from seeking office for himself, Mr. Gray has always refused all nominations for public office.

As has been stated, Mr. Gray is at present engaged in the meat business in Ellensburg, being a member of the Ellensburg Meat Company, with Thompson and Weed as partners, and in stock raising, devoting his attention to the Hereford breed of cattle, of which he owns a herd of five hundred head, some of the finest in the state. His farming lands number about three thousand acres.

A. H. STULFAUTH. The editor and publisher of The Capital, Ellensburg. A. H. Stulfauth, was born in St. Clair county, Illinois, August 2, 1857. His father, John Stulfauth, a native of Germany, came to the United States in the forties to avoid compulsory army service in his native land. That the senior Stulfauth did not lack courage and devotion to country when enjoying the freedom of exercising his own will and acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience is evidenced by his record in the Civil war. When this conflict began he enlisted, August 14, 1861, in Company F, Ninth Illinois infantry. He was twice wounded at Shiloh, was in Corinth, Fort Donelson, and other battles fought by Grant in his memorable campaign. He was discharged from service August 20, 1864. His death occurred in 1873, his life having been shortened by wounds received on the battle-field. His wife, the mother of A. H. Stulfauth, was born in Meadville, Pennsylvania, and died in 1874. Though of Irish descent, her ancestors had for generations lived in the eastern part of the United States.

Mr. Stulfauth's parents removed from Pennsylvania to Illinois in 1855, two years before his birth. At the close of the war they again moved westward, this time settling in Franklin county, Kansas, where the boy received his early education, remaining there until his seventeenth year. At this age he went to Salt Lake and entered the employ of The Tribune, at first in the mechanical department, afterwards on the telegraph and reportorial staffs. At the end of ten years, 1884, he went to Portland to take charge of a partner's interest in the Portland Daily News. For three years he made Portland his home, but spent the greater portion of the time in San Francisco, as special correspondent of his Portland paper. Removing to San Francisco later, he occupied the telegraph desk on The Evening Post and for a time was a reporter, both with The Chronicle and The Examiner. In 1889 he purchased an interest in The Capital with A. N. Hamilton, his former partner at Portland. In 1899 he bought out his partner's interest and has since continued editor and sole proprietor of that publication, which ranks among the best and most successful periodicals in the valley. Though originally an independent sheet, under Editor Stulfauth's management it became, in 1892, staunch in its support of Republican principles.

In the fall of '83 Mr. Stulfauth was married to Blanch Henry, of Mattoon, Illinois. Mrs. Stulfauth's father, a physician of Mattoon, and a former surgeon in the army, was a native of Kentucky. He was a lineal descendent of Patrick Henry. Her mother, Elizabeth (Stoddert) Henry, who was born in Maryland, was a granddaughter of Richard Stoddert, first secretary of the navy. Mrs. Stulfauth is a member of the Congregational church. Mr. Stulfauth has one sister, Mrs. Mary A. Rivers, who resides in New York City.

Fraternally, Mr. Stulfauth is associated with the Ancient Order of United Workmen. He is an ardent Republican and naturally, by virtue of the position he holds in the community, is active in the councils and campaigns of his party. He is an acknowledged success as a journalist and The Capital is well patronized by the citizens of Ellensburg and the Kittitas valley.

SIMON P. WIPPEL. One of the chief sources of wealth in the Kittitas valley is the creamery business and one of the most successful companies in the county is the Kittitas Creamery Company, of which S. P. Wippel is one of the proprietors. In writing Mr. Wippel's biography it is interesting to note that he learned the dairy business in this county and, by close attention to its details, has built up and is now a partner in one of the most extensive concerns of this character in the county. Mr. Wippel is a native of Ripley county, Indiana, where he was born, March 17, 1871. His father, Frank Wippel, is a farmer, native of Germany. He was born there in 1843 and was brought to the United States by his parents when three years old, in 1846. He still lives in Indiana, which has been his home for fifty years. The mother of Simon Wippel, Gertrude (Zinser) Wippel, was born in Germany in 1845 and came with her parents to this country when an infant. Until his nineteenth year Mr. Wippel remained on the Indiana homestead with his parents, working on the farm and attending the district schools. In his young manhood he was a great reader and values highly the general store of information he accumulated in this way. Leaving Indiana when nineteen, he went to Kansas, settling near Topeka and, in a short time, becoming manager of a ranch and an extensive herd of thoroughbred Shorthorn cattle. At the end of three years he left Kansas and came to Kittitas county, in the spring of 1893, entering the employ of Helm & Reed, who at that time were engaged extensively in the stock business on a ranch of several hundred acres; at the end of two years he was made manager of this ranch and continued in this position for three years. The firm of Helm & Reed dissolving, Mr. Wippel became the employee of Mr. Reed in operating a skimming station in connection with the Ellensburg Creamery. One year later he bought an interest in the business. In 1900 he sold his interest in the Ellensburg Creamery and, with his brother, Fred, established the Kittitas Creamery Company, erecting and equipping buildings in which to operate the business. In the fall of 1901 the brothers bought the Cloverdale Creamery of John Goodwin at Thorp and have since operated the two plants. The business is each year becoming more extensive, the principal product being butter, large quantities of which are shipped to the Sound country.

In April, 1902, Simon Wippel and Gertrude E.

Miller were united in marriage. Mrs. Wippel is a native of Minnesota and is the daughter of Nicholas and Isabelle (Schwangler) Miller, the former a native of Germany and the latter of Minnesota. Nicholas Miller was a teacher in his native country; he came to Kittitas county in 1886. The father and mother are still living. Mr. Wippel's brothers and sisters are: Fred, his partner in business; Katherine, Marguerite, Peter, Anna, Elizabeth, Frank and Gertrude. Raymond Wippel is the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Wippel. Mr. and Mrs. Wippel are members of the Catholic church. In politics Mr. Wippel is a Republican. With his brother, Fred, he owns a section of land in the valley. Mr. and Mrs. Wippel have an attractive and comfortable home in Ellensburg and are enjoying the fruits of years of industry and successful management.

FREDERICK WIPPEL. Kittitas county has produced many successful stockmen and dairymen. Its extensive ranges make of it an ideal stock country and the inclination of the later settlers to engage in diversified industries led to experiments in dairy farming which proved wonderfully successful and which resulted in the opening of many dairy farms and the establishment of creameries in various parts of the county. The Kittitas Creamery was established in 1900 by Frederick Wippel and his brother, Simon. In this year Frederick Wippel came to Kittitas county from Kansas, induced to make the change in location by the encouraging reports concerning the advantages of the country sent him by his brother, Simon, who had been a resident of the county for several years. On his arrival here Mr. Wippel went to the State Agricultural College at Pullman and took a thorough course in the dairy department, after which he took up the work as butter maker in his own creamery at Ellensburg and is still so engaged. With his brother Mr. Wippel has built up a very extensive business, both at Ellensburg and at Thorp, having purchased at the latter place in 1900 the Cloverdale Creamery, owned by John Goodwin. Frederick Wippel is a native of Ripley county, Indiana, being born there in 1868. He is the son of Frank and Gertrude (Zinser) Wippel, both natives of Germany, the father born in 1843 and the mother in 1845. The father was brought to this country by his parents when three years old, in 1846; the mother also came to America with her father and mother in her infancy; both attained maturity in Indiana. The grandparents settled in Ripley county, Indiana, and there the father and mother of the subject of this article have lived for fifty years. Frederick Wippel spent his boyhood days on the homestead farm in Indiana; he worked on the farm with his father, attending the country schools during the fall and winter months, until seventeen years of age. At this age he went to Kansas with his grandfather, Michael Wippel, in 1885, in quest of a new farming location. The grandfather not being suited, returned to Indiana, but the grandson remained, settling near Topeka. Here he engaged in farming and raising stock, finding the business reasonably profitable and continuing in it for fourteen years, until 1900. In this year, as has been previously stated, he came to Kittitas county and to Ellensburg, where he has since made his home and which has become the permanent field of his business activities. In it he has won success and has established himself as one of the reliable and substantial citizens of the community.

June 4, 1901, Mr. Wippel was married in Topeka, Kansas, to Kate Renyer, a daughter of John Renyer, a carpenter, of German extraction; the mother's maiden name was Boley, she also being of German descent. Mr. Wippel has three brothers and five sisters: Simon, his business partner; Peter, Frank, Katherine, Marguerite, Anna, Elizabeth, and Gertrude. In religious faith Mr. and Mrs. Wippel are Catholics. Mr. Wippel holds membership in the fraternal order, A. O. U. W. Heretofore Mr. Wippel has been a Democrat, but he is now a Roosevelt Republican, believing firmly in the man and his public policies. He is a partner with his brother in the possession of 640 acres of valley lands, and owns the home in which he and Mrs. Wippel reside. He is progressive and energetic, and wins success in whatever enterprise he engages.

CHARLES S. BAKER, a member of the firm of the Putnam Grocery Company of Ellensburg, Washington, was engaged for many years in the profession of teaching before he entered business life. He is a native of Illinois, having been born in Adams county, May 7, 1875. He grew to young manhood there, working on a farm and attending school, finishing his education at Quincy (Illinois) college. At twenty he began the work of teaching, his first school being in Adams county. After six years as teacher in Illinois Mr. Baker moved to Klickitat county, Washington, in 1891, and continued in the same profession. He was selected principal of the Centerville schools, which position he held four years. In 1898 he moved to Ellensburg and engaged in teaching in the country schools and also was bookkeeper for the Ellensburg Grocery & Commission Company. June 1st he formed a partnership with James J. Putnam and took over this business, changing the firm name to that under which the business is now conducted. Mr. Baker has been most successful in his business undertakings. He is the owner of the Webb building in Ellensburg; has property still in Klickitat county and owns business property at Waterville, Washington. He is a Republican and has always taken an active interest in politics, being now secretary of the county central committee. During his residence in Illinois he was alderman and city clerk at Loraine, having been elected on the anti-saloon ticket. Both of Mr. Baker's parents are living and are residents of Ellensburg, Washington, having moved west in 1902. His father, James Baker, was born in Maryland, in 1834, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He was a pioneer farmer in Illinois, settling there in 1850. Mr. Baker's mother, Roxanna F. (Hexcox) Baker, like her son, was a native of Adams county, Illinois, where she was born, in 1844. She was the mother of seven children. Mr. Baker's three brothers are: John L., in the real estate business at Hobart, Oklahoma Territory; Marcus F., railroad agent for the M. K. & T., at Tibbits, Missouri, and Rufus A., a resident of Ellensburg, Washington. His sisters are: Laura, now Mrs. J. B. Roley, of Denver, Colorado; Minnie, now Mrs. L. W. Taylor, of Edmunds, Washington, and Pearl, now Mrs. Clyde Williams, of Tacoma, Washington.

Mr. Baker was married in Illinois in July, 1891, to Gert'e Reece, who was born in Adams county, Illinois, in 1869. She taught in Illinois from 1887 to 1891, at which time she was married and came west, locating at Centerville, Washington, where she taught in the city schools with her husband. She graduated later from the Washington State Normal school at Ellensburg, and is now teaching at Cle-Elum, Washington. Her father, Richard M. Reece, was born in Adams county, Illinois, and followed farming and was for many years postmaster at Loraine. He now resides in Chicago. Her mother, Sarah (Hooper) Reece, is dead. She has three sisters living in Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Baker have three children. Ronald Franklin, Gladys Frances and Lessie Luella. Mr. Baker is prominent in a number of fraternal orders, being an active member of the K. of P., I. O. O. F., Women of Woodcraft and Royal Tribe of Joseph. He is also a member of the county board of education and a member of the eighth grade examiners.

ALFRED M. WRIGHT, a successful business man of Ellensburg, has the honor of having built, with his brother, the first saw mill erected in his city. Born in New York City, March 22, 1864, he was the son of Ezra W. Wright, who operated a saw mill on Staten Island and one in central New York. Of French descent, the father was born in Herkimer county, New York, in 1827. Being in ill health, he came west and settled in Kittitas county, Washington, in the vain hope of improvement, dying here in 1891. Two brothers of Ezra W. Wright gave up their lives in the cause of the Civil war, one of whom, serving as aid on the staff of Gen. Sheridan, was killed in the Shenandoah valley. The mother of Alfred M. Wright, Emma Cuttrel, of Scotch-English ancestry, was born in Jersey City, 1829, and died in 1873. Her father was proprietor of a shipyard in her native city, where members of her family even now continue to build ships. The boy, Alfred, grew up in the Empire state, working in his father's mill until reaching the age of twelve, when he removed with his father to a farm. Here he worked for two years, when he left his country home to learn the machinist's trade. In 1883 he sought health in Dakota, where, for three years, he followed his trade, at the end of which time he came to Ellensburg, entering at first into carpentering and contracting work. The year 1892 found him with his brother, William, engaged in the lumber milling business, in which success has rewarded their efforts. At the present time they jointly own two mills, one at Cle-Elum and one at Teanaway, together with a half interest in a third.

Mr. Wright was married, June 21, 1886, in New York state, to Miss Bertha R. Georgia, an old school-mate, a native of Otsego, New York. Being a woman of finished education, before her marriage she was engaged in teaching. Her father, Orrin Georgia, and her mother, Susan (Murray) Georgia, both were born in the state of New York, where she has three brothers and three sisters now living. The father died some years ago. Mr. Wright was a member of a family of seven, three sisters and one brother, Ezra H., being dead. Of his two surviving brothers, Frank C. Wright is living in California and William, Mr. Wright's business partner, makes Ellensburg his home. To Mr. and Mrs. Wright six children have been born: Nellie, Doris, Charlotte, Luvern, Acentith and Alfred. By the death of Mrs. Wright, September 30, 1901, this family of growing children were left motherless and since that time have been cared for solely by the father. Though the subject was in Ellensburg at the time of the great fire, he was fortunate enough to escape with little loss. Mr. Wright has ever taken a lively interest in the affairs of his city, and has served eight years as a member of its council. He is a wide-awake Republican, seldom being absent from a caucus or a convention of his chosen party.

MALCOLM McLENNAN, Malcolm McLennan, a widely known sheep raiser, and for a number of years sheep commissioner of his county, which position he still holds, was born in Scotland, in the northern part, during the month of September, 1866. His parents, Murdock and Anna McLennan, were both born, reared, and both died in Scotland; the mother dying in 1887 and the father in 1896. The first sixteen years of his life Malcolm McLennan spent in his native country on his father's farm, where he received a common school education. Regarding the United States as a country offering better inducements for a man of limited means than any other of which he had any knowledge, he chose this country as his future home; and in 1886 he made his advent in The Dalles, Oregon. Being somewhat familiar with the sheep business, and desiring to learn more of it as it is conducted in this country, young McLennan hired out as a herder to one of the extensive sheep men of eastern Oregon. This vocation he followed until he became thoroughly acquainted with all the details connected with the management of a sheep ranch. He then invested his savings in a small flock of sheep and went into business on his own account. With this as a nucleus he continued to add more sheep as he was enabled to do until at the present time he owns flocks numbering between nine and ten thousand head. After four years in eastern Oregon, he brought his sheep to Kittitas county, pasturing them among the hills and making his headquarters in North Yakima and Ellensburg. In the fall of 1868 Mr. McLennan was married in Yakima, to Mary Ledfield, a native of southern Oregon, born in 1880. Her life spent in the Yakima valley dates from her first year, when her parents, Thomas and Metta (Davis) Ledfield, removed to the town of Yakima, where Mr. Ledfield worked at his trade, that of jeweler. Mrs. McLennan's father and mother both were born in Oregon, and the parents of both were early pioneers of that state. Mr. McLennan has one brother, Ewen, and two sisters, Maggie and Jessie, all of whom live in Scotland. To Mr. and Mrs. McLennan has been born one son, Malcolm, now aged four years. Mr. McLennan is an enthusiastic worker in the Republican party, is a wide-awake, energetic business man, and is a living example of the success which can be brought about only through hard work and assiduity, coupled with sound business judgment. His opinion of the country in which he lives is that, while it has been a great stock region, the business is now somewhat overdone, and he further opines that the day is close at hand when the large stockmen will be forced to reduce their herds, in order that the business may be divided more equally among the masses and not practically controlled by a few extensive dealers, as is the present state of affairs. He also considers it not so good a country for cattle as for sheep, owing to the overstocked condition of the range where they pasture.

CARL A. SANDER. One of the finest ranches in Kittitas valley is owned by Carl A. Sander, who unites farming and dairying with the rearing of stock one and one-half miles northeast of Ellensburg. Mr. Sander began life in Berlin, Germany, in 1840. His father, Christian Sander, was born in Boyton on the Oder, in 1818, and died in 1895. His mother was Elizabeth (Wilach) Sander, also a native of Germany; she died the same year that her husband died.

Mr. Sander's early life was spent in his native land. At twenty-one he entered the German army, remaining in the service two years, during which period was fought the war between Germany and Denmark. He was severely wounded by the bursting of a shell in an engagement between the opposing forces, and was compelled to retire to private life. After having learned the miller's trade he came to the United States in 1864 and for two years followed the milling business in Florida, removing at the end of this time to Salina, Kansas, and later, across the Plains to New Mexico and Arizona, in which territories he worked in the quartz mills. Going to Seattle a few months later, he joined twenty companions in the purchase of a boat, in which they sailed to Alaska in search of gold. In this venture he lost all the accumulations of former years and on one occasion barely escaped with his life. Returning from Alaska, he settled first in Portland, Oregon, and afterward in The Dalles, where he operated The Dalles flour mill, during the years 1870-71, coming to Kittitas county April 20, 1871. He at once took up 160 acres of land and began clearing it, succeeding in making 25,000 rails the first winter. Leaving the farm in the spring he went to Yakima, and for two years worked there in a flour mill, later he bought the plant, afterwards dividing his time between the mill and the farm. In the meanwhile he had acquired a small herd of cattle which was growing into money on the range. At the end of ten years, with his savings, added to the profits from his cattle, he bought the mill, becoming thenceforth its owner and operator. At the same time he purchased one-half interest in 300 additional acres of land. In 1880 he sold his mill interests at a considerable profit, and also his land in Yakima county, at once erecting on his own land a large flour mill, which unfortunately was destroyed by fire. This was the fifth mill to be built in the county, Fort Simcoe claiming the first.

Mr. Sander was married in Old Yakima, in 1881, to Olive Cleman, born in Oregon in 1860. Mrs. Sander's father was Charles Augustus Cleman, a teacher, farmer and stockman, born in Tennessee. He crossed the Plains to Oregon during the early Indian troubles, and died in that state in 1882. He was a hard working and prosperous man. His wife, the mother of Mrs. Sander, was Rebecca (Griffith) Cleman, a native of Missouri. She crossed the Plains to Oregon with her parents in early life and died in 1902. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sander lived for a number of years in a log cabin, until fortune so favored them as to enable them to build their present sumptuous home. Prior to their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Sander were inured to the privations of pioneer life. Mr. Sander had had experience in grinding wheat for flour in a coffee mill and in taking lonely and hazardous journeys through the untrodden forest to The Dalles for provisions. Mrs. Sander was a pioneer of Oregon as well as of Kittitas county. Her husband assisted in the construction of the stockade at Yakima in 1877 and she was one of the first to seek refuge behind its walls. Mr. Sander has a brother, Frederick W., and two sisters, Pauline and Anstina, living in Berlin, Germany. Mrs. Sander has three brothers: Perry and Jacob, of Ellensburg; John, of North Yakima; also a half-brother, Clifton Cleman, of Yakima county. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Sander are: Frederick William, Anna and Clara Edith, who are students in the State Normal at Ellensburg, and a younger daughter, Mabel.

When Mr. Sander settled here there were but ten families in the valley, the work of development having scarcely begun. He had faith in the future of the country and events have proven that his faith was well grounded. He has accumulated twelve hundred acres of land, about nine hundred in one body, and all supplied with water, improved with house, barn, granaries, etc., and stocked with dairy cows and other live stock. The first water system of Ellensburg was installed by Mr. Sander in 1887 and sold to a New York company in 1891.

Mr. and Mrs. Sander are connected with the Lutheran church. Mr. Sander is Republican in politics, though not an active partisan. He has ever been an active, enterprising man and his name must always be prominent in the history of the growth and development of the country in which he has made his home.

PERRY CLEMAN. A man of thrift and business capacity is Perry Cleman, native Oregonian and sheep man of Ellensburg, born near Eugene, Oregon, in 1857. He was the son of a veteran printer, farmer and stockman, Augustan Cleman, born in Tennessee, who crossed the Plains to Oregon and settled in the Willamette valley, dying in 1882. Rebecca A. (Griffith) Cleman, Perry Cleman's mother, was born in Missouri, and crossed the Plains in the early fifties, when she met and was married to Augustan Cleman, and with him settled at Salem, Oregon. She passed away November 10, 1902.

When Perry Cleman was eight years of age his parents brought the family to make its home in the Yakima valley. The father later removed to the Kittitas valley, where he bought land. Perry remained in the Yakima valley, where he made his home until 1883, when he also settled in the Kittitas valley. However, he had visited the valley many times prior to making his home there and was thoroughly familiar with the country and was firmly convinced as to its advantages for his chosen vocation—that of handling stock. Since arriving at the age of eighteen, Mr. Cleman has had charge of his own affairs, and his boyhood days having been spent among stockmen, he naturally took up that line of business for himself. As early as the age of twenty he had accumulated a small herd of cattle of his own and for years continued to add to the number until he became known as a prosperous cattle raiser. Subsequently he began to till the soil, and to his live stock interests he added a flock of sheep. He continued business in this way until about the year 1900, when he disposed of his cattle and devoted his attention almost entirely to the rearing of sheep.

Perry Cleman was married in 1883 to Anna Lewis, also a native of Oregon, in which state her parents were pioneers. Her father, William Lewis, came from Missouri, the state of his birth, in an early day and settled in Oregon. He was an Indian fighter in the war of 1855-56, and, in civil life, a farmer and stock raiser. He now makes his home in Okanogan county, Washington. Mrs. Cleman's mother, Ruth McCallister in her maiden days, was born in the state of Illinois. She, too, crossed the Plains and settled in Oregon early in the history of that state, where she was married to Mr. Lewis. She is still living.

Mr. Cleman has two brothers: John, a stockman and farmer of the Yakima valley, and Jacob, of Ellensburg, and five sisters, Caroline Wagon, North Yakima; Ruth Pressy, Areas Island, near Victoria; Olive Sanders, Ellensburg; Flora Small, Seattle, and Rosa Olson, two miles from Ellensburg. His children are: Virgil, the eldest, aged nineteen; Parnsy, Flora, Stanley, Alice, Otho, Edith and Charles. With the exception of the latter two, who are under school age, all are attending school. In lodge circles Mr. Cleman is known only as a member of the K. of P. and Ancient Order of United Workmen. Politically, he is a Democrat. His principal holdings in the stock business consist of about three thousand five hundred sheep, which number he is continually increasing. Since making his home in the Yakima and Kittitas valleys, Mr. Cleman's life has been closely connected with the history of those sections. At the time of the memorable Indian outbreak he was instrumental, with others, in protecting the settlers from the fury of the savages, and some of the stockades he, with his father and brother, erected on their farms until recently were conspicuous landmarks of the country.

WILLIAM B. LEVERICH. He is the superintendent of the electric light department for the city at Ellensburg, Washington, a position he is filling with great success. He comes of famous old New York stock and was born in New York City in 1852. His father, Benjamin Leverich, was born in New York in 1828 and died of cholera in 1865. His mother, Mary (Hopson) Leverich, was also a native of New York, her ancestors being among those Hollanders who made the first settlement at New Amsterdam. His father died when William Leverich was but a few years old, so he knew little of his parent. His mother was left some means. The boy attended the common schools and started to learn the trade of boiler making. He did not take kindly to that employment and ran away, coming west when seventeen years old and locating in California. He joined the navy and served three years during which time he visited China and Japan and South America. He decided he could do better in other lines and left the navy and secured employment with the General Electric Company at San Francisco. This line of work he has followed since with great success. He was in Astoria for seven years in the electrical business and moved to Ellensburg, Washington, December 28, 1898, to accept the position he now occupies.

Mr. Leverich was married in Astoria, Oregon, in 1886 to Mary Miller, a native of St. Johns, New Brunswick. She died in 1897. They had one child, a daughter, Pearl, who was sixteen years old October 16, 1903, and who is living with her father at Ellensburg. Mr. Leverich has seven sisters and one brother living in New York. They are named respectively: Ada, Emma, Ella, Lydia, Sofia, Minnie and Lillie (twins), and Georee. Mr. Leverich is a member of the Republican party and takes considerable interest in political matters. He is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

JACOB P. BECKER, the well-known and progressive citizen and blacksmith of Ellensburg, was born in the state of California, October 16, 1861. His father, Jacob Becker, was a native of Germany, where he was born, January 23, 1826. He was a blacksmith by trade, and also served in the army of his native land for three years. At the age of thirty-two he started for the United States, passing around Cape Horn and landing at San Francisco. He at once resorted to his trade for a livelihood, opening up a shop on his own responsibility. He remained in California for three years, doing well, when he decided to verify the favorable reports from the north in Oregon, making The Dalles his first stopping place. Here he remained for nine years, at the end of which period, 1872, he came to Ellensburg, where he opened a shop and continued to work at his trade until his death, December 12, 1890. His wife, Josephine (Guisse) Becker, was a native of Germany. Jacob P., our subject, came to Ellensburg with his parents at the age of eleven, and has grown right up in the blacksmith shop, which in some measure accounts for his mechanical skill for which he is reputed in Kittitas county. But while naturally proud of his name as a mechanic, Mr. Becker has many regrets that his time as a youth was so wholly taken up in the shop that his education was to some extent neglected. The Beckers can truly be termed the "pioneer blacksmiths" of Kittitas county, as they have been continuously at the business since 1872. Fifteen years ago he associated himself with Martin Stiren, which partnership has since continued, and it can be said without fear of contradiction that they today have the most up-to-date shop in the county, and there is nothing in their line that they do not successfully undertake. All the machinery of the shop is operated by a gasoline engine.

Mr. Becker was united in marriage April 9, 1882, to Miss Lottie H. Preston, a native of Eastport, Maine, where she was born, April 23, 1863. Her father, Neunier Preston, a teamster, was likewise a native of Maine, in which state he also died. Her mother, Charlotte Preston, lives in Ellensburg with her son. Mr. and Mrs. Becker have one son, Chester F., who is now in Portland studying dental surgery. Mr. Becker has two brothers and four sisters, all of whom are living. Fraternally, Mr. B. is connected with the Knights of Pythias, of which he is a zealous and consistent member. He is an ardent Republican and active in the councils of his party. He is a public-spirited, enterprising citizen, ever interested in promoting the best interests of his town and community, and holds in a high degree the respect of his fellow citizens.

MARTIN MEEHAN is a retired stockman living in Ellensburg, Washington. He has had many ups and downs in his business undertakings, but misfortune never disheartened him, and he has pluckily started in again at each reverse to win back what he had lost. He was born in New York February 15, 1838. His father, John Meehan, was born in Ireland in 1801, came to America in 1821 and died in 1885. His mother, Mary (Crahen) Meehan, was also a native of Ireland and died in 1893. Mr. Meehan went to country school and worked on a farm until 1852, when he secured employment in the lumber industry, in the woods of Wisconsin, where he remained until June, 1875. He then moved to Franklin county, Iowa, and settled on a farm for a short period, then came west and spent six months traveling through California, looking for a location. He arrived in Seattle, Washington, November 20, 1875, and the following year engaged in logging on Lake Washington, adjoining that city. In August, 1877, he went to Ellensburg, which then consisted of four small shacks and a log store building, took up a farm across the river from that village and engaged in stock raising. In 1879 he lost most of his horses, moved to Ellensburg, and in 1881 commenced buying cattle. That fall he built the first rustic house ever built in Ellensburg, with lumber brought from Wenas. During the severe winter of 1881-2 he lost nearly one thousand head of stock, having but sixteen head left of his large herd. He then engaged in the timber business, making enough money to pay every dollar of debt he owed, and selling his house began buying calves at $3 and $4 a head, thus accumulating about one hundred forty head. On account of rheumatism he sold out and went east. He returned the following spring, built a house on his farm and again went into the stock business. He accumulated about two hundred fifty head, which he sold in 1895, and the following year he drove his herd of 375 head of horses to Seattle and disposed of them. In 1897 he went to Alaska, where he remained until the summer of 1899. He was at Dyea, built boats on Lake Bennett and went to Dawson, thence to Seventy Mile creek; but found no gold. On his return to the Sound he engaged in the real estate business in Everett for two years, with considerable profit. October 10, 1901, he returned to his own property near Ellensburg and has now retired from business. Mr. Meehan was married in 1860 to Miss Alice Benigon, who was born in upper Canada in 1840, and died November 10, 1872. They had one daughter, Alice, who is the wife of J. J. Carpenter, of Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Mr. Meehan is a member of the Catholic church. He is a Democrat and while he takes much interest in politics has never held office nor been a seeker after political preferment.

EDWARD C. FERGUSON. Edward C. Ferguson is one of the happy characters of Ellensburg. He is an all-round sportsman, and in business life is a plumber and steam fitter. He was born in London, England, August 31, 1852. His father, Mark Ferguson, was born in England, 1814, and in business was a wholesale and retail liquor dealer and manufacturer. He died in 1859. Our subject's mother was Elizabeth (Coxon) Ferguson, also a native of England, born in 1814, dying in 1869. Mr. Ferguson has one brother, Henry, a merchant of London. Edward C. Ferguson received a college education in his native country, and later took a technical course in plumbing and sanitary engineering, which he completed in his twenty-first year. He was in business for himself in London and Liverpool, which he followed successfully for fourteen years. At the end of that period he came to New York City and entered the employ, as foreman, of Murhead Bros., plumbers. He later took contracts on his own account in New York, continuing thus for seven years. His next move was to Boston, where he remained a like period in the plumbing business, and in 1888 he came to Seattle. While in Seattle he took a contract to do a piece of work in Ellensburg and was so favorably impressed with conditions here that he decided to remain. He has since resided in the city and is now doing a thriving business in his line. In politics Mr. Ferguson is a Republican. He has ever been an active and aggressive party worker, representing his constituents in many of his party's caucuses and convent ions, but has never held elective office. For three years he was chief of the Ellensburg fire department, and was the organizer of the present department. It was he, too, who was instrumental in the purchase of the first sprinkler for Ellensburg's dusty streets. He is a member of good standing in the Knights of Pythias order, in which he displays the same spirit and energy that have characterized him in all other institutions with which he has been allied. Mr. Ferguson is a Protestant in religion, but belongs to no particular denomination; however, he is ever ready and generous when called upon by any church for aid. He owns no small amount of valuable real estate, besides his business. As was initially stated in this sketch, Mr. Ferguson is an all-round sportsman. He is passionately fond of fishing and hunting; especially does he take delight in the pursuit of "big game." He is an expert shot with a rifle or pistol and is well known throughout the Northwest as being a thorough athlete. An ardent lover of dogs and birds, he has one of the first best kennels of Gordon setter dogs, and as fine a pen of game chickens as is to be found in this state. His genial and generous nature, combined with his industry and honor, has made for him an enviable reputation among his people.

WILLIAM O. AMES. Ellensburg's first school was taught in the winter of 1881-82 by W. O. Ames, who came here from Goldendale, Klickitat county, where for two years he had engaged in teaching. In 1882, abandoning his profession as teacher, he began work in Ellensburg as a carpenter and builder and, during the past twenty years, has erected a good portion of the city's business and residence buildings. He has twice erected the Northern Pacific roundhouse, it having been destroyed by fire. At the time of the general fire, when Ellensburg was almost totally destroyed, he and his partner, Jack McCarthy, met with considerable loss by the partial destruction of several large buildings which they had under construction at that time. Later they sustained a heavy loss by the total destruction of their planing mill. In this mill and in their various other milling, lumbering and building enterprises they employed at one time upward of two hundred men. During his long residence in Ellensburg he has followed steadily his business as contractor and builder, and has become thoroughly identified with the city's business life. Mr. Ames was born in South Tamworth, Carroll county, New Hampshire, January 3, 1860. His father was William P. Ames, a lumber manufacturer of South Tamworth, New Hampshire, where he was born in 1824. The father came to Klickitat county, Washington, in 1879 and died there in 1892. He served during the Civil war in a New Hampshire regiment as army surgeon and during an engagement at Burwick's Bay was wounded and taken prisoner, returning after his release and recovery to New Hampshire. The mother of W. O. Ames was Adaline M. (Locke) Ames, also a native of New Hampshire, where she was born in 1824; she died November 22, 1897. Her father, Elisha Locke, was a man of great intellectual attainments and was a leading citizen of his community, both in educational and other matters. When W. O. Ames was eleven years old his parents moved to Mahaska county, Iowa, where he grew to young manhood, working on the farm and attending the common schools. After finishing the common school course he entered the Mitchelville Seminary, from which he was graduated, going thereafter direct to Goldendale, Washington, where he became a teacher in 1879. His Ellensburg school in 1881 consisted of forty-nine pupils that were crowded into one small room; this was the beginning of the magnificent educational institutions of the city of today.

Mr. Ames was married March 27, 1884, to Sallie Houghton, who was born in San Francisco in 1863. Like her husband, she was for some time a teacher. Her father was Joseph B. Houghton, born in Maine in 1832 and died in Tacoma, Washington, in 1895. He went to California with the immigrants of '49 and in 1877 settled in Goldendale. He was a contractor and builder; was active in politics and for many years served as city councilman in Tacoma. He was a public spirited man and was a wise counselor; his ancestors were English. Mrs. Ames' mother is Abbie F. (Caldwell) Houghton, a lady of Scotch descent, who was born in Maine in 1837 and who now resides in Tacoma. Mrs. Ames has three brothers and three sisters living. H. F. Bean, a veteran of the Civil war, is a half-brother, and Ida F. Baker is a half-sister of Mr. Ames; Stanley L. Ames is a brother and Kate E. Shoemaker and Carrie M. Henton are sisters. Six children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Ames: Earnest W., a graduate of the high school; Willis, Hazel, Helen, Adelyn and Houghton. Mrs. Ames is a member of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Ames holds membership in the Woodmen of the World order. Both are prominent in social and church circles and are esteemed and respected by all. Mr. Ames is a great admirer and firm supporter of President Roosevelt. He is among the successful pioneers of Ellensburg.

WILLIAM D. KILLMORE. It has fallen to the lot of but few men to have experienced a more varied, eventful and romantic career than that of William D. Killmore. Born in Syracuse, New York, October 15, 1832, he is of a race of forerunners of the history, industrial life and development of the United States. His father, Luke Killmore, was a native of Dutchess county, New York, born in 1796 and died in 1867. By trade Luke Killmore was a contractor and builder, and he enjoyed the distinction of having built thirty miles of the old and famous Erie canal. At the time when the Canadian forces moved upon Black Rock, William D. Killmore was a volunteer in the army organized to repel that invasion. He was of Holland Dutch ancestry, originating from the old stock of Philip Kulmuer, who came to the colony of New York in 1710, the name having since been changed to Killmore. The subject's grandfather, Henry Killmore, was a colonel in the Continental army during the Revolutionary war, and died at the extremely old age of one hundred and seventeen years. William Killmore's mother was Axy (Rathburn) Killmore. She was born in America, and while acquiring her early education was a schoolmate of Millard Fillmore, who subsequently became president of his nation. This was in the little town of Sodus, near Auburn. Her father invented and made the first stove, at Albany, New York.

The first fifteen years of Mr. Killmore's life were spent in the state of his birth. He then went to work out the difficult problem of existence for himself. His first employment was in the capacity of "cub" pilot on the steamers Alida and Frances Skidder, plying the Hudson between Albany and the sea. Leaving the river he entered railroad life, and for two years fired a locomotive on a line in New York state. Later removing to Chicago, he became an engine driver on the Northwestern railroad, which position he held for seven years. In 1859 he crossed the Plains to Pike's Peak, being attracted thither by the gold excitement which had recently come over that section. He had been in this locality but two years when, in 1861, he enlisted in Company F, First Colorado cavalry, commanded by Captain Cook, to fight the Indians. With his company he waged war against the hostile tribes all winter, then the following spring went south to encounter the daring Sibley and turn him back. The little army succeeded in doing this, but not until four engagements had been fought between "Pigeon Ranch" and Galestheo, fifteen miles from Santa Fe, New Mexico, the last named being the bloodiest battle of the four. At the battle of "Pigeon Ranch" Killmore with seventy followers attacked a force of three hundred, and captured it. During the fight he received in all seven bullets, and suffered the loss of two fingers. But three weeks afterward he was out of the hospital and doing duty. With his regiment he marched back to Denver, and was there discharged after the surrender of Gen. Lee. After being mustered out he was employed near Denver for a time, starting with the army and going thence to the City of Mexico after the gold excitement at the Palo Alto mines. He did not reach the mines, but was with the army in Mexico at the time of the capture of Maximilian, and was an eye-witness of that famous leader's tragic death. For five years he was an engineer on the Mexico & Alpasaco railroad, after which time he returned to his old home in New York. After one summer there he again came west, this time to Harrison county, Missouri, and bought a farm. Two and one-half years were spent on this farm when, in 1873, he sold out, and in May of that year he landed in Seattle. He at once came to the Kittitas valley on a tour to spy out the land, and while on this trip he met with an old surveyor named Andrews, who had made a survey of the valley, and who recommended the land as being desirable for the making of a home. Mr. Killmore himself was pleased with the country, so, on June 8, 1873, he filed a homestead on the farm where he now lives. With him on this tour were J. H. Stevens and Morris Bell, each of whom also took land. When Mr. Killmore left Missouri it was with $1,200 in his pocket; when he arrived in the Kittitas valley he had but twelve. The provisions the three families brought with them were reduced to $1.00 worth of sugar, the same amount of coffee, and a little tea, salt, soap, etc., which they had carried in on the back of a pack animal previously hired by Messrs. Killmore and Stevens for $5.00. Mr. Killmore at that time had a wife and babe, and this meager supply of groceries was all the three families had during the following sixteen months, when Mr. Killmore bought in Ellensburg the first sugar since coming to the country. The supplies at that time came in almost exclusively from The Dalles, Oregon. Mr. Killmore made some trips to that station for provisions, and as there was then no money in circulation he took his pay in goods. But ten men had preceded him in the valley, and it truly was a pioneer's life which they led. He was in the valley at the time of the Indian uprising in 1877, and assisted in building fortifications to protect the families.

The date of his marriage was Feb. 18, 1872, while he was on his farm in Missouri. His bride was Josephine Rego, of Indiana, the daughter of John B. Rego, a native of Metz, France; and her mother was Katherine (Freedley) Rego, born in Pennsylvania, of German parentage. Mr. Killmore has three sisters and one brother, George B.; the brother lives with him near Ellensburg. His sisters are: Katie Downer, who owns the Downer block, Syracuse, New York, for which she was once offered $250,000 by the government as a site for a postoffice building; Rosetta Bragdon, of Syracuse, whose husband was manager of a plank road thirteen miles long, and Jaqueline Seeley, wife of the Albany, New York, depot master, Hyrem Seeley. Children of Mr. and Mrs. Killmore are: John S., Ida Bull, Lottie, Clara Wason, Katie and Effie. The first and second named and Clara Wason reside a few miles south from Ellensburg, while Lottie, Katie and Effie are at home. Mr. Killmore has been a lifelong Republican, though not an active party man. He is at present a trustee of the Tanum ditch owned by the farmers of his locality. Although he came to the country with a capital of but $12, he is now worth between $40,000 and $50,000. His farm consists of two hundred acres of choice land, well improved, well stocked and watered, and is looked upon as being one of the best farms in the valley. He has been a good stockman and a good manager generally. His present high standing, social and financial, is the outgrowth of spotless integrity, industry and rare business capability.

WILLIAM J. PEED. Prominent among the business men who began operations in Ellensburg in an early day and whose faith in the city's future has never wavered is W. J. Peed, the man whose name stands at the head of this article. For twenty years he has been identified as a business man with the interests of Ellensburg and has had much to do with the progress not only of Ellensburg but of Kittitas county. Mr. Peed is a native of Tippecanoe county, Indiana, where he was born in 1861. His father was William Peed, a native of Kentucky; he died in 1872. The mother, now living in Denver, Col., is Mary (Hickson) Peed, a native of Ohio, where she was born in 1822; her father was a soldier of the Revolution, serving directly under General Washington. When W. J. Peed was eleven years old his mother moved to Illinois, and two years later, in 1874, to Arkansas City, Cowley county, Kansas, where our subject learned the trade of a harness and saddle maker with a half-brother, Mitchell, who was then engaged in the business. After working for some time in the brother's establishment, he bought out the business and conducted it alone until 1879, when he sold out and went first to New Mexico and later to Colorado, where he remained until 1882. In this year he came to the Pacific coast and in 1883 to Ellensburg, at once going to work at his trade. After a few months he established a business of his own and for a time conducted it alone. At a later period he joined a partner in the establishment, but for some time past has operated alone and has built up and is enjoying a good trade.

Mr. Peed was married in Ellensburg in 1894 to Lizzie Shortill, who was born in New Brunswick, Canada. She is the daughter of Richard Shortill, deceased. Her mother is still living. Mr. Peed has one sister, Linnea Thompson, living in Denver, Colorado, and two half-brothers, James I. and Robert Mitchell, living in Kansas City, Kansas. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Peed are Clarence, Thresa and Vern, all at home in Ellensburg. Mr. Peed is a Republican and has always been an active worker in the ranks. He is at present a member of the city council of Ellensburg and has before served in that capacity. He has been a member of the school board and has always contended for the best educational advantages. He has been active in the work of securing for the valley a perfect system of irrigation and takes a lively interest in all public enterprises. He has investments in lands in the valley and is recognized as one of its substantial and progressive citizens.

JOHN G. ALDRICH. Among the young men of Ellensburg there is none better fitted by education and by personal traits of character for a successful business career than the subject of this article, J. G. Aldrich. Although he has been a resident of Ellensburg scarcely three years, he has already built up a good business as one of the proprietors of the Hotel Vanderbilt, and has established a reputation as an energetic and progressive citizen. Mr. Aldrich was born in Summit, Benton county, Oregon, August 10, 1876. His early life was spent in the Willamette valley and his education began in the common schools of his native town; continuing his studies he completed full high school courses and in 1895 entered the Oregon State Agricultural College at Corvallis, graduating therefrom June 30, 1899, receiving the degree of B. S. Until the time of his graduation he lived in the Willamette valley, with the exception of three years spent in Phoenix, Arizona, the change of residence being made on account of his father's health. After the completion of his collegiate course he took the state teachers' examination and was granted a certificate authorizing him to teach in any school in the state of Oregon for a term of six years. It being his original intention to follow school work, he came to Yakima county in August, 1899, and taught a six-months school. At the close of this term a change was made in former plans and, quitting school work, he became connected with the Bartholet Hotel in North Yakima, remaining there as clerk for two years, until January 11, 1902, when he left North Yakima and came to Ellensburg. Being greatly pleased with climatic conditions and business prospects he determined to locate here and, forming a partnership with F. S. Jackson, he joined him in taking a lease on the Vanderbilt Hotel; they took possession February 1, 1902, and have since conducted this popular hostelry in a manner highly satisfactory to the public, making of it also, from a financial standpoint, a paying property.

The father of our subject is James H. Aldrich, now a resident of Portland; he is a pioneer of the Willamette valley, having settled there in the sixties. Born in 1848, his early manhood was spent in the middle west, a portion of it in Iowa and Missouri. On the breaking out of the Civil war he enlisted in the Forty-fourth Missouri volunteers, going into the service as a drummer. His regiment was under General Pope; his term of service lasted three years, during which he was once captured by the enemy and for a time held prisoner, securing his release eventually in an exchange of prisoners made by the opposing forces. James H. Aldrich is of Scotch and German extraction, his father being of German and his mother of Scotch descent. Before entering the army he had edited a newspaper in Iowa. At the close of the war he crossed the Plains with ox teams, settling in Benton county, Oregon, where he again entered the newspaper field, publishing and editing first the Newport News and later the Corvallis Times. He is an active Democrat and was a firm friend and supporter of Sylvester Fenoyer, ex-governor of the state. The mother of John G. Aldrich was Ida (Stoughton) Aldrich, a native of Michigan; she died in 1881. E. B. Aldrich, a merchant of Fossil, Oregon, is a brother of the Ellensburg townsman. He has, besides, two half-brothers and two half-sisters.

In politics, Mr. Aldrich is an active Republican, and is deeply interested in the success of the party; attends conventions and keeps posted on the political situation. He is a man of acknowledged good judgment and in all things allows his better judgment to dictate the course he pursues. In addition to the hotel he is interested in the mines near Mount Stuart, having a good claim in the best section of that mining region. Having been graduated from college as a lieutenant of cadets, he is at all times interested in the military affairs of state and nation. He is a member of the Yeomen fraternal order, is public spirited, enjoys the confidence and esteem of all and has before him a most promising future.

FRANK S. JACKSON. Although not a native of the Yakima valley, in the sense of having been born here, the young man whose name stands at the head of this article has lived in the valley, at first in Yakima county and later in Kittitas county, since his twelfth year and may consequently be said to have been raised here. He has witnessed the wonderful development of the country and has become thoroughly identified with its commercial and political life. F. S. Jackson is a native of San Diego, California, where he was born December 6, 1869, and has the distinction of being the first American boy baby born in that city, whether his parents moved from Mendocino county, the same state, in 1867. In 1869 the family moved to Napa county, California, making it their home for eight years, and here our subject's school days began. Another move was made, this time to Old Yakima in 1881; here F. S. Jackson worked for a number of years with his father on the farm and in other pursuits, in the meanwhile attending the public schools during the fall and winter months until eighteen years of age, when he began doing for himself, at first engaging in the cultivation of hops and other farm products and eventually opening a store of confectioneries, in which business he continued until the time of his coming to Ellensburg, when he formed a partnership with J. G. Aldrich in leasing and conducting the Vanderbilt Hotel, February 1, 1902. His business career has thus far been in a true sense successful, and in the management of the hotel he has gained the approval not only of the traveling public but of Ellensburg patrons as well, and has made the business financially profitable.

The father of our subject was John Jackson, a merchant and speculator, who was born in Jefferson City, Missouri, in 1812 and died in Old Yakima in 1886. At the time of the war with Mexico he was a resident of Texas, and during that war served two years as a ranger under Sam Houston. After the war he remained for a time in Red River county, Texas, in mercantile pursuits, but eventually went to Old Mexico, where he lived two years, witnessing the siege of the City of Mexico by the French. From Mexico he went to Mendocino, California, in 1865, removing two years later to San Diego, where he organized a company and took up all the tide land about that city, engaging for a time in land speculations. In 1867 he moved to Napa county, California, and engaged in fruit raising and wine making until 1881, when he settled at Old Yakima, continuing until his death in the production of hops and cereals. He was married April 22, 1846, to Mary Bowman, a native of Kentucky, where she was born in 1831, the wedding taking place in Hopkins county, Texas. The maternal grandparents were Linerus and Elizabeth (Cheatham) Bowman, the latter of English parentage. Mary left the seminary at the age of fifteen to become the wife of Mr. Jackson, and was through all of the Texas border troubles. In coming to California in 1865 she walked ninety miles across the Colorado desert and was with her husband in many hazardous and exciting experiences. The elder Jackson was a Royal Arch Mason and delivered many lectures on Masonry.

Frank S. Jackson has eight brothers and sisters living: Samuel H., on the Sound; Maxey, a cattle man of North Yakima; John B., a hop raiser, North Yakima; Cleopatra, the wife of Dr. McCormick, San Francisco; Philip, a clerk, North Yakima; Ida Stewart, in Idaho; Ella Stout, Seattle; and Anna Jackson, living in Whatcom.

Mr. Jackson is independent in political thought but is an avowed supporter of President Roosevelt. He is in sympathy with all public movements of a progressive nature and takes a lively interest in all measures proposed for the general advancement of the town and surrounding country.

GEORGE E. FORD. A general rule of life is that a man chooses the business in which he engages, suiting his own inclinations as far as possible and taking into consideration his adaptability to the pursuit chosen. Another general rule is that a man is rarely successful in a business into which unusual circumstances have in a certain sense forced him. Neither of these general rules has applied to George E. Ford, who has for ten years been successfully engaged in the fruit and confectionery business in Ellensburg, a business in which he engaged as the result of a railroad accident, and not altogether from choice. Mr. Ford was born in Lyman, New Hampshire, in 1863, and after the usual number of years spent in the common and high schools of his native state, began railroading at the age of eighteen. He followed the work in New Hampshire until twenty-one years old, when he became a brakeman on the B. & M. R. railroad in Nebraska, working up in a short time to a position as conductor. After four years service on this road he came to Washington and was for four years a conductor on the Northern Pacific railroad. In 1892 he met with a serious accident at Prosser while on duty, the breaking of a pilot bar causing him the loss of one limb, which was cut off between the knee and hip. Being a man of iron constitution, he recovered in a remarkably short time from this injury, which would have killed a man with less vitality and nerve force; he did not go to the hospital, but was brought direct to Ellensburg, where the limb was amputated and the wound dressed. In twelve days he was able to be up, and in eighteen days he was sufficiently recovered to be removed to another residence. The loss of his limb incapacitated him for the train service and he entered the office of the company at Ellensburg as a clerk. One year later he resigned this position and established himself in his present line of business, in which he has since continued and which has proven successful; he has continuously enjoyed a profitable trade. The railroad company treated him fairly and generously, allowing him damages on account of the accident without even the threat of a suit. The father of George E. Ford is Samuel P. Ford, a native of New Hampshire, where he was born in 1833 and where he still lives; he is a farmer by occupation and is of English extraction, his parents being among the earliest settlers at Lowell, Massachusetts, from which place they afterward moved to Haverhill, New Hampshire, where Samuel was born. The Ford family was one of the oldest and most distinguished in the early history of Massachusetts, the grandfather serving as a captain in the Revolution. Jane E. (Kelsea) Ford is the mother of the Ellensburg townsman; she is still living in New Hampshire, where she was born in 1835. Her ancestors were also of the very early settlers in the New England states.

Mr. Ford was married in 1890 to Josie Mayberry, a school teacher and a native of Maine. She is the daughter of J. H. Mayberry. Her mother was a Morrison, an old New England family. Both father and mother were natives of Maine. Mr. Ford has one brother and one sister: Lawrence K. Ford, living in New Hampshire, and Mary A. Ford, a resident of Hampton, Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. Ford have four children—Reginald, Jane, Lawrence and Wendall. Mr. Ford is a Republican; although not an active partisan in the sense of being a professed politician, he is always deeply interested in results. He has faith in the future of his home town and county and is one of the reliable, substantial and respected citizens of Ellensburg.

DR. ROY A. WEAVER. Coming to the Kittitas valley at the age of two years with his parents, before a railroad brought modern advantages to the doors of settlers, Dr. Roy A. Weaver is a typical western young man, practicing the profession of dentistry with success and taking a prominent part in the upbuilding of the town in which he has grown to young manhood. Dr. Weaver was born in Joplin, Missouri, August 29, 1880. His father, John N. Weaver, is a mechanic and farmer by occupation, and was born in Terre Haute, Indiana, in 1841. In 1882, taking their children with them, the father and mother came to the Kittitas valley, where they took up a home on the west side of the river near Ellensburg. There was little of a settlement in this section at that time, and pioneer life meant hardship and some privation. Mr. Weaver had poor health in Missouri, and came west in the hope of bettering it. He is still living in the valley. He is of German descent. He had a brother in the Civil war. Dr. Weaver's mother, Anna M. (McDowell) Weaver, is from an old Scotch-Irish family, prominently identified with the early settlement of Illinois and Indiana. Four of her uncles were in the Civil war and one ancestor fought in the War of 1812. She traces her ancestry to General McDowell. Dr. Weaver attended the common school and later the high school in Ellensburg, graduating in 1899. He then began studying dentistry in Dr. Fishburn's office. At the end of an eighteen months' apprenticeship he went to Portland, Oregon, where he took a year's course in a dental college. He then went to Indianapolis in the fall of 1901 and attended dental college there for two years, graduating May 2, 1903. After taking a brief vacation and visiting relatives in the east he came to Ellensburg and opened an office.

Dr. Weaver is independent in political thought, but holds allegiance to Roosevelt and his administration. He is not married. He has two brothers and one sister. Cora Weaver and Lafayette Weaver live at Sultania, California. Victor V. Weaver is a native of Kittitas county, born in 1883. He is attending the Washington Agricultural college.

AMASA S. RANDALL. Among the well established and substantial weekly newspapers published in the Pacific Northwest the Ellensburg Localizer maintains a prominent position. This sketch has to deal with its editor and manager, Amasa S. Randall. Associated with his brothers, U. M. and M. E. Randall, working under the firm name of The Cascade Printing and Publishing Company, Mr. Randall has a chain of three weeklies, the one named, the Cascade Miner and the Cle-Elum Echo, the two latter being published at Roslyn and Cle-Elum, respectively.

Amasa S. Randall was born at Siaron, Minnesota, December 28, 1869, the son of Thomas J. Randall, a farmer. He spent the first eighteen years of his life in working on his father's farm and attending district school. He graduated from the grammar school, then went to Adel, Iowa, where he spent two years in the high school. At that time Mr. Randall's intention was to follow the trade of contractor and builder, but he decided to waive that ambition for the present and come to Ellensburg, whither his father had preceded him. He started for the West with a herd of dairy cows, thinking to enter the dairy business, but in crossing the Yellowstone his train was wrecked by the giving way of the bridge caused by the heavy pressure against it of ice and water. His cattle were lost, and indeed, but for the timely aid of the fireman at the last moment, Mr. Randall himself would have been drowned. Subsequently he obtained from the railroad company about one-half the value of the cattle. Mr. Randall pushed on to Ellensburg, however, but on account of his loss had to change his plans throughout. In Ellensburg he worked for a time with his father at contracting, then entered the mechanical department of the Ellensburg Capital. After serving four years' apprenticeship he secured a more remunerative position on the Localizer, working as a printer.

He remained with the Localizer but six months, however, then worked for a time on the Ellensburg Register, after which he left the state to establish a publishing office of his own at Woodland, California. Here his purpose was to publish a string of newspapers on contract, and in this business he was so successful that he later removed to Sacramento, where he could have better facilities than were to be had in Woodland. After a year at Sacramento he sold out and returned to Woodland to accept the position of business manager with the Home Alliance, a weekly published there. His health failing him, he then came to Washington to recuperate among the mountains, remaining several months. He next went to Hollister, California, where with his brother, U. M., he resurrected and for three years successfully published a defunct paper. Disposing of this publication the brothers came to Roslyn and purchased the plant of the Miner, then a bankrupt sheet, and January 1, 1899, they resumed its issuance. The brothers later incorporated under the firm name of Randall Bros., and in 1901 established the Cle-Elum Echo. They purchased the Localizer, April 15, 1903, from Mr. Schnebly, and admitted another brother, M. E. Randall, to the firm, when the firm name was changed to The Cascade Printing and Publishing Company.

Mr. Randall was married January 1, 1893, in Ellensburg, to Minnie Shull, at native of Albany, Missouri, who came to Washington with her parents about the same time Mr. Randall came. Her father, Calvin T. Shull, a native of Ohio, was for years a government scout on the Plains. During the Civil war Mr. Shull was in the west in the government secret service. He is of German descent, and is now seventy-five years of age. Mrs. Randall's mother, China Shull, was a native of Illinois, born during the sixties. Mr. Randall has two brothers, whose names are given above, and five sisters: Alice, Lizzie, Ida, Mary and Emma. He has one child, Merwyn, seven years of age.

In social life he is a member of the W. O. W., the Foresters of America and the Fraternal Aid Society of San Francisco. Both Mr. Randall and his wife are members of the Christian church. Mr. Randall politically is a Republican, though not an active partisan.

In his newspaper work Mr. Randall has an able and efficient assistant in his wife, who is thoroughly familiar with all the details of the profession from beginning to end. Through the combined efforts of the Randall Bros., the Localizer has gained the reputation of being a clean, fearless and ably edited journal, and a power for good in the community.

JACOB BOWERS, one of Kittitas county's prosperous farmers, resides seven miles north of Ellensburg. He was born in Pennsylvania, December 26, 1853, the son of John and Elizabeth (Shelburg) Bowers. The former was a native of Germany, and a farmer by occupation. He settled in Pennsylvania in an early day, where he resided until his death. The mother, also a native of Germany, was married in Pennsylvania, and died there when our subject was a lad of six years. Jacob was educated, in his earlier years, in the state of his birth, and later in the state of Illinois, where he had removed in 1867. He farmed for five years in the latter state, then went by rail to California. He followed farming in the Golden state eight years, at the end of which time, in 1879, he came to Ellensburg and took a homestead. In 1891 he purchased what is known as the Wold ranch, a farm of two hundred acres, and seeded the entire tract to alfalfa, timothy and clover. He is still farming this land, and has it in a high state of cultivation. His brothers and sisters are: Elizabeth Larson, living in Pennsylvania; John F., Pennsylvania; Frank, Kansas; Mary, Pennsylvania, and Michael, also of Pennsylvania. Two brothers, Henry and Philip, are now deceased. Those living were all born in Pennsylvania in the years 1839, 1841, 1843, 1845, and 1847, respectively.

Mr. Bowers was married in California, November 5, 1875, to Miss Ella V. Read. Mrs. Bowers was born in Fall River, Massachusetts, January 17, 1852, and at three years of age removed with her parents to Illinois, where she received her education in the common schools. At the age of twenty she removed to California, and three years later was married to Mr. Bowers. Her father, Frank B. Read, was born in Massachusetts in 1819. He was a farmer, and died in Washington. Her mother, Angeline (Grenell) Read, was born in Rhode Island in 1832, and now lives in California. Mrs. Bowers' brothers and sisters are: Walter G. Read, born in Massachusetts in 1854, now living in California; Lizzie Newland, born in Illinois, now of California; Henry, born in Illinois, living in Washington; Frank J., born in Illinois, now of Washington, and Delia M. Dempsey, a native of Illinois, now living in California. Two sisters, Carry C. and Hattie H. Read, both born in Illinois, are deceased. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bowers are: John F., Walter W., James H., Frank M., Jacob L., Anna E., Carrie C., Joseph R. and Roy R. Bowers. The two first named were born in California and the others in Washington. The first named, and eldest, was born in 1877, and the youngest, whose name is given last, in 1895. All are living at home.

Mr. Bowers is an ardent Republican, and for two years (1901-02) held the office of county commissioner of Kittitas county. His present property interests consist of 1,522 acres of land, 100 head of horses, driving and draft stock, and 300 head of cattle. He is a well-to-do farmer and a good business man. He takes an active interest in all public affairs in his county, and is recognized as an honorable, industrious, conscientious man, and one to be trusted and respected for his sterling qualities.

DR. JOHN ROBBINS, a retired physician, now living on Springfield Farm, near the city of Ellensburg, Washington, is a native of Birmingham, England, born May 21, 1834, the son of John and Elizabeth (Benton) Robbins, both of English nativity. His father, born in the year 1810, in Birmingham, England, was a carpenter and builder, and a Christian gentleman. He died in the country of his birth in his seventieth year. Elizabeth Benton, who was born two years later than her husband, was married to John Robbins in 1833, and died in Birmingham, England, in 1850. Dr. Robbins received his early education in the Church of England school, and at the age of fourteen became apprenticed to a noted engraver. He worked in this capacity for seven years, during which time he became a thorough master of the engraver's art. He next took a partner, and went into business for himself, in which he continued for a number of years, during which time he engraved guns and silverware for the World's Exhibition at London, which were awarded prizes. All his spare time for a number of years was devoted to the study of medicine, and he received instruction from the late Dr. Hastings, R. C. S. E., and Dr. Lawrence, S. M. B. Finally, from overwork and study, his health failed and he was compelled to seek a country life. He then went to farming, which he followed until June, 1872, when he came to the United States, settling in Lincoln, Nebraska. From there he went west and took up a homestead near where Hastings, Nebraska, now stands, which he gave up and returned to Lincoln, and later to Omaha. Here he remained for about three years, during which time he engraved the first map of Nebraska, published in the Omaha Bee. He next went to San Francisco, and after a brief stay went to Portland, where he remained three years. In May, 1878, he moved with his wife and fourteen children to Kittitas valley and settled upon the land now known as Springfield Farm, Ellensburg, Washington, where he has since remained. The first two or three years he followed the practice of medicine. But as he came to farm he retired from practice as soon as other physicians came to stay.

In 1854 he was married to Mary Ann Garrett, born in Leamington, England, March 1, 1830. She died in Birmingham, England, March 18, 1859, and on August 20, 1859, he was married to Elizabeth Benton in Leamington, England, where she was born March 7, 1830, and received her education in the Church of England school. She died at her home, Springfield Farm, Ellensburg, Washington, on December 3, 1902, in her sixty-fourth year. She was the only child in the family and lived at home until her marriage. Her father was William Benton, who for a part of his life was valet to an English nobleman; later in his career he kept a general store. Mrs. Robbins' mother was Elizabeth Ollier, the daughter of a farmer. Both Mr. and Mrs. Benton died in the country of their birth. Dr. Robbins has been the father of seventeen children, two by his first and fifteen by his second marriage. Their names, dates and places of birth are as follows: Walter John, born in Birmingham, England, January 6, 1856, now of Ellensburg, Washington;

Ernest Arthur, born in Birmingham, England, March 3, 1858, and died at Springfield Farm, Ellensburg, Washington, October 25, 1895; Fannie Ollier Thomas, born in Birmingham, England, November 30, 1860, now of the Kittitas valley; Bertha Elizabeth Vradenburgh, born in Birmingham, England, April 9, 1862, now living in Puyallup, Washington; William von Essen, born in Birmingham, England, September 26, 1863, now of Ellensburg; Frances Annie Zwicker, born in Birmingham, England, September 25, 1864, died in Kittitas valley, Washington, March 14, 1900; Harry Edward, born in Birmingham, England, August 27, 1865, now of Ellensburg; Minnie Emily Sellwood, born in Birmingham, England, December 8, 1866, now living in Enumclaw, Washington; Charles Ollier, born in Birmingham, England, February 13, 1868, now of Ellensburg; George Benton, born in Birmingham, England, February 24, 1869, now living in Butte, Montana; Blanche Agnes, born in Kings Norton, near Birmingham, England, May 13, 1870, now living at home; Nellie Edith Craig, born in Omaha, Nebraska, November 25, 1872, now living in Puyallup, Washington; Lillie Alice, born in Omaha, Nebraska, August 24, 1874, now living in Ellensburg; Daisie Ella, born in Portland, Oregon, April 28, 1876, died November 14, 1891; Mary Burton, born in a log cabin in Kittitas valley, Washington, August 24, 1878, now living at home; Clara Amie, born on Springfield Farm, Ellensburg, Washington, February 17, 1883, now living at home, and Laura May, born on Springfield Farm, Ellensburg, Washington, February 23, 1885, also living at home. In the fall of 1878, during the Indian outbreak, Dr. Robbins' home was a popular refuge for the families round about. Some of them remained in this retreat for several weeks. Dr. Robbins has one brother, Francis, born in England and now living in Omaha, Nebraska. He also has three sisters—Elizabeth, Eliza and Emily, all born in England, where they still live. Dr. and Mrs. Robbins were members of the Church of England. The doctor has been a good and tender-hearted physician, always responding to calls alike from rich and poor, and many incidents are told by his friends and neighbors of the early times, when he ministered to the needs of those afflicted and in straitened circumstances, without hope of reward and at great personal inconvenience and sacrifice. He has made a success of farming and stock raising, and now, in his old age, is comfortably situated in this world with all the needs of life, surrounded by his children, and respected and esteemed by his neighbors and by a host of friends. He is known as a Christian man of generous impulses, of good business judgment, fair and honorable in all his dealings. His course in life commends itself to the rising generations and all good citizens, and when he passes from their midst it will be as one of the honored pioneers and beloved citizens of the Kittitas valley.

KARL O. KOHLER, who started in the sheep business as a herder in the later eighties, has built up the business until he is now considered one of the leading sheep raisers in the Northwest. His home is in Ellensburg, Washington. Mr. Kohler was born April 14, 1861, in Switzerland, his ancestors being farmers. His father, John Kohler, was born about 1818, and served as a sergeant in the army of 1848, during the religious wars. The mother, Anna Barbara (Thomy) Kohler, was born about 1818. Both parents were natives of Switzerland. They had ten children. Beside Mr. Kohler, these children were: Mrs. Lizzie Zumastein, now a widow; John, now farming in Lewis county, New York; Mrs. Rosa Kreps, now in the dairy business in Shelbyville, Indiana; Mrs. Mary Schnebli, who owns a candy factory in Baden, Switzerland; Mrs. Mary Ann Hunsiker, a widow; Fred, a merchant in his native land; Alfred, a cheesemaker; Amel, a farmer living in Wasco county, Oregon, and Arnold, now herding sheep in Kittitas county, Washington. All were born in Switzerland. Karl O. was educated in Switzerland until sixteen years of age, when he learned the cheesemaking trade, which he followed until he was twenty years old. He then served in the army eight weeks, when he came to the United States and settled in Lewis county, New York. He there worked on farms four years. In the spring of 1885 he went to Kansas, and later to Nebraska, and after a stay of about eight months he came west and went to work on a milk ranch near The Dalles, Oregon. Shortly afterward he engaged in herding sheep. He took charge of a band of 3,000 on shares, with such success that at the end of five years he had a half-interest in 4,200 head of sheep and a good bank account. In 1895 he disposed of his real estate holdings in Wasco county and shipped a trainload of sheep to the Chicago markets. He moved about 2,500 head of sheep to Kittitas county, which has since been his headquarters. In June of that year he went back to Switzerland on a visit and returned October 20, 1895, since which time he has given his attention to his sheep business and has also engaged in raising considerable hay.

Mr. Kohler was married May 28, 1900, in Columbus, Nebraska, to Miss Anna R. Stauffer, born in that city, September 9, 1877. Mrs. Kohler's father, a native of Switzerland, born about 1848, was a farmer and merchant. He held public office for eleven years after he moved to the United States, having served as county clerk of Piate county, Nebraska, during that period. Mrs. Kohler's mother, Elsie (Plaser)

Stauffer, was born in Switzerland and came to this county when fifteen years old. Mrs. Kohler has one brother and three sisters. The brother, John Stauffer, born in Columbus, Nebraska, August 1, 1875, is now living with her. Two sisters, Bertha and Martha, still reside in Columbus, and the other sister, Rosa, lives in Ellensburg, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Kohler have one child, John G., born in Ellensburg, June 28, 1901. The father is an active member of the Republican party. He and his wife are Protestants. Their home, a fine brick house of thoroughly modern construction, occupies one of the finest locations in Ellensburg, the site including ten lots. Mr. Kohler has 180 acres of hay land. He is running about 6,100 head of sheep and owns about twenty-five head of horses. He is the owner of fifty shares of stock in the Pacific Oil Company and 250 shares in a Texas company, and carries a $5,000 life insurance policy in the Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Company.

THOMAS HALEY, residing two miles north and a mile and one-half east of Ellensburg, Washington, has been engaged in the live stock business in that locality since 1879. He is now arranging to engage in the hay and dairy business because of the shortage of range. He has 680 acres of land, about 250 head of horses and cattle, and an up-to-date creamery plant with an output of about 3,000 pounds per month. He has a large and thoroughly modern home on the place and is considered one of the most thrifty and successful farmers of the county. He was born in New York, January 8, 1847. His father, Michael Haley, was born in Ireland in 1810, and died May 3, 1882. His mother, Bridget (Pheney) Haley, was born in Ireland in 1819, and has since passed away. Thomas was one of a family of nine children, as follows: John, living with him; Michael, a farmer in New York; James, farming in Michigan; William and Martin, both farmers of New York; Peter, a cattle raiser of Minot, North Dakota; Kate Cross, wife of a New York merchant, and Mary Goram, the wife of a New York hotel man. Mr. Haley left the schools of his native state when he was fifteen years old and worked on a farm three years. For the succeeding two and one-half years he worked in the Pennsylvania oil fields. In 1867 he went to Omaha, Nebraska, and ran a stationary engine in a foundry. Later he was employed on the construction of the Union Pacific railroad between Cheyenne and Laramie City. He came from Utah to Kittitas county, Washington, July 5, 1869, and filed on 160 acres of desert land. He devoted particular attention to stock raising in all its branches, doing much buying and shipping. He soon transformed his desert land into a beautiful home, but in October, 1896, a fire started which wiped out the house and well-filled barns, and everything he had accumulated, except the live stock. By indomitable pluck and perseverance, however, he has regained a greater fortune than that lost by the severe fire, and is now counted one of the most substantial men of the county.

Mr. Haley was married April 10, 1878, to Miss Vancha Hackett, daughter of John and Ellen (Johnson) Hackett. Her father was born in Illinois in 1827, and is dead. Her mother, born in Indiana in 1834, is now a resident of Oregon. Mrs. Haley was born in Oregon City, Oregon, May 4, 1857. Her brothers and sisters are: Erwin, a school teacher in Oregon City; Mary Knox, wife of an Oregon farmer; Stella Hackett, of Oregon City; Alvin, in the real estate business in Mississippi, and Mrs. Florence Wolf, of Sunnyside, Oregon.

Mr. and Mrs. Haley have two children, both of whom are at the family home. Katie, the eldest, was born April 27, 1879, and Allie, September 11, 1880. Their father belongs to the royal arch degree of Free and Accepted Masons, and is also a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and has been through all the chairs in that order. He is a public spirited and progressive citizen and is highly respected.

SIMEON WALKER MAXEY, now residing near Ellensburg, was born in Jefferson county, Illinois, August 9, 1832. His father, William McKendery Maxey, was a physician and minister, born in Tennessee, January 18, 1812, and died February 4, 1885. The mother, Eddy (Owens) Maxey, was born in Tennessee, March 2, 1811, and died January 5, 1880. Her father was Peter Owens, a farmer. Simeon W. received his early education in the common schools of Jefferson county, Illinois, and remained with his father until he reached his majority. Then, in 1853, he borrowed money and purchased forty acres of government land, which he devoted exclusively to horticulture. He set out an orchard which later took the premium as the best selected and arranged orchard in the county. At county fairs he was a frequent exhibitor, and invariably captured some of the best prizes. He served as county superintendent of the Mount Vernon, Illinois, fair, and was one of the members of the awarding committee. Mr. Maxey has now, for over half a century, been an enthusiastic and successful horticulturist. In 1882 he sold out his property holdings in Jefferson county, Illinois, and moved to Washington, where he bought land in Kittitas county, where he has since resided. In 1880 he sold this place and bought a brick block in Ellensburg, now known as the I. O. O. F. hall. He was appointed by Governor Ferry as commissioner of horticulture for the fourth district, and after serving for three years and a half he was reappointed by Governor McGraw, and continued in the office until the law creating it was abolished. He was superintendent of the state fruit exhibit at the World's Fair in 1893, and was county inspector of horticulture from 1902 till 1904.

During the Civil war Mr. Maxey served with honor and distinction. He enlisted in the 110th volunteer infantry of Illinois in 1862, in Company B, under Captain C. H. Maxey, and was assigned to the 14th army corps, commanded by General Jefferson C. Davis, Second division, commanded by General John M. Palmer, and 19th brigade, commanded by General W. B. Hazen. He was in the battle of Perryville, Kentucky, against General Bragg, which forced the Confederates through Cumberland Gap, and later, as first duty sergeant, was in charge of a detachment of six men which made a hazardous sixty-mile trip in taking sixty-eight prisoners to Danville, Kentucky. He took part in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and Atlanta, and was with Sherman on the march to the sea. In the chase after General Johnston he was engaged in one of the last battles of the war, which was at Bentonville, North Carolina. On this occasion army orders were issued to prevent any foraging ahead of the command. Notwithstanding, on the morning of the battle of Bentonville, Mr. Maxey started out before daylight and got in advance of the army. Near sunrise he fell in with six other soldiers and the party shortly afterward encountered a picket reserve of the enemy and were promptly fired upon. By good fortune no one of them was hit, due likely to the closeness of the range. He was mustered out of service at Washington, D. C., and received his discharge at Chicago, in 1865.

Mr. Maxey has brothers and sisters as follows: Samuel T., born August 29, 1834, who served through the war and was discharged as a captain; John V., born in 1836, also in the war; Harriet J., born in 1838, now the widow of Franklin J. Centerfield; William C., born in 1843, who was, during the war, first sergeant of the 80th Illinois regiment; Sarah C., born in 1847, now the wife of Sanford Hill, and Hardy N., born in 1850. Mr. Maxey was married at Richview, Illinois, to Miss Manevia T. Whitenberg, daughter of Daniel T. and Polly A. (Hill) Whitenberg. She was born in Tennessee, March 26, 1838, and died in Ellensburg, January 25, 1902. Their children were Brovaltus A., born January 17, 1850; Morton M., born July 4, 1860, and died September 24, 1897; Francesca D., born January 18, 1862, William C., born April 18, 1863, and Sina C., born October 15, 1866. Mr. Maxey is a member of David Ford Post, G. A. R., at Ellensburg, and belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church.

MRS. REBECCA N. BULL was born in Norway. Her father, Nels H. Gran, was born in Norway, December 15, 1815, and died in Nebraska. He was a farmer and the inventor of a threshing machine. The mother, Sophia Graverholt, was born in Norway, near Christiania, in 1816. Mrs. Bull received her early education in the district schools of Norway and was fourteen years old when her parents came to the United States. Upon their arrival they settled in Dixon county, Nebraska, in 1870, where the father took up government land. She finished her education in the schools at Omaha, and later in the normal school, after which she taught in the district schools of Nebraska and also after she came West on the Sound. She came to Ellensburg in 1879, and lived with her brother until her marriage, May 26, 1881, to B. W. Frisbee, when she began her residence on her present farm home. Mr. Frisbee was by profession a photographer and also a teacher. He taught one of the first schools in the valley near Ellensburg. He was a native of New York and was active in building up educational interest where he resided. His death occurred on February 21, 1888. By this marriage two children were born: Leroy W., September 15, 1882, who was educated in the Ellensburg high school and is now attending the university of Washington, with a view to becoming an electrical engineer, and Emma F., April 12, 1884. She was also educated in the Ellensburg high school.

February 6, 1880, Mrs. Frisbee married Walter A. Bull, who was born in Albany, New York, June 20, 1838. Mr. Bull was a descendant on his mother's side of the old Fish family of New York. His forefathers were of English extraction and of a seafaring inclination. Mr. Bull spent his early days at Racine, Wisconsin, and at the outbreak of the war became government commissary clerk. During his service he was superintendent of commissary and later was superintendent of the Freedman bureau. At one time he was charged with the care and feeding of twenty-eight hundred negroes. After his discharge from the government service he engaged in the construction of the Union Pacific until 1860. When on a tour of the west he was attracted to the Kittitas valley and settled on a farm of one hundred and sixty acres nearly south of Ellensburg, which he improved and added to until he accumulated nearly 1,700 acres. This he put in a high state of cultivation. He devoted much attention to raising of fine stock. He introduced Holstein cattle into the valley and had a fine herd of Polled-Angus. He was an Odd Fellow and Mason and also a member of the A. O. U. W.; was the first probate judge of Kittitas county, under appointment by the commissioners, and served two years; designed the probate court seal—a bull's head; and was also president of the Snoqualmie toll road to Seattle. Mr. and Mrs. Bull had two children: J. A. Evadore Bull, born September 10, 1891, and Leland L. Bull, born September 15, 1893, both on their father's farm. Mrs. Bull's brothers and sisters are: Caroline, now Mrs. Andrew Hia, in Norway; Halvor Nelson, in Ellensburg; Andrew N., in Nebraska; Mrs. Mattie Gilbertson, in Washington county, Nebraska, and Juliana, now Mrs. Christian Johnson, in Dixon county, Nebraska. Mrs. Bull came to Kittitas valley after the Indian troubles were over, but she often talked with the late Chief Moses concerning the strenuous pioneer days. She has many valuable records of the early history of the Kittitas country, and is a lady of intelligence and culture.

PHILIP H. SCHNEBLY, who lives in an elegant home eleven miles northeast of Ellensburg, was born in Washington county, Oregon, October 8, 1852. His father, David J. Schnebly, was born in Maryland, and came to Oregon in 1850. He was a man of finished education, and during his lifetime followed the vocations of teacher and editor. He was of Pennsylvania Dutch descent. The subject's mother was Margaret A. (Painter) Schnebly, a native of Missouri, and came west with her father during the early days.

Mr. Schnebly received his education in the state of Oregon in the district schools, and came to the Kittitas valley in 1872. After coming here he at once engaged in the stock business and has made that branch of industry his business since that time. He owns one of the finest farms in the county, and lives in an elegant home. He has "cattle on a thousand hills," in all about fifteen hundred head, most of which are Hereford and Shorthorn Durham stock. He has one brother and one sister: Charles P., born in Oregon, and who is now a farmer; and Mrs. Jean C. Davidson, native of Walla Walla, and now living in Ellensburg. He was married November 11, 1877, to Eliza F. Cooke, the daughter of Hon. Charles P. and Susan E. (Brewster) Cooke. Mr. Cooke was one of the earliest settlers in Kittitas valley, and was a man much in public life. A sketch of his life is to be found elsewhere in this history. Mrs. Cooke was born in New York state, in 1838, and was a descendant from the old Vander Cooke family, historic in the state of New York. Mrs. Schnebly's brothers and sisters are, Mrs. Charles Coleman, Edwin N. Morand D., Edward W., George B., Rufus, Mrs. Al Whitson, and Jay Cooke.

Mr. and Mrs. Schnebly are the parents of ten children, as follows: Lillian M., born January 16, 1879; Fred C., November 12, 1881; Philip D., July 19, 1884; Joseph J., April 20, 1885; Jean, February 14, 1887; Frank, October 5, 1890; Edith, February 8, 1892; Edna, February 28, 1894, and Rufus and Robert, March 30, 1807. All were born in Kittitas county. The eldest daughter, Lillian M., was educated in the State Normal school, and has traveled extensively. She has marked ability and taste in a literary way, and has contributed some high class articles to the magazines. She was a delegate to the National Press Association in 1895 and 1900.

MELVIN C. SPRAGUE. Melvin Sprague, dealer in paints, oils, and glass, is one of the rugged pioneers of the Pacific states. Born in Barry county, Michigan, July 14, 1842, he is the son of Nelson and Lucinda (Barnum) Sprague. His father was a farmer and saw mill operator, born in the state of New York, and died in 1844, when Melvin was a child of two years. His mother, also a native of New York, was born November 7, 1807, and upon the death of her husband was left a widow with five small children. She died at the age of seventy-nine years and twenty days.

Melvin C. Sprague's life from the beginning has been one of strenuousness and toil. From early boyhood and until sixteen years old he worked during six months of the year, the remainder being spent in the common schools. Giving up this mode of life at that time, he started to walk from Hastings, Michigan, to Nebraska City, Nebraska. Arriving there, he joined an uncle and started on an overland journey to Pike's Peak, in search of gold. On the way thither, however, they met so many returning prospectors that they became discouraged with their Pike's Peak venture, and decided to abandon it and push on to California. This they did, arriving in the Golden state in 1850. Here our subject entered the mining camps and became in time a full fledged miner and prospector. In 1863 he went to Granite creek, in eastern Oregon, thence to Canyon City, Oregon, where he wintered. In the spring he once more went to Granite creek, thence to the Owyhee mines, and shortly after started for Idaho. The party with whom he started on the trip encamped for a week near the big bend on the Snake river, in order to rest their pack horses; the night before they started to move the Indians stampeded the animals and it was with difficulty that they recovered three or four horses out of the original band of a large number. After some time spent on a hard trail the party finally reached their destination in Idaho, and Mr. Sprague shortly after left for the mines near Bannock City, Oregon, where he worked some time. He then removed to Auburn, in the same state, and with an old California partner of his, worked a claim on Gimlet creek. Here, it is interesting to note, he found a nugget valued at some $355. While in Oregon he followed for a time the vocation of carrying express between Canyon City and Baker City; in summer on horseback and during the winter months on snowshoes. He has many interesting incidents to relate regarding his experience among the mining camps and mountains of California, Oregon and Idaho, where he encountered wild Indians in plenty. In 1876 he returned on a visit to his old home in Michigan. Later, he came to Seattle and from there went again on a prospecting trip in the vicinity of his present home. On his return to Ellensburg he bade farewell to his former life and went to work at the carpenter's trade. In 1887, in partnership with P. Pressy, he built a carpenter shop and planing-mill. This he later sold, and again paid a visit to his Michigan home. Upon returning to Ellensburg he bought an interest in the store of Harvey Barton, dealer in paints and oils. From that time his business has continued to grow; his place of business having increased from a mere shack to a first class paint store. Mr. Sprague has never married. He is an Odd Fellow, having been a member of that order for the past twenty-seven years. During his life he has seen hardship and misfortune in plenty, and, like all pioneers, has had his quota of ups and downs. He is now comfortably situated and is regarded by his fellow townsmen as a valuable man in the community.

PHILIP H. ADAMS, a farmer and stockman, living twelve miles northeast of Ellensburg, was born in Walla Walla, Washington, February 12, 1876. His father, F. F. Adams, now a merchant of Seattle, is a native of Ohio, where his early life was spent. He is a veteran of the Civil war, having served in an Ohio regiment of infantry. The mother of Philip H. Adams was Mary V. (Schnebly) Adams, who was born in Oregon and who died there March 31, 1887. When Philip was ten years old his parents immigrated to California and here he was educated in the public schools. Finishing the public school course, for two years he engaged in the study of law, but decided eventually that there were better opportunities for success in other fields, and abandoned the law for agriculture and stock raising, establishing himself on the ranch he now occupies in 1898. This ranch consists of 480 acres, over one-half of which is in a good state of cultivation. Mr. Adams has had as many as 400 head of stock on the farm at one time, and at the present is caring for about 250 head, feeding them alfalfa, timothy and clover, all of which are raised in abundance on the cultivated portions of the estate. Mr. Adams has one brother and two sisters; Herbert H. Adams, an electrical engineer of New York; Mrs. James Ramsey of Ellensburg, and Mrs. H. E. Boyrie of Seattle. Mr. Adams was married in Ellensburg February 27, 1890, to Bertha K. Stephens, daughter of W. V. and Kate Stephens. The father is a railway train dispatcher; the mother is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Adams have one child, Frederick D. Adams, born June 16, 1901. Husband and wife are members of the Episcopal church. Mr. Adams is independent in politics but rather favors the doctrines of the Democratic party. He is among the successful agriculturists and stockmen of the valley and enjoys the confidence and esteem of all who know him.

GEORGE W. SALLADAY, living twelve miles northeast of Ellensburg, has for a number of years been engaged in farming and stock raising and has met with good success in the business. His farm consists of 600 acres; 400 acres in cultivation, and the remainder pasture land. The principal crop raised in this part of the valley is hay, for which there is always a ready market at good prices, much of the crop, however, being consumed at home in wintering the flocks and herds. Mr. Salladay settled here in 1900, having been, for a short time previous to this date, engaged in stock raising near Ellensburg. Before going into the business on his own account, he received a liberal education in the public schools and in the high school of Ellensburg, thus preparing himself for the successful career he has since had. George W. Salladay is the son of Jacob and Mary A. (See-rest) Salladay, both natives of Ohio and both still living, retired from the more active duties of life, in Ellensburg. The subject of this article has two brothers, L. Elmer Salladay, a hardware merchant of Nez Perce, Idaho, and S. O. Salladay of Ellensburg. He has eight sisters: Anna and Letta, both school teachers of Kittitas county; Minnie Spiker of Nez Perce; Ida Pease of Seattle; Opha, Flora, Loretta and Gladys, attending the Normal school at Ellensburg. Mr. Salladay was born in Sonoma county, California. Combined with the energy of youth he has natural and acquired business ability and is making for himself an enviable position among the successful men of the valley. Politically he affiliates with the Democratic party. He is progressive and public spirited and has the respect of a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

THOMAS J. RANDALL, a retired Christian minister and carpenter, was born in Jennings county, Indiana, in 1827. His father, John Randall, a farmer and blacksmith, was a native of Tennessee, of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He was a pioneer in Indiana, where he died in 1830. The mother, Fannie (Glover) Randall, was born in Indiana. Her parents settled on the banks of the Ohio river, below Madison, at the mouth of Saluda creek, in days when the settlers had to live in stockades to protect themselves from Indians. Thomas J. Randall grew to manhood in his native state. When he was only three years old his father died. He worked on a farm and attended district school. When he was fourteen years old he went to live with his sister. When seventeen he worked out and went to school. It was a struggle in those days to secure education, for all schooling had to be paid for, but he never faltered in his efforts after knowledge. Even while he was learning the trade of a carpenter he continued his schooling. Later he alternated as a teacher and working as a carpenter. In 1856 he moved to Le Sueur county, Minnesota, and took up a pre-emption claim and worked as a carpenter and millwright. He was there through the whole of the Sioux Indian troubles and massacres and has a lively recollection of pioneer experiences in that country. In those days they had to take the lumber from the rough and make everything by hand. He was converted in Indiana at the age of sixteen years and united with the Christian church. He was a faithful student of the Bible, reading late into the night, after his hard day's work, and finally became noted for his familiarity with the Great Book. From speaking at social gatherings he had become a fluent talker, so he took to preaching and making appointments which he filled acceptably. He preached for seventeen years for one congregation, working all the time at his trade and farm. He continued to live in the same neighborhood until 1888, when he moved to Ellensburg. His family followed shortly afterward. He bought his present home then, where he has since resided.

He was married in 1850 to Julia A. Thomas, who was born in Indiana in 1834. She was the daughter of John M. Thomas, a native of Kentucky, and of Ellen (Buckles) Thomas. Thomas J. Randall has four daughters and three sons. The sons are all newspaper men. Amasa S. Randall is the editor of the Cascade Miner, Cle-Elum Echo and Ellensburg Localizer, upon which his brother, Elroy M. Randall, is also employed. The other son, U. M. Randall, is an editor of the Cascade Miner. Two of the daughters, Alice A. Wright and Lizzie M. Denton, live at Vackerville, California. Another, Ida M. Craig, is a resident of White Bluffs, Yakima county, Washington, and the fourth, Mary B. Harman, resides in Minnesota. In matters of politics Mr. Randall has associated himself with no party. It has ever been his custom to vote for the man. He is a member of the Central Christian church, at Ellensburg.

WILLIAM F. DOUGHTY, a man of diversified business interests, ice dealer, stockman and horticulturist, is recognized as one of the foremost citizens of his town, Ellensburg. He was born in Oakland county, Michigan, June 4, 1850. His father, Samuel Doughty, was a native of England, but came to America when quite young and settled in Canada. Later he crossed the border into the state of Michigan, where he is remembered as a pioneer of that state. While in Canada Samuel Doughty followed the occupation of lumber dealer. He died in 1876. The mother of William F. Doughty died when he was a mere infant, so it is but little he knows of her history. After the death of his wife, Samuel Doughty married again and removed to Washington county, Kansas, where he settled on a homestead in 1871. Here it was that the son grew to young manhood, laboring on the homestead during the summers and attending country school during the winters. Since he was nineteen years of age, soon after his father's death, Mr. Doughty has fought his way in the world unaided. In 1881 he came west as far as Colorado, where he obtained employment as a railroader. This occupation he followed for two years, being in that time engaged in work for the Denver and Rio Grande and the Oregon Short Line companies. In 1883 he went to Walla Walla, where he obtained employment. After a short sojourn in the Walla Walla country, however, he again removed to Spokane, thence, being moved by the Coeur d'Alene excitement of 1885, to the Coeur d'Alenes. Leaving the mines in 1886 he spent a year in Yakima, then, upon the building of the Northern Pacific extension, found his way to Ellensburg; coming as an employee of the above-mentioned company. Soon after coming to Ellensburg, Mr. Doughty established himself in the truck and drayage business, combining with it in 1889 that of dealing in ice. In 1900 he sold out his drayage business in order to devote his entire time to his many other interests which had accumulated since his advent in Ellensburg.

Mr. Doughty has never been married, and his only near relatives are two step-brothers, Samuel and John William, and one step-sister, Mary Doughty. Though not a wealthy man, Mr. Doughty is in comfortable circumstances and is in a position now to enjoy the fruits of his past life of activity and toil. Besides some city property, which includes his home, he has two farms adjacent to Ellensburg. These are in a high state of cultivation, with good orchards, and are well stocked with imported Short-horn Durham cattle, in the breeding of which Mr. Doughty is greatly interested. He carries on quite an extensive trade in hay. He is a Democrat in politics, yet gives such matters very little serious consideration. The confidence reposed in him by his fellow townsmen is reflected in the fact that for four years he has served as a city official.

GEORGE WRIGHT. Among the successful stockmen of the thriving region surrounding Ellensburg and North Yakima may be noted the name of George Wright, of the firm of George Wright & Son, who was born in Colchester, England, 1838. His father, James Wright, also a stockman, was born in Colchester in 1805, came to the United States in 1871, where he died seven years later.

Jane (Miller) Wright, George Wright's mother, also was of English birth and died in that country in 1863. At the age of seventeen the boy George was, after the manner of those times, apprenticed to a butcher, with wages at a pound a year. Dissatisfied with his duties, as well as with his salary, he, at the end of a year, ran away from his bondage, coming to Chicago with a companion, about the year 1857. With a capital of some $500 he began in a small way dealing in stock. To him belongs the distinction of having made the first shipment of cattle and horses from Montreal, Canada, he having gone to that country in 1876. His business venture was so marked with prosperity that at the end of three years he found himself in a position to return to his mother country for a year's visit, and while there was married to Emma Springet, 1860. Upon his return to America he settled in London, Canada, later moving to Watford. In both these cities he dealt in live stock, and while at the latter made several shipments to England. The allurements of the West and the opportunities it held forth to stockmen attracted him, and in '82 he came to Portland, Oregon, and thence to Tacoma. At Tacoma he became president of the Puget Sound Pressed Beef and Packing Company. With this company he was connected for five years, or until 1887, when he removed to Yakima and engaged in his present business of sheep raising. Mrs. Wright was the daughter of Robert and Charlotte Springet, both natives of England, where, in Westboghait, Mr. Springet owned and operated a grist mill. Both are dead. Mr. Wright is without brothers or sisters. Has three sons; James M., F. G. and Albert. The first two named are business partners with Mr. Wright, the former at Yakima and the latter in Seattle. The third son, Albert, resides at Rochester, not far from Olympia.

Although in the main Mr. Wright's course in the business world has run smooth, he has had his misadventures, like all other successful men. One of these in particular lingers vividly in his memory. This was in the year 1870, when he made a shipment of four hundred and sixty-three head of cattle from New York to Southampton, England. En voyage a severe storm threatened the destruction of the ship; in order to save the vessel and the human lives on board it was necessary to consign the greater portion of her cargo to the sea. Thus Mr. Wright's entire herd was thrown overboard. Aside from the original loss of the cattle, the unfortunate owner expended approximately the sum of $35,000 in a futile effort to recover damages from the owners of the ship. As a young man in Chicago, Mr. Wright was a contemporary with the famous packer, Philip D. Armour, and in matters of finance he was at that time rated above him. Politically, Mr. Wright is known as a Republican, of pronounced convictions. His property interests consist of a home in North Yakima, as well as one in Ellensburg, and thirty thousand acres of grazing land, where the firm pastures its sheep, of which it has, in round numbers, about forty thousand. George Wright & Sons has just recently signed a contract calling for a shipment of five thousand head of sheep, which number on an average they ship each month. Mr. Wright lives principally in North Yakima, but at the present time is occupying his Ellensburg home. In each of these cities he is counted as one among its leading and most public spirited citizens.

RASMUS P. TJSSEM, proprietor of the Tjossem mill, two and one-half miles south from Ellensburg, claims Stavanger, Norway, as his birth place. The year of his birth was 1841. His father, Peder Tjossem, also was born in Stavanger, 1813. Peder Tjossem inherited the old farm that had been in the family several hundred years, exhibiting deeds on parchment over three hundred years old in proof of the rightfulness of his inheritance. He, however, left the home of his fathers to try his fortunes in a new country, settling in Iowa, where he died in 1892. His wife, Anna (Iverson) Tjossem, the mother of Rasmus, came of an old Norwegian family, and herself was born in Norway. Rasmus Tjossem finished his education before coming to America. In 1852 he came first to Quebec, afterward spending two years on a farm in Illinois, when he went to Marshall county, Iowa, to engage in farming. The profits of nine years of toil were eaten up in the great Chicago fire, he losing a heavy shipment of grain. The years '73, '74 and a part of '75 were spent in the Sound country and in Walla Walla. He came to Kittitas county in May, 1875, and took up government land, upon which his mill now stands. He worked his land until he was enabled to erect, in 1881, a small mill on the river. He built also a saw mill on Wilson creek. These mills he operated, together with his farm and a small herd of cattle until 1889, when he abandoned the saw mill business. In 1887 with John Shoudy he built the City Mill at Ellensburg, soon afterward selling his share to Mr. Shoudy and building the mill he now owns. Mr. Tjossem was at Ellensburg at the time of the Indian outbreak. Unlike the majority of his fellow townsmen he did not seek protection behind the stockade, deeming it a safer plan to keep his family in a convenient sheltered retreat near his house.

In 1865 he was married to Rachel Heggem, a native of Norway, who had come with her parents to America previous to his coming. Her people were known to him in the old country. Mr. Tjossem has three brothers: Thomas, Ole and Jonas, all of whom are farmers in Iowa. Mrs. Tjossem has a brother, Thore Heggem, who also lives in the state of Iowa. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Tjossem are: Albert, who is interested with his father in the mill; Rebecca, who was married to George Donald; Torene, married to Errick Moe;

Lena, wife of Harl Ruthven; Peder, who is a civil engineer in Spokane, and Anna, who remains at home with her parents. Mr. Tjossem is a member in good standing of the Masonic fraternity, and his religious belief is in the doctrine promulgated by the Society of Friends of the Quaker church. He affiliates with the Republican party and prides himself in the fact that he cast his vote for Abraham Lincoln for president in 1864. Besides his flour mill, which he owns and operates jointly with his son, he has two hundred and sixty acres of choice land, well stocked, comfortably improved and containing a fruit orchard of select and productive trees.

WILLIAM H. CAROTHERS. William H. Carothers is one of the substantial business men of Ellensburg. He was born in Shelby county, Missouri, in 1850, the son of John C. and Louisa M. (Henninger) Carothers, both of old and historic families. His father was a farmer by occupation, born in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, about the year 1820, and died in 1902. John C. Carothers was a pioneer of Shelby county, Missouri, settling there with his father, James Carothers, in 1828. The Indians were numerous there at that time and the pioneer Carothers family had many a narrow escape from massacre. Before leaving the state Mr. Carothers improved three farms from raw and uncleared land. He came to Oregon with his family in 1874, and settled in the Willamette valley. He was a soldier all through the Mexican war, and later in the Rebellion. He served in the 11th Missouri Infantry in the first enlistment, and in the 2d Missouri M. S. M. in the second. Starting in as a lieutenant he was brevetted major before the close of the war. His father, William's grandfather, was a soldier in both the War of 1812 and the Black Hawk war. Louisa M. (Henninger) Carothers was born in Virginia of old Jamestown Dutch stock, tracing her ancestry back to colonial times. Both her grandfather and great-grandfather were soldiers in the Revolutionary war, as was also the paternal ancestry of the subject. Her grandfather was but fifteen years of age at the time of his enlistment in the Continental army. She still lives with her son, William, at Ellensburg. William H. Carothers grew to manhood in the state of his nativity, where he was educated in the common schools and in the state normal school at Kirksville. In his early life he was a school teacher by profession, teaching a year in Missouri, and after coming to the Willamette valley, in 1873, he followed the profession there for several years. Later he and his brothers combined their capital and invested it in stock—cattle, sheep and horses. They pastured their stock in the John Day country, in Grant county, Oregon, whither the subject went in 1876, his brothers having preceded him there. He sold out there in 1880 and removed to what is now

Gilliam county, where he remained until 1888, engaged in the stock business. He, with his brother John and his father, then came to the Kittitas valley, bought land and again entered the stock business. In 1890 they sold the farm and removed to Ellensburg, still continuing to manage a flock of sheep until 1895, during which time they were the heaviest shippers of sheep and wool in the valley. Since the year last mentioned the firm has been gradually closing out the sheep business and turning its attention more to mining. The brothers have some promising mining interests about twenty-five miles west from Ellensburg on what is known as Tanum Creek, where they are developing some encouraging deposits of gold, copper and coal. The coal beds they are operating are of the semi-anthracite quality, and of the finest grade.

William H. Carothers was married in 1893, in Missouri, to Lucy Samuels, born in Adair county, Missouri. Her father was Marcus Samuels, a native of Kentucky and one of the first three men to settle in Adair county. The townsite of Kirksville was a part of his original farm. Her mother was Emily (Boone) Samuels, born and reared at Boonesboro, Kentucky, and was a direct descendant from Daniel Boone, from whom the town derived its name. Mr. Carothers has two brothers, Andrew A., of Olex, Gilliam county, Oregon, and John H., of both Oregon and Ellensburg. He also has two sisters, Mrs. Anna M. Knight and Mrs. Ella Kocher, both of Canby, Oregon. His children are: Warren E., Calvin M. and Lillian.

He is a Republican, and an active one, attending all meetings and conventions of his party.

At the time of the Snake and Bannock Indian wars of 1878, Mr. Carothers was in the upper John Day country and was uncomfortably near the seat of trouble. He recalls hearing the boom of General Howard's guns when he engaged the hostile foe as it crossed the John Day river. The settlers fortified their homes and stood ready for a conflict which they expected would take place at any moment.

During the nineties the Carothers brothers met with serious business reverses, but they stood their ground and later prospered again. They are regarded as men of honor and integrity in the community in which they live.

HENRY C. ACKLEY. Probably no one in Ellensburg is better known in industrial, political and fraternal circles than is the subject of this sketch, Henry C. Ackley. Born in Tioga county, Pennsylvania, May 16, 1859, he was the son of George M. and Susan M. (Yale) Ackley. His father was a contractor and builder, and for a time a farmer. Born in Tompkins county, New York, in 1822, he died in 1901. George M. Ackley's father was born in the state of New York and settled in Pennsylvania at an early day. George M. was a soldier in the Civil war, being a member of Company M, Forty-ninth Pennsylvania infantry, was wounded in battle and was also taken prisoner by the enemy on one occasion. All through his army life he served under General Kilburn. He was of English ancestry. Mr. Ackley's mother was of Holland Dutch descent, born in Cortland county, New York, 1825, and still lives in the state of Pennsylvania. Mr. Ackley grew to the age of seventeen in his native state, living on the farm with his parents. In the meantime he had mastered the stone cutter's trade, and after leaving the farm went to Paw Paw, Lee county, Illinois, where he worked at his trade for a year, then removed to Stockton, Kansas. Here he worked at his trade for two years, in which time he built some of the finest buildings in that town. His next move was to Shelton, Buffalo county, Nebraska. Here he engaged in carpenter work and followed it in Shelton for four years, after which time he came to Washington, settling at Tacoma, where he followed contracting and building for four years. In 1880, just after the memorable fire, he came to Ellensburg. In Ellensburg he was for the first two years connected with the sewing machine and music business; then he resumed his old trade of contractor and builder, in which vocation he is engaged at the present time. His line of work is for the most part confined to building residences, of which he has built a large proportion of those erected in the city since he went into business.

His married life dates from the year 1882, when he was married to Mrs. Wicker. By this marriage he has two children, Fred and Harry. Later he was again married, to Mrs. Laura J. Burchard, a native Washingtonian, born in Chehalis, Lewis county, October 20, 1861. Since the age of eighteen Mrs. Ackley has been in the dressmaking and millinery business, which she still continues to follow. Her father is Timothy R. Winston, a contractor and builder, a native of the state of Virginia. He is of Scotch-English descent, and was a pioneer of this state. He still lives in Satsop, Washington, at the age of seventy-four. Mrs. Ackley's mother is Lucinda (Moore) Winston, born in Texas of German parents. She, too, is still living at the age of fifty-seven. Mrs. Ackley has five brothers and five sisters. Her children by her first marriage are: Alice St. Clair, Mamie Burchard and Eva Burchard, all of whom reside in Spokane. Mr. Ackley has two brothers and four sisters. Both he and Mrs. Ackley are members of the Royal Neighbors, belonging to the Royal Tribe of Joseph. Mrs. Ackley belongs to the Degree of Honor and to the M. E. church. Mr. Ackley is a member, in addition to the Royal Neighbors, of the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America and of the Sons of Veterans. He is a firm believer in the principles of the Republican party and is an active man in politics. He at one time served his town in the capacity of city marshal. Mr. and Mrs. Ackley are doing well in their separate callings in Ellensburg, and are living in the enjoyment of the trust and good will of their neighbors.

CHRISTEN EIDAL is well known among the farmers and stockmen of Kittitas county. He first saw the light of day in Norway, May 15, 1864. His father, Ole Olsen Eidal, a farmer and millwright, was born in 1832, in Norway. He was an active public man, enjoying the trust and esteem of his contemporary townsmen, and died in the land of his birth in 1902. Gullaig (Christensdatter) Eidal, Christen Eidal's mother, still lives in Norway at the ripe age of eighty-one. Mr. Eidal enjoyed the advantage of being educated in one of the military schools of his native land. Hearing of the opportunities America offered to energy and pluck, he came, in 1886, to Minnesota, which state he left the following year to push farther to the west, choosing Kittitas county as his location. He prospered in his work to such an extent that, in 1895, he was enabled to buy his present farm, a tract comprising about seventy acres of well irrigated land four miles northwest of Ellensburg.

September 2, 1893, Mr. Eidal and Segried M. Digen were married in Ellensburg. Mrs. Eidal is a Norwegian whose date of birth was 1874. Her father and mother are still living in Norway; the father, Michael Digen, having been born in 1835, the mother, Marguerite (Dalen) Digen, in 1845. Mrs. Eidal has two sisters, Mrs. Sarah Wold, near Ellensburg, and Mrs. Juliette Thompson, living in Minnesota; two brothers and one sister living in Norway. Mr. Eidal has one sister, Ingeborg (Eidal), now Mrs. Ole Bjore, living in Minnesota, one brother and two sisters in the old country. To Mr. and Mrs. Eidal have been born four children: Elmer Oliver, Otto Clarence, Elna Marguerite and Sarah Elizabeth.

Mr. and Mrs. Eidal belong to the Lutheran church, and he belongs to the Ellensburg camp, Modern Woodmen of America. In politics he is independent, belonging to no party but casting his ballot for the man best fitted, in his judgment, for the office.

When Christen Eidal settled in Kittitas county he did so almost without a dollar, but, full of hope and energy, by the dint of relentless toil and perseverance his farm is now one of the garden spots which cover the valley. His annual crops consist in the main of timothy hay; he also conducts a small dairy.

He is optimistic of the valley's future, being of the opinion that any intelligent man who is willing to work jointly with his head and hands can here live a happy and prosperous life. Mr. Eidal's own experience here seems to have exemplified the truth of these deductions.

PETER A. WOLD. Peter A. Wold is one of the picturesque characters of the Yakima valley.

He began life at Druntenie, in northern Norway, in 1835. His father was Arnt Lorsen Wold, a farmer in Norway, who died while still a young man, and his mother was Barbara (Rasmus) Wold, also a native of Norway, who died in 1883.

Mr. Wold's boyhood days were spent in his mother country, where he was given advantage of a good education. While a youth he learned the trade of shoemaker, which he followed at home for nine years. In the meantime he read a great deal regarding the United States, and of the opportunities it held forth to young men of meager means with push and energy, with the result that he decided to try his fortunes here. He settled in Chicago in 1862, and, being an expert shoemaker, had no difficulty in securing work at his trade. After two years he went to California and located in San Francisco, there, too, working at making shoes. He was so pleased with the country that he induced his two brothers, Lors and Ingelbregt, to join him, and together they three lived in San Francisco for two years, going thence to Seattle, where the subject opened a shop and started in business for himself. Before leaving Chicago, however, Mr. Wold became the owner of eighty acres of land not far from the city, which later brought him quite a snug sum. When he arrived in Seattle that city was a mere hamlet, not exceeding three hundred inhabitants. He purchased a block of lots near where the Occidental hotel now stands, and these, too, turned to money in the course of time. Later he purchased a farm near Giltman and tried the hop raising business, but this venture proved a failure; so after four years he sold out for $800 and came to Yakima county and settled in the Kittitas valley. This was in the spring of 1871. Here he leased two hundred head of cows and took up two pieces of land, in all four hundred acres. He did well in the cattle business and made money. As the country developed he began to irrigate his land and raise hay. Here it might be well to note that Mr. Wold was one of the first to lead off in the great scheme of irrigation in the Yakima and Kittitas valleys; he with A. A. Munsen, in 1881, making a ditch heading at First Creek to carry the water fifteen miles down to their farms. Two years later the Ellensburg ditch was begun, and the railroad was constructed through the country.

He was in Ellensburg at the time of the 1889 fire, and also was on the scene during the Indian troubles, so historic in central Washington. He recalls how at night time the hostile red men kindled fires on the summits of the surrounding hills, supposedly as signals to the Snake tribe, which they evidently were expecting to arrive. Mr. Wold assisted in the erection of block houses near the Catholic cemetery by Ellensburg, and a log house where Mr. Olsen's place now stands.

He was married May 2, 1801, to Mrs. Sarah (Digen) Belgium, who was born in Norway and came to the United States in 1881. She came alone to join an uncle who lived in Minnesota. Her father, Michael Digen, born in Norway, September 21, 1835, still lives in the old country on his farm. Her mother, Marguerite (Dalen) Digen, also a Norwegian, lives in her native land. Mrs. Wold has two sisters, Julia Thompson and Segried Eidal, both of Kittitas county. Mr. Wold had two sisters, Carrie Anderson, living in Seattle, and Mary Christopher, now deceased. He has also two brothers whose names were mentioned earlier in this sketch.

He is a member of the Lutheran church. He is an admirer and supporter of Roosevelt, but belongs to neither of the parties, and in no sense is he a politician.

Mr. Wold has leased his land and his cattle, and is now living in retirement from active work. He now owns only sixty acres of land, but he is rated as being well-to-do. He likes his country and considers it an ideal location for the man with limited means.

Of Peter A. Wold it can in truth be said that no man has done more for the upbuilding and advancement of his chosen locality than has he. He has planted a number of orchards, and has improved and developed four good farms, where families are now living in happiness and prosperity. He has toiled hard and suffered many reverses, but is now receiving the reward of an honest, industrious career, in the enjoyment of the comforts of life and the respect and good will of his neighbors.

MRS. HANNAH D. DOTY, the present proprietress of "The Albany," a popular lodging house of Ellensburg, began life in Winnebago county, Illinois, in 1838. Her father, George Seaton, a farmer by occupation, was born in Oneida county, New York, in the year 1802, and died in 1855. He was a pioneer of Illinois, settling on government land in Winnebago county, in 1837. His son, John Seaton, now owns and resides upon the old homestead. Being an active man in politics, he was during his time more or less in public life. He was of Scotch descent on his father's side, while his maternal ancestors were German. Abigail (McKinster) Seaton, Mrs. Doty's mother, was of Irish descent, and was born in Connecticut, in 1805. She was a member of one of the oldest Connecticut families, and through her mother she traces her lineage back to the well known Baldwin family. The first thirty-five years of Mrs. Doty's life were spent in the state of her birth. Early in life she learned the trade of dressmaking, which vocation she plied for a number of years in Rockford, Illinois, later opening parlors in Chicago, where she remained in business for seven years. She was married in 1874 to Morgan Nurdyke. They removed to Iowa, where they settled on a stock farm nine miles west from Des Moines. By the death of her husband one year after he entered the stock business, our subject was left a widow with one child, Pearl. This little daughter, however, was not destined for a long life, and her death followed shortly after that of her father. In 1877, Mrs. Nurdyke was married to Milo Doty, a tanner by trade, and four years later moved to Utica, Nebraska, where Mr. Doty established a tannery, which he successfully operated for two years. He then sold it and established himself in the same business in Omaha. Later, wishing to change his vocation, he sold this business and, with his wife, removed to the state of Iowa, where they conducted a fruit farm. In 1888 Mrs. Doty came west to Ellensburg to join her brother, Leonard Seaton, who had preceded her and established himself. With her she brought her adopted daughter, Gertrude, who has subsequently married and lives in Mrs. Doty's old home in Illinois, where she is widely known as an active and persistent temperance worker. Especially to this trait in her daughter's character does Mrs. Doty revert with pride. Two years after coming to Ellensburg Mrs. Doty suffered the loss of her brother, whereupon she established herself in the rooming house business in the Davidson block. This building she occupied for nine years, removing to her present quarters in 1902. Mrs. Doty has one brother surviving, John, and three sisters: Dorothy Clover, Missouri Valley, Iowa; Laura Wilcox, Redfield, Iowa, and Adeline Pomeroy, whose home is in Illinois.

Hannah D. Doty is an ardent member of the Woman's Relief Corps of the G. A. R., as well as of the W. C. T. U. Of the latter society she has held the offices of treasurer and of president, and has ever been recognized as one of the most generous and active members of the organization. Indeed, she is known in her city as an aggressive and enthusiastic temperance worker along all lines. Her church home is with the Baptist faith. Besides her business establishment Mrs. Doty owns considerable mining stock, and holds a block of shares in the Equitable Loan & Trust Company, of Portland, Oregon. Her ability in matters of business is demonstrated by the fact that, venturing forth with practically no capital, she has prospered, and at the present time owns her up-to-date establishment in Ellensburg, besides other holdings of value.

FREDERICK LUDL. It is most fitting and pleasing that among the builders of the great American republic are to be found in large numbers former citizens of the little Swiss republic across the sea. Nor is it strange that among these Swiss pioneers, one, the subject of this biography, should have been so attracted by the Kittitas valley, with its scenery so dear to the heart of the mountaineer, as to tarry and become its first permanent settler. As he stood on the lofty Umptanum divide and gazed across at the Alpine-like mountains forming the Cascade range and looked down upon a virgin valley resplendent in its colored garb of foliage and silvery streams rimmed with green forest, it seemed to him a magnified reflection of his native land, he says, and then and there he made a firm resolve to spend the rest of his days in the Kittitas land—a resolution yet unbroken.

Born in Switzerland, in the year 1833, he is the scion of a Swiss family, his parents being Frederick and Elizabeth (Schonuer) Ludi, both of whom died years ago. Until he was nineteen years old he attended school; then crossed the sea to America with his brother Jacob, who had previously established himself in business at Rock Island, Illinois. For a few years Frederick remained in Illinois, then worked at his trade, that of a cooper, in Iowa and Missouri, and in 1861 entered the mines of Colorado. A year later he formed one of a party that went north from Denver to the Salmon River mines of Idaho. Thence he and others prospected farther east and discovered the Bannock mines of Montana, paving the way for the building of another state. Mr. Ludi remained in Montana until 1867, when, having accumulated a few hundred dollars and being anxious to find a permanent home, he and John Goller, better known as "Dutch John," started for Puget Sound. As previously stated, when they reached the Kittitas valley in August, they found their journey ended, for before them was the Mecca sought. Mr. Ludi first settled on the west side of the river, but in the spring of 1868 he and his partner removed to the east side and commenced improving a farm, which is now embraced in the southern portion of Ellensburg. Elsewhere in this book will be found Mr. Ludi's story of his early experiences in the country. Goller moved away in later years, but the Swiss pioneer could not be tempted to leave his Kittitas home; he remained to assist in the subjugation of the fertile valley and became one of the founders of a new county. Those early years were fraught with hardship and crude living, but perseverance and energy overcame everything. In 1882 Mr. Ludi sold his farm, which had then become valuable, to George Smith, and later it was bought by David Murray and platted into city property. Since that time he has lived with his old friend, Carl A. Sander, at the latter's home just northeast of the city, enjoying the peace and comforts of a retired life. Two years ago, in the summer of 1902, after an absence of half a century, Mr. Ludi made a trip to his old Swiss home. There he found of his immediate family only four living, two brothers, John and Goodlive, and two sisters, Mary and Catherine. Upon his return, he brought with him his nephew, John Ludi, who resides with his uncle. The venerable pioneer still retains much of his youthful vigor and when he talks of early experiences and pioneer life in the days gone by, the kindly eyes light up with enthusiasm, and, despite his silvery locks and seamed face, he appears in the imagination to be again the hopeful miner, the skilled woodsman, the wary trailman or the doughty pioneer ranchman. His friends are countless and their respect and good will unbounded; in the years to come the memory of Kittitas valley's first settler will be perpetuated by those who enjoy the fruits of a pioneer's planting, and the name Frederick Ludi will fill a niche in the wall of the Yakima country's history.

MIDDLETON V. AMEN, M. D. Ellensburg's pioneer physician, perhaps the earliest permanently established physician in Kittitas county, is the subject of this biography, who is still a resident of the beautiful valley, to which he came a quarter of a century ago. Born in Licking county, Ohio, November 14, 1835, he is the son of Ralph and Corrilla D. (Welsh) Amen, pioneers of that state. The elder Amen was a stockman and farmer, and was a native of Ohio; he died in 1853. Mrs. Amen was born in Maryland; she died in 1857. When Middleton V. was two years old his parents removed to Wisconsin; thence, in 1837, to Missouri, where the family resided until 1854. He received an education in the public schools of Missouri, and in 1853 was graduated from Dr. McDowell's Medical College, of St. Louis. The following year, the fatherless family crossed the Plains to Oregon, settling in Marion county. There the young physician practiced his profession and farmed for five years, being the principal support of his mother, brothers and sisters. When the Rogue River mines were discovered in 1859, he joined the rush and the next year opened one of the pioneer drug stores of Jacksonville. This business he successfully conducted until 1864, when he sold out and went to Portland. In 1865 he enlisted with the Oregon volunteers as an assistant surgeon; subsequently he went, in the same capacity, with the Fourteenth United States infantry, under General Lovell, to Arizona, and for three years fought the Indians of the Southwest. Returning to Marion county, he remained on the homestead a year, then visited Puget Sound and was engaged in various occupations until the fall of 1878. At that time he was attracted to the Kittitas valley by the fine mining prospects opened on the eastern slope of the Cascades and came prepared to spend a time in the Swauk district. However, friends prevailed upon him to remain in Ellensburg, then a hamlet, and practice his profession, as the two young doctors then in the valley, Drs. Reed and Walk, were preparing to leave. Dr. Amen consented and for twelve years was the only permanent physician in the county, though many came and went. His practice grew steadily and across the valley, over the hills, into the mountains, everywhere he went, allaying human suffering as best he could. With the exception of five years spent in traveling through California and Oregon in 1890-5, he has lived in Ellensburg since 1878. But the burdens of old age and sickness, hastened onward by too great exertions in his earlier years and later pioneer life, have broken down his health so that in recent years he has been unable to continue his practice or engage in any exacting work. He has two brothers, Ralph, a Methodist minister living in Los Angeles, California, and William R., a fruit grower at Waitsburg, Washington; also a sister, Mrs. Mary E. Hunt, living in Marion county, Oregon.

Several times Dr. Amen has been elected coroner of the county, but never qualified but once. Of one phase of his professional life he is justly proud, the fact that in all his long years of experience not once has he required financial credentials before attending a patient nor has he ever presented a bill for services. Though this idealist's action has probably lost him the financial independence that might now be his, still such sacrifice has not been without its rewards; his name and deeds will ever be inseparably connected with the settlement of Kittitas valley.

MICHAEL ROLLINGER. Michael Rollinger has been a resident of the Kittitas valley since 1883. He was born in Luxemburg, between Belgium and Lorraine, in 1848. George Rollinger, his father, was a native of the same country, as were also his ancestors as far back as the family record extends. George Rollinger followed farming all his life, and died in 1899, in the country of his nativity, at the age of eighty-four. Michael Rollinger's mother was Anna (Waggoner) Rollinger, also a native of Luxemburg, where she died in 1878. The subject grew to the age of nineteen years in his mother country and was given such education as the common schools there offer, when he went to France, remaining there two years. He came to the United States in 1869, and settled in Illinois. After remaining there four years he removed to Watonwan county, Minnesota, bought land and engaged in farming, which means of livelihood he followed but one year in this place, when, being eaten out by grasshoppers, he gave up his farm and went to railroading. He worked in a round-house and car shop for eight years, then gave up work for the railroad company and came to Ellensburg. Here he bought a settler's right to the land he now owns and again entered the business of farming. When he came to the Kittitas valley, Mr. Rollinger had about $1,000, and with what remained of this sum after paying for the right to his land, he at once commenced to improve and stock his farm. Later, as he became enabled to do so, he invested in more land, inaugurated a small dairy, purchased water rights and planted an orchard, so that now he has five hundred acres of well improved land in the valley; his dairy is stocked with a herd of highly bred Durham cows, and he has forty head of cattle on the range. Two hundred acres of his land are under ditch for irrigation. Mr. Rol-linger was married in May, 1878, in Minnesota, to Frances Haberman, a native Austrian, who came to the United States with her parents in 1873, when she was fourteen years of age. Her father was Frank Haberman, who was born in Austria and died in Minnesota in 1901. Her brother, August Haberman, is a farmer and fruit grower near Ellensburg. He owns the largest fruit farm in the valley. Mr. Rollinger has one brother, Nicholas Rollinger, a farmer also near Ellensburg, and two sisters, Katie Lordung and May Rollinger, both in the old country. His children are: Sitia Beiren, Lena, Nicholas, Katie, Jacob, Angeline, August and Dora, all of whom are at home, with the exception of the first named. He belongs to the Roman Catholic church. He is deeply interested in educational matters and has repeatedly held office on the school board of his district. He was for a time a director of the District Irrigation Ditch Company, of his county. In his opinion the Kittitas valley is the poor man's haven, as he is convinced from his own experience that any man, however poor financially, who is willing to work, can not only produce a living here but can accumulate money.

FRANK SCHORMAN. Frank Schorman was born in Denmark, November 2, 1864. His father, Carl Schorman, a brick maker by trade, was born in Germany, in 1839, and came from that country to settle in Denmark in 1854. He has in the past held public office in the country of his adoption, and still lives there, one of its esteemed and trustworthy citizens. Anna (Fredricks) Schorman, the subject's mother, born in Denmark in 1843, with her husband continues to make that nation her home. Frank Schorman was reared to manhood in his native land, and was blessed by his father and mother with a liberal education in the lower schools and in the University of Copenhagen. His education qualified him to teach, and in fact he has taught, only as a substitute teacher, however, but he did not choose to follow that profession; he chose rather the trade of jeweler, which he learned in the old country, beginning his apprenticeship at the tender age of fifteen years. Young, hopeful and full of ambition to get on in the world, and knowing the great opportunities offered in the United States, he decided to cast his lot in this country. Acting upon this decision in 1880 he came across the ocean, and, having a friend in the vicinity of Ellensburg, came directly here. Upon his arrival, being rather short of funds, he shunned no honorable means of earning money, so temporarily he worked at any labor he could find to do, but later found a position working at his trade. He soon found, however, that the confinement was undermining his health and that he needed more out-of-door exercise, so, being handy with tools, after three years in the jewelry shop, he went to work at carpentering. He has continued to follow this vocation more or less ever since. By the year 1897 he had accumulated sufficient capital to enable him to buy a farm. He still owns the farm, and rents it out, preferring to follow carpentering rather than to lead a farmer's life. Although he came to Ellensburg the year of the great fire, he was not a loser, in fact, as has been inferred, he had little at that time to lose.

November 28, 1891, Mr. Schorman was married in Ellensburg to Susie Peterson, also a native of Denmark, born near Aarhus, in 1863. Her father was a carpenter, born in Denmark, 1833, and came to the United States in 1889. Mary (Jensen) Peterson, Mrs. Schorman's mother, a native of Denmark, born in 1836, died in 1869. Mrs. Schorman has but one sister, Anna Peterson, who lives in California, and no brothers. Frank Schorman has two brothers and one sister living in Kittitas county; Frederick, Michael and Hannah Jacobson, and one sister, Mary Schorman, who makes her home in Spokane. Mr. and Mrs. Schorman have three children, Ernest, Mary and Alfred, aged respectively, twelve, eight and two years. Mr. Schorman is a member of the Woodmen of the World fraternity, and belongs to the Democratic party, in which he takes a working interest. His farm consists of eighty acres six miles southeast of Ellensburg, all under cultivation and well improved. Besides this farm he owns his residence in town, a pleasant home and, like his farm, in good condition as regards improvements.

NICHOLAS MUELLER. Apart from being a prominent farmer and stock raiser, Nicholas Mueller stands high as an advocate of good schools and liberal education, contributing generously to their support, making possible the boast that more pupils from his district have entered the county high school than from any other district in the county. Mr. Mueller was born in Prussia, Germany, in the month of November, 1843. His father, Peter Mueller, born in Prussia, 1817, came to the United States in 1873 and settled in St. James, Minnesota, where he became an extensive property owner, and where he died in 1890. Nicholas Mueller's mother, Anna (Thiel) Mueller, also born in Prussia, 1819, still lives in the old Minnesota home. Mr. Mueller was educated in his native country, fitting himself for teaching, which vocation he followed in Prussia for three years. In 1866 he came to the United States, making his home in Wisconsin for two years, at the expiration of which time he again took up his profession of teaching in Minnesota, teaching for four years in succession. Changing his occupation, he for eight years worked in the car shops of the St. Paul, Sioux City & Omaha Railroad Company. Again changing his work he, for two years, conducted a butcher shop and a boarding house, to his financial advantage. In 1883 he came west to Portland, Oregon, where he lost in misplaced investments the sum of $1,700. Two years later he came to the Kittitas valley and invested in a farm which he later sold for $6,000, when he bought his present home, one of the finest farms in the valley. His wife, Isabella (Schweingler) Mueller, to whom he was married in 1871, was born in New York state, 1852. Her father, Jacob Schweingler, a native born Prussian, was a soldier in the old country four years prior to his coming to America. He also served four years in the United States army fighting Indians in Minnesota and the more remote West. He had learned in his native land not to falter at the smell of powder, nor in this country did he fear the poisoned arrow and scalping knife, as was attested upon the uprising of the hostile tribes, when, leaving his farm in the keeping of his children, he "went in to clean them up." He was quite a literary man, well educated, and throughout his life was prominent in all public matters. Kate (Metz) Schweingler, her mother, deceased, was born in Germany. Mrs. Mueller has a brother, Herman Schweingler, a farmer in the Kittitas valley, another brother living in Minnesota, and a sister who lives in Iowa.

The family of Peter Mueller, besides Nicholas, consists of Michael, a railroad engineer with the St. Paul and Omaha Railroad for the last thirty years; Peter, Jr., railway engineer, Portland, Oregon; Jacob Mueller, who came to Kittitas county in 1881, where he first held the office of county treasurer and later was postmaster at Ellensburg under Cleveland's administration, dying in 1889; Nicholas N., engineer for the Northern Pacific Railroad at Portland for fourteen years; and John, also a railway engineer and merchant for over twenty-five years; and daughter, Lena Sander, at St. James, Minn.

The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mueller are: Laura, Anna, Jacob, Gertrude, now Mrs. Simeon Wippel; Marie, Kate, Della, Viola, Emma and Verna.

The family is Roman Catholic in religion, and occupies a prominent position in that church.

Mr. Mueller owns one hundred and sixty acres of farming and eighty acres of timbered land. His farm is considered one of the best improved tracts in the valley, with a splendid house, barn and other outbuildings which demonstrate care and thrift on the part of the farmer. At the present time he is managing on his farm a choice herd of dairy cows, furnishing quantities of milk to the Ellensburg creamery.

MARTHA A. WOOD. In the year 1872, when the ground upon which now stands the city of Ellensburg was marked only by a lone log cabin, Mrs. Martha A. Wood made her advent in the valley and settled upon a claim.

Born in Warren county, Illinois, 1845, she was the daughter of Samuel and Matilda (Johnson) Welty. Her father was a native of the state of Pennsylvania, born in 1802. He emigrated to Illinois when Warren county was a dense and uncivilized wilderness. He did service in the Black Hawk war, and was a typical hardy frontiersman. In 1871 he removed to California, where he remained until his death four years later. Matilda (Johnson) Welty was born at Marietta, Ohio, in 1813, and died in Ellensburg in 1893. Her father was a pioneer of Illinois, and a veteran of the War of 1812.

The subject's parents moved from Illinois to Fremont county, Iowa, in 1856, and here her girlhood days were spent. She received what education the common schools of those days could afford, and at the age of sixteen she was married to Benjamin Frisbee. To them was born one son, Walter, now a resident of British Columbia. She was married to George Wood in February, 1901. He is a native of Minnesota, and came to Ellensburg in 1890. He is a musician, and it was he who organized the Ellensburg band.

For seven years after coming to Ellensburg, Mrs. Wood continued to live upon her farm. In 1885 she was thrown upon her own resources, whereupon she opened a hotel and lodging house. In this venture she has prospered, and continues in the same business at the present time.

Although she was in Ellensburg at the time of the threatened Indian uprising, she was among the few who refrained from seeking shelter in the stockade. She also was in the town at the time of the fire of 1889, and was so fortunate as to escape, by a narrow margin, any loss. She relates some interesting narratives of her early experiences here—of how the settlers were compelled to go about on shoeless feet during the summer months—to grind their flour in the kitchen coffee mill, and at times were forced to subsist almost solely upon salmon from the river. During a part of the pioneer history of the place, the supplies for the settlement were brought in on wagons from the trading post that is now known as Umatilla Junction, Oregon, though a few provisions were packed across the Cascades from Seattle. Her husband, Mr. Frisbee, was in the country a year earlier than she.

Mrs. Wood has five brothers: George Welty, a farmer of Stafford county, Kansas; Johnson, a hotel keeper of Riverside county, California; Joseph, a machinist, of Los Angeles, California; Zachariah, farmer, Lake county, California, and Albert Welty, a dairyman of Ellensburg.

When Mr. and Mrs. Frisbee arrived in the country they were without funds. They found affairs in general controlled largely by a few wealthy cattle men, while the poorer portion of the population had only what they could produce in a small way. Practically all business at that time was done in trading, such as the settlers "swapping" potatoes, and other farm products, to the Indians for salmon, and such other commodities as they had that the whites needed.

Though Mrs. Wood has had her share of ill fortune and adversity, she is a woman not easily crushed and has risen above them, so that now she has a thriving business, and is a woman of high standing in the financial circles of her city.

FRANK E. TAYLOR is a representative citizen of Ellensburg, his occupation being that of a carpenter and builder. He is a native of Bureau county, Illinois, born April 19, 1852. His parents moved to Minnesota when he was three years old and here he grew to manhood, working on the farm with his father until his eighteenth year, when he began doing for himself. He continued on the farm until he was twenty-five, then learned the carpenter trade, also engineering, following the latter occupation for six years, after which he again took up the trade of a carpenter. The family was in Minnesota during the Sioux Indian troubles, the father being in the three days battle at New Ulm, and the family narrowly escaping the general massacre preceding the battle. Prior to his leaving the parental roof to assume the duties of life unaided, Mr. Taylor received his education in the common schools of the country, thus wisely preparing himself for the active life he has since led. Leaving the farm in 1882 he went to Minneapolis and for six years was connected with the harvester works of that city. In 1888 he decided to try the west, so came to Ellensburg and worked at the carpenter trade for one year, going then to Wenatche, where he continued at the same work for seven years. In 1896 he returned to the Kittitas valley and for a time followed both farming and carpenter work, eventually buying a quarter-section of land near Thorp, on which he resided for two seasons. In 1901 he moved to Ellensburg, where he has made a permanent home for himself and family. He still owns the farm at Thorp, where his sons reside and look after its management. While working at the carpenter trade Mr. Taylor built, among many other structures, a church at Thorp and several of the residences and business buildings of Ellensburg.

Mr. Taylor was married February 22, 1880, to Edith Smith, who was born in Maine October 6, 1859. Her father, Amos Smith, a native of Massachusetts and a wagon maker by trade, served in the Civil war with a Vermont regiment and came west to Ellensburg in 1888. Her mother is Asenith (Gibson) Smith, a native of Massachusetts. Mr. Taylor has one sister, Elmira Ingles, living at Hastings, Minnesota. The following are the children of Mr. and Mrs. Taylor: Amy C., Zelia, Floyd, Hazel, Percy and Loyal.

The parents of Frank E. Taylor were Elias F. and Nancy M. (Sloan) Taylor. Elias F. Taylor was a farmer, born in Providence, Rhode Island, October 8, 1828. He was a pioneer both in Illinois and in Minnesota, residing but a short time, however, in Illinois, whence he moved to Rice county, Minnesota, in 1856. He died in 1891. He was a veteran of the Civil war, serving three years and three months in the Third Minnesota infantry. The mother, Nancy Taylor, had three brothers in the Civil war.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Taylor are members of the M. E. church. In politics Mr. Taylor is a Republican; he is progressive in his ideas and is especially interested in the maintenance of good educational institutions.

ARTHUR M. HALL, agent of the Northern Pacific Express company at Ellensburg, was born in Cook county, Illinois, not far from the city of Chicago, in the year of 1865. Henley Hall, his father, a native of Virginia, was born April 1, 1837, and died fifty-five years, to the day, later. Originally Mr. Hall, Sr., was a farmer in the state of his birth and at an early age chose Cook county, Illinois, for his home. Here he ranked as a prominent man in political and public circles, being elected in turn to the offices of assessor, collector and commissioner of his county. Throughout his life he was an ardent Republican. Arthur M. Hall's mother, Elizabeth (Marshall) Hall, was a descendant of English stock and a native of the state of Illinois. Her parents were among the early settlers of Illinois, coming direct from the mother country to that state. She had a brother who participated in the Civil war. Mr. Hall grew to manhood in Cook county, Illinois, where as a boy he was educated in the grammar schools and later took a course in the Bryant & Stratton business college in Chicago. Following his graduation from this school he paid a brief visit to his old home, then entered upon the life which he has since followed—that of railroading. He began his railroad career as an express messenger, running between St. Paul and Helena, Montana, and later was transferred to the run between Helena and Portland, Oregon. In 1892 he left this road to accept the position at Ellensburg which he now occupies. The fact of his having held the same position for eleven years is an eloquent testimonial of the confidence and trust reposed in his ability and honor by the company which employs him. Of his family two brothers and two sisters are living: William B., in Chicago with the Merchants' Loan & Trust Company; Herbert H., of Des Plaines, Illinois; Minnie Gary, Wheaton, Illinois, and Clara Pate of Arlington Heights, Illinois. Mr. Hall is a member of the Knights of Pythias order, and is an outspoken and ardent member of the Republican party.

GEORGE W. CARVER. To the agricultural and dairying resources of its surrounding country

Ellensburg stands greatly indebted for its past and present condition of thrift and prosperity. A history of these prolific industries would be incomplete without prominent mention being made of the one of whom this sketch treats, George W. Carver. He is a native of Licking county, Ohio, where he was born June 15, 1840. His paternal ancestors came originally from Scotland, where his grandfather, Seth Carver, was born, emigrating to the state of Ohio to be numbered among the earliest pioneers of that state. In the year 1810 William Carver, father of George W., was born in the county which afterward became the birthplace of his son. He served in the Mexican war, and after that struggle was over he removed with his family to Illinois, where he died in August, 1887. Susan (Livingstone) Carver, George W. Carver's mother, was a woman of German parentage, born in 1812 to die at the ripe age of eighty years. Her father was a soldier throughout the War of 1812. By a comparison of dates mentioned above it will be seen that the subject was a lad of twelve years at the time of his removal from the state of Ohio to McLean county, Illinois. Here he grew to manhood, working on his father's farm and attending district school. Emanating as he did from a fighting ancestry it was only to be expected that, at the outbreak of the War of the Rebellion, he would be among the first to offer his services in the Union's cause. This he did August 7, 1862, enlisting in Company E, Ninety-fourth Illinois infantry, and, during a part of the war, was under command of Gen. Curtis Fremont. He participated in many prominent battles and skirmishes while in service and was painfully wounded during the battle of Pea Ridge. With his company young Carver was mustered out of service November 17, 1865. At the close of the war he returned to Illinois, to remain there, however, only one winter, at the break-up of which he traveled westward, stopping at Leavenworth, Kansas. Here he engaged as a stage driver across the Plains to Utah. For two years he drove on lines leading out of Salt Lake City, carrying the United States mails. As would be supposed, while engaged in this frontier occupation Mr. Carver experienced many hardships and many a "brush" he had with hostile Indians, sometimes barely escaping with his life. One among many interesting adventures Mr. Carver relates is of a time when the Indians succeeded in capturing his stage at Pine Bluffs, Wyoming, and burning its load of mail.

In 1869, at Lincoln, Nebraska, he was united in marriage to Rose H. Curtis, a native of Michigan. The couple's first year of married life was spent in Dodge county, Nebraska, after which, in 1870, they immigrated to Clackamas county, Oregon, and settled on a farm. Here they remained until the year 1876, directly preceding the threatened Indian outbreak of '77, when they came to Washington and took up, as a homestead, their present home, near Ellensburg, on which they have resided continuously since. During the Indian trouble referred to Mr. Carver assisted in the erection of the stockades in the valley for mutual protection. To Mr. and Mrs. Carver have been born eleven children, six of whom are living: William, Rosa B., Susan, James, Elizabeth and Nellie. Mr. Carver is one of a family of eleven, of which but three members besides himself survive: Mary I. and Elizabeth, both living in Illinois, and Susan, whose home is in Canada. George W. Carver is well known as an upright, straightforward citizen as well as a prosperous business man, possessing some two hundred and eighty acres of choice land. Until recently he operated one among the largest dairies in the county. His political affiliations are with the Republican party. In lodge circles he is well known and popular, holding membership in the Masonic and Odd Fellows fraternities; he is also an influential charter member of the Grand Army of the Republic, David Ford Post, No. 11.

JAMES H. THOMPSON is engaged in the butcher business at the People's market at Ellensburg, Washington. He started to earn his living when a boy of thirteen, when he secured a job with a freighting outfit in Montana. He has been all over the Northwest, even to Cape Nome, Alaska. He was born in Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania, May 22, 1862, and went when a baby with his parents to Minnesota. His father, Joseph Thompson, was a native of Pennsylvania and died in 1893. He was a Minnesota pioneer and hotel keeper at Minneapolis. Mr. Thompson's mother, Catherine (Brantchofer) Thompson, was born in Pennsylvania of German parentage and died in 1866. Following his mother's death, the boy was cared for by foster parents in Carver county, Minnesota. He lived on a farm and attended country school until he was thirteen, when he struck out for himself. He landed at Miles City, Montana, and went to freighting for the Diamond R. Freighting Company, which had the government freighting contract in Montana. Later he was corral boss for this company for three years. He moved to Helena, Montana, engaging there in the butcher business and subsequently located near Missoula, where he furnished meat to the contractors who were building the Northern Pacific. He followed the construction of the road to Ellensburg, continuing to furnish the meat supplies. In 1887 he formed a partnership with H. A. Bull at Ellensburg, in the butcher business, but sold out after one year and worked on a salary until 1890. Then he joined in the rush to the Cape Nome gold fields of Alaska, where he remained three years and did well. In January, 1903, he returned to Ellensburg and again engaged in the meat business.

He was married in 1888 at Ellensburg to Mrs. Mamie Ammond, a native of Webster City, Iowa. They have one child, a daughter, named Mary Constance. Mrs. Thompson is a member of the Christian church at Ellensburg. Mr. Thompson is a Republican and takes an active interest in party work. He makes it a point to be present at caucuses and primaries as well as at the conventions, but has never been a candidate for office.

WILLIAM B. PRICE. The Grand Pacific Hotel, Ellensburg, has been under the management of William B. Price for three years, during which time it has continued a first class hostelry, well patronized by the traveling public and, to a considerable extent, by citizens of Ellensburg. Mr. Price has been in the restaurant and hotel business in this city for seventeen years, or since 1886. Prior to that date he had a varied experience, well worth relating in a work of this character, that has to do with the personal histories of the pioneers of the business and industrial institutions of Kittitas county. Mr. Price was born in Cloverdale, Sonoma county, California, July 24, 1857. When five years old, in 1862, he was "packed" into Canyon City, Oregon, on a mule, his parents being among the first to go to that place during the mining excitement of those early days. Two years later the family went to Portland; in 1866, to Boise, Idaho; in 1867, to the Salmon river mines; in 1868, to Missoula county, Montana; in 1870, to Big Hole, to Bannock, later to Utah, eventually locating in San Bernardino, southern California. But the settlement here was not permanent; the next move was to Mason county, Washington, where the father received a government appointment as physician and surgeon; from this place the family went overland to Missoula county, Montana, where the mother died in 1873. Two years later, in 1875, the father and son went with a pack train to Seattle, passing through the Kittitas valley. W. B. Price remained on the Sound for four years, when he came to Ellensburg, in 1881, and began operations in the Swauk mining region with his brother Richard; he has been interested in mines ever since. In 1883 he returned to Montana, remaining there seventeen months, arriving again in Ellensburg December 31, 1885. In 1885 he opened a restaurant and has since been continuously in the restaurant and hotel business, at the same time looking after extensive mining interests in various sections. He took charge of the Grand Pacific hotel in 1900 and has found it a profitable investment. The father of William B. Price was Joseph B. Price, a physician and surgeon, born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, November 3, 1818. He crossed the Plains in 1851, engaging in mining in California and also becoming one of the most extensive live stock owners in that state. He was a progressive man and intensely active; he practiced his profession while engaged in the other pursuits, served four years as sheriff of Mendocino county, and took a prominent part in the political affairs of the state. He was of Welsh descent, tracing his ancestry to colonial times; he died in 1900. The mother of our subject was Martha M. (Huff) Price, a native of Illinois, born in 1830 and died in 1873. She was the widow of Dr. Arnold of colonial stock. She was a pioneer of California, crossing the Plains in the early fifties.

W. B. Price was married August 19, 1882, in Ellensburg, to Mary Etta McDonald, a native of Oregon, born in 1863. Her father is Jesse W. McDonald, a native of Missouri, who crossed the Plains in the fifties and came to the Kittitas valley in 1872. He has served four years as county commissioner, has been school director, and in other ways has been active in public affairs. Mrs. Price's mother's maiden name was Perry; she died in 1873. Eugene C. Price of Oregon; Richard Price of Latah county, Idaho, and John M. Price of Montana, are brothers of W. B. Price; he also has three half-brothers—Benjamin, Leonard, and Wenn. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Price are: Guy H., Hoidée C., Joseph C., Ruby B., and Harry. Mr. Price is a member of the Elks and of the M. W. A. In political matters he is a Republican, attends county and state conventions and takes an active part in all campaigns, assisting his friends but not asking for office himself. He confines his business ambitions to his hotel and mining interests, and is recognized as one of the successful and substantial citizens of Ellensburg.

WILLIAM PACKWOOD. William Packwood is one of the promising and energetic young farmers of the Kittitas valley. He is a native Washingtonian, having been born on the farm where he now lives, September 23, 1879. His father, Samuel T. Packwood, was born July 4, 1842; a veteran of the Civil war, who came to Washington four years prior to the subject's birth. His mother was Margaret F. (Holmes) Packwood, a native of Missouri, in which state she was born January 27, 1843, and grew up to the age of sixteen, when she was married to Mr. Packwood. The first twelve years of William Packwood's life were spent on his father's farm, where he received his early education in the district school. At the age mentioned he enrolled in the Ellensburg academy, where he took a three years' course. Leaving school he came back to the farm and worked for his father for seven years after which, at the age of twenty-two, he went into the agricultural business on his own account.

November 20, 1899, he was married to Tennessee Harrell, born in the state for which she was christened, February 17, 1876. Until she had attained womanhood she attended school in her native state. At the age of twenty-two she came to Ellensburg, where later she was married. Her father was Thomas A. Harrell, born in Tennessee, in Hawkins county, 1843. He is a farmer by profession, and still lives in the county of his birth. During the Civil war he was a Union soldier, and saw active service throughout that struggle. Julia (Derrick) Harrell was Mrs. Packwood's mother. She too, was born in Hawkins county, Tennessee. In 1855, at the age of sixteen, she was married to Mr. Harrell.

Mr. Packwood's brothers are: John I., born in Missouri, 1862, now living at Cle-Elum; Oliver F., born in 1878, and Harvey and Harry, twins, born in 1881, and Samuel T., Jr., and George W., now dead.

He had three sisters, Colorado, Elizabeth and Farnetta, the latter two of whom are dead. Colorado, now Mrs. G. R. Bradshaw, was born in the state of Colorado, June 4, 1874, while parents were en route to Washington.

Mrs. Packwood's brothers and sisters are: Edith, Edwin, Julia A., Rachel E., Thomas, Luther S., Laura M., Stephen and Herbert D. Harrell—all natives of Tennessee, and all living in that state at the present time with the exception of Edwin and Julia A. Harrell, who came to Ellensburg in 1902, and are now living in the vicinity of that place.

Mr. and Mrs. Packwood have one child, Delphia by name.

Mr. Packwood was reared in the faith of the Christian church, but has no definite religious connections. In politics he is a Roosevelt Republican. One hundred and sixty acres of farm land, with some stock, comprise his principal property holdings. He is making a specialty of raising timothy and clover hay, of which he produces about three hundred tons per year.

CHRISTIAN HOLM resides some three miles west and half a mile north of Ellensburg, Washington, and is engaged in farming and stock raising. He was born in Denmark, November 25, 1861, being the second son of Peter Nelson and Elizabeth K. (Skou) Holm. His father was a Danish farmer born in 1813, and now deceased. His mother, who still survives, was born in 1823. Mr. Holm's eldest brother, Hans P., born in 1853, and his sister, Elizabeth M. S. Holm, born in 1868, live in Denmark. Mr. Holm received his early education in the common schools of his native land and worked on his father's farm up to the time he was fourteen years old. He then studied a year with the pastor and spent the succeeding year on the farm. For eighteen months he was occupied in learning the trade of a turner and then farmed once more until April 14, 1879, at which time he left home and embarked for the United States. He arrived in New York, May 3, 1879, and from there went to Nevada, where he was employed a year and one-half. In the fall of 1883 he drove a four horse team from Nevada to Washington, the trip consuming two months. He worked for various people the first year after his arrival in Kittitas valley, then took up farming and stock raising. He has been very successful in his business enterprises and now owns six hundred head of cattle on the range and fourteen head of horses. He is a frugal, hardworking, and successful citizen. He belongs to the Lutheran church and, politically, is a Republican.

CHARLES H. DUNNING, who is engaged in farming, about one and one-half miles west of Ellensburg, Washington, was born in Canada November 24, 1866, and was there educated. He worked on the farm until he was fifteen years old and then engaged in teaming in the mining districts. In the fall of 1886 he went to Minnesota and engaged in logging. The next spring he moved to Washington and took up a pre-emption claim which he made his home for four years. He bought a band of sheep and for twelve years engaged in that industry. In the fall of 1899 he bought two hundred and forty acres of land where he now makes his home and follows farming. He is the son of Lewis T. Dunning, a Canadian farmer who has resided near Ellensburg since 1891. His mother was Margaret (Pearson) Dunning, a native of Canada. The other children were Eliza B., born in 1863; Abel B., born in 1868; John P., born in 1870, and Melinda L. Dunning, born in 1874, all natives of Canada and now living in Kittitas county, Washington.

Mr. Dunning was married in Ellensburg, August 24, 1893, to Miss Elizabeth R. Snow, daughter of Walter and Elizabeth (Parmeter) Snow. Her parents are both dead. Mrs. Dunning was born in Devonshire, England, June 30, 1864, and comes of a family which traces its descent back to William the Conqueror. She came to Washington in 1890 and made her home with her brother until her marriage. Her brother, Nicholas Snow, lives near Ellensburg, and another brother, Walter J., is also in the United States. A sister, Mrs. Mary E. Tapp, lives in England. Mr. and Mrs. Dunning have two children: Colas G., born July 12, 1894, and Lillian B. Dunning, born September 21, 1902. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dunning are church members. Mr. Dunning is an active Republican. He is an intelligent, honest and successful farmer, and his 240 acres are under a high state of cultivation. He also owns forty acres of timber land. He has just completed a fine eight-room house on the place, as a residence for the family. He is a public spirited citizen and ranks as one of the solid farmers of the county.

OLA PETERSON. Born in Sweden March 22, 1853, Ola Peterson came to the United States June 8, 1870, and is now a well established mining man and liquor dealer in Ellensburg. His father was Swan Peterson, a farmer of Swedish birth, who died in 1883. His mother, Precilla Peterson, also born in Sweden, died in 1891. The first eighteen years of Ola Peterson's life were spent in his native country on his father's farm, and fourteen years of this time was spent principally in school. Upon coming to America he landed in New York, and soon afterward going to St. Paul, Minn., he secured employment as a deck hand on one of the river steamers. This work, however, proved too heavy for his constitution, necessitating his giving it up after a trial of two months. His next work was on the railroad in the capacity of contractor in construction work. From his first day in his adopted country Mr. Peterson diligently applied himself to the study of the English tongue, which he found not difficult and soon mastered. Coming to Portland, Oregon, in the fall of 1876, he worked as a longshoreman until the railroad between Tacoma and the Wilkeson coal mines was almost completed. He did some contracting on this road, and, upon its completion, went prospecting for mineral in the Swauk country. Mr. Peterson ran the first quartz mill in this region. In all he spent seven years in the mountains before coming to Ellensburg in 1885, when he opened a liquor store in that city; he still continues in the same business. During his career as a prospector he found a number of gold nuggets, the largest of which was valued at $68. While he was in the Swauk country the Nez Perce Indian war broke out. Upon the outbreak of the war the families of almost all the men in camp came to Ellensburg for safety. Only six of the miners remained in camp, they being supplied by the United States government with guns and ammunition with which to defend themselves. Although they were repeatedly threatened by the hostile tribes of Joseph, the miners were not molested.

May 10, 1886, Mr. Peterson was married to Augusta Strigler, born in Sweden November 12, 1868, who came to America with her parents in 1871. Her father, John Strigler, also a native of Sweden, was formerly a lieutenant in the Swedish army. Bengta (Neuman) Strigler, Mrs. Peterson's mother, came to America with her husband, with whom she still lives in the Kittitas valley. Mr. Peterson has four brothers and three sisters, all of whom, with the exception of one brother, who is a tailor in New York City, reside in the old country. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have no children. He is an active worker in the rank and file of the Republican party and in 1890 was that party's candidate for the office of county treasurer, but was defeated by the small margin of twenty-eight votes.

JOHN T. GILMOUR. Mr. Gilmour is a resident of Ellensburg, Washington, and is following the same trade that his father followed before him—that of a blacksmith. He was born in Hancock county, Illinois, November 5, 1840. His father, John W. Gilmour, was born in Kentucky, September 13, 1813, and passed away in Ellensburg, November 7, 1903, at the age of ninety. The elder Gilmour crossed the Plains with ox teams in 1851, and the following year settled on a homestead in Linn county, Oregon, where he lived for thirty-three years. He then moved to the forks of the Santiam and resided there some eight years, after which time he lived with his children until his death last fall. His wife, Jane (Drounaugh) Gilmour, was born in Kentucky in 1812 and died in 1884. Mr. Gilmour, the subject of this article, attended school in Illinois until he was eleven years old, at which time he crossed the Plains with his parents. He helped them all he could until August 24, 1862, and then took up a claim near Albany, Oregon, where he lived over a quarter of a century. While there, in 1870, he took his father's place at blacksmithing, with whom he had learned his trade, and continued to work at the trade ten years, then moved to Ellensburg and entered into partnership with Willis Thorp. After six months Mr. Gilmour bought out his partner and has since continued to conduct the business alone. He was married October 26, 1862, to Virginia Lineberger, who was born April 29, 1845, in Washington county, Oregon. Her father, Louis L. Lineberger, was born in North Carolina, in 1810, and was a farmer and frontiersman. He came to Oregon in 1843 and died in 1884. Her mother, whose maiden name was Jane Henderson, was born in North Carolina in 1808 and passed away in 1882. Mr. Gilmour was one of a family of ten children, and two brothers and two sisters are still living. Mr. and Mrs. Gilmour have been the parents of eleven children, of whom five are deceased. The surviving children are named: Fanny, Lena, Maud, Ona, Fred and John L. Their father was formerly a member of the Independent Order of Old Fellows and has passed through the entire lodge, but in recent years has given up his membership. He is an ardent believer in the principles of the Democratic party, but has never been a seeker after political preferment.

BURT PEASE. A prosperous and contented agriculturist of the Yakima valley is Burt Pease, whose farm lies three miles west and one-half mile north of Ellensburg, on rural delivery route No. 1. He is a native of Douglas county, Minnesota, born June 12, 1865. His father, Benjamin S. Pease, a native of Pennsylvania of Welsh extraction, was born in 1826, in Tioga county. Always an ardent hunter and lover of pioneer life, Benjamin Pease left the state of his birth while yet a youth and made his home for a time in the state of Wisconsin, then later in Iowa, always keeping in the vanguard of civilization. He was married in 1852 to Roxy L. Williams, born in Steuben county, New York, in 1832. Burt Pease came to Ellensburg in 1877, being then a lad of twelve years. Until he reached the age of eighteen years he worked on his father's farm, receiving, the while, his education in the district school. The following six years of his life were spent in riding the range and caring for the stock of his father and other employers. Seven years ago, during 1897, he purchased the farm where he now lives. His marriage took place July 7, 1880, when he wedded Miss Emma R. Poynor, a resident of Ellensburg since 1888. Mrs. Pease was born in Stockton, California, February 3, 1873. She attended school in that city until her fifteenth year, when she came to Ellensburg with her family. She is the daughter of Jesse B. and Frances A. (Hall) Poynor, who crossed the Plains to California in 1859. Her father was born in Tennessee, October 27, 1837, was married in 1859, two weeks prior to starting for the west, and died in Stockton, California, November 9, 1875. He was of German-Scotch descent and his wife, a native of Missouri, was born of Scotch-Irish parents, July 29, 1842. She died April 28, 1901. The journey of Jesse Poynor and his bride across the Plains was an eventful and at times a hazardous one. The start was made from the state of Missouri, where the couple was married, and five months was consumed before the journey ended in Stockton. On one occasion, while fording a stream, several members of the party were drowned.

Mr. Pease's brothers and sisters are: Edgar, born in Iowa, now living near Ellensburg; Perry L., native of Minnesota, present address Cle-Elum, Washington; Ella J. Wagoner, born in Minnesota, living near Thorp, Washington, and Clara L. Burlingham, who was born in Minnesota and now lives in Ellensburg. Mrs. Pease has two brothers and one sister; Samuel H. Poynor, who was born in Stockton, California, November 28, 1864, and is now in business in Seattle; Rachel G. Frederick, who was born in Stockton May 15, 1867, and who now lives near Ellensburg, and Mathew S. Poynor, who was born January, 23, 1875, in Stockton, and is now a railroad man and has his home in Tacoma. To Mr. and Mrs. Pease have been born six children: Leonard W., Merton C., Ethel E., Fred G., Everett S. and Calvin S., the eldest of whom is eleven years of age and the youngest a little over one year old.

Mr. Pease has membership in the Woodmen of the World society, and politically is a staunch Republican; especially strong in his support and admiration of President Roosevelt. He is at the present time secretary of the West Side Irrigation Company. Both he and his wife are members of the Congregational church. Burt Pease is a man who believes in the advantage of diversified farming, and he makes it pay. Of his farm thirty acres are under irrigation. Five acres of this are in orchard, one acre is in strawberries and on the remainder he grows various other crops which thrive in the valley. Besides being a farmer, in the common sense of the term, he is a fruit grower, poultry raiser and dairyman. He devotes especial attention to the latter branch, and has his dairy stocked with a well selected herd of Jersey cattle. He has a good farm and conducts it successfully.

JOHN N. BURCH, farmer and dairyman, residing two and one-half miles northwest of Ellensburg, began life in Michigan May 15, 1858. His father, Levi Burch, a native of the state of New York, served as a soldier in the War of 1812, and died in Michigan in 1862. John N. received his early education in the public schools of Lenawee county, Michigan, and at the age of sixteen went out to work among the farmers of his neighborhood. When twenty-one years of age, in 1879, he came west to the state of Washington and hired out as a hand on what is known as the Smith ranch, eighteen months later going to work on the N. T. Goodwin farm, where he continued until his marriage, April 8, 1883. He then went in the employ of W. D. Killmore for one year, and in 1884 rented the N. T. Goodwin farm, cultivating it for himself. Later he took a homestead, where he lived until the spring of 1888, when he purchased the old J. B. Rego place, which he has since made his home. Mrs. Burch's maiden name was Anna Belle Rego. She is a native of Harrison county, Missouri, where she was born April 30, 1867, and removed to Washington with her parents in 1874. She was educated in the schools of Klickitat county, was married to John Burch April 8, 1883, and has since continued to reside upon the farm where she spent the greater part of her childhood. She has four sisters and one brother, as follows: Mary C. Stevens, born in Indiana, now living near Ellensburg; Josephine Killmore, a native of Indiana, living near Ellensburg; J. E. Rego, a native of Missouri, now a land owner near Ellensburg; Emma R. and Effie F. Stevens, both natives of Missouri, now living near Ellensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Burch's children are: Leroy, Winfred, Dora E. and Clara C., the eldest born in 1885, and the youngest in 1899. Mr. and Mrs. Burch are members of the M. E. church, identified with the local organization near their place. Fraternally Mr. B. is a Woodman of the World, and politically is a zealous Republican; being of the gold standard Democrats who supported William McKinley in 1866, since which time his faith in the Republican principles has never wavered, nor his loyalty been brought into question. Mr. Burch has followed both cattle and sheep raising during his life in Washington, but it is as farmer and dairyman he is best known; and he is the owner of a valuable farm, a choice herd of cows and a flock of registered Shropshire sheep. He is a man who stands well with his neighbors and is recognized as one of the substantial citizens of the community.

W. A. STEVENS. Born in the state of Pennsylvania, December 3, 1851, W. A. Stevens is now a prosperous farmer living some four and one-half miles northwest of Ellensburg. Mr. Stevens' father, John H. Stevens, a native of New Brighton, Ohio, born January 12, 1829, served in the Civil war from 1861 until he was mustered out of service in the fall of 1864. Twelve years following his discharge from the army he came west to Oregon, where the next eight years of his life were spent, after which time he returned east as far as Kansas City. He later came to Washington and took up a homestead where the town of Roslyn now stands and still later removed to a farm south of Cle-Elum, where he remained seven years. His last move was to his son's home, where he lived until his death recently. His wife, Harriet (Lockwood) Stevens, was born in Pennsylvania in 1825. Mr. Stevens was educated in the common schools of Clay county, Illinois. At the age of nineteen he adopted the trade of cooper, which he followed a year and six months in Graysville, Illinois. In 1873 he started west. On reaching Missouri he joined a party of three families, and with them pushed westward by team as far as Omaha, Nebraska. On account of danger of encountering hostile Indians, the party deemed it the better part of valor to sell the teams and pursue their course by rail. This they did, arriving in San Francisco June 10, 1873. Mr. Stevens and party shipped from San Francisco to Victoria, British Columbia, thence to Seattle, arriving there June 27th of the same year. Seattle was then a small town, and the only paper then published was the Seattle Intelligencer. The entire party was stricken with the measles while in the city. After working at various callings some three months, Mr. Stevens came to the Kittitas valley and filed on land which has since been his home. His farm is now in a high state of cultivation. At the time of the Indian uprising he started out with a party of companions in an endeavor to capture the wily Chief Moses, but Moses had been taken into custody by another party previous to their arrival on the scene. He assisted in the building of stockades for the protection of the settlers in those days of Indian scare and sleepless nights. Mr. Stevens was married in 1876 to Emma R. Rego, a native of Missouri, born May 17, 1859. She at the age of fifteen came west with her parents to Washington, and two years later became the bride of W. A. Stevens. Her father, John B. Rego, was born in France in 1825, and now lives near Ellensburg. The mother, Kathren B. (Friedly) Rego, is a native of Indiana. Mrs. Stevens' brothers and sisters are: Mary C. Stevens, Josephine Killmore, J. E. Rego, Anna Belle Burch and Effie F. Stevens. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Stevens are: Joseph, born in Ohio, now in California; Charles G., born in Illinois, now residing near Ellensburg; Alice N. Davidson, of Portland; George M. of Chicago and Hattie Steele of Roslyn, all natives of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Stevens' children are: Joseph Edward, Arthur L. and John Leo; the eldest born in 1877 and the youngest in 1892, the two last named still being at home. Joseph Edward was married July 10, 1902, to Miss Georgia L. Blake, of Winlock, Washington, daughter of George and Louisa Blake, and a teacher in the Ellensburg school at the time of her marriage. They live on a farm near the husband's parents. W. A. Stevens is an enthusiastic Odd Fellow and his wife is an active worker in the Rebekahs. They have each passed through the chairs of their respective orders and have represented their orders as delegates at the grand lodges. Politically, Mr. S. is a zealous Republican and enthusiastic admirer of President Roosevelt. He held the office of county assessor from 1893 to 1897, and has also served as deputy in the same office. He is an active member and officer in the M. E. church, and in addition to farm lands owns stock and a small dairy. He is one of the substantial citizens of Kittitas county.

JACOB E. REGO. On rural delivery route No. 1, not far from Ellensburg, lies the farm of Jacob E. Rego, a native of the state of Missouri, born November 24, 1856. He is the son of John B. and Kathren B. (Friedly) Rego, the former born in France, 1825, and the latter in Indiana, 1830, now living near Ellensburg. Jacob E. Rego received his early education in the district school of northern Missouri, and at the age of seventeen years he left the state and came with his parents to the Kittitas valley, Washington. Here he worked on his father's farm, attending school in the meantime, until he reached the age of twenty-two, at which time he started out to make his way in the world, unaided. The following two years he lived in an old pioneer log house, later erecting a small frame dwelling, in which he lived during the succeeding seventeen years. In 1902 he built a modern eleven-room house on his farm, which he now occupies. After living in this county nine years, Mr. Rego returned to his native state and was there married to Miss Emma I. Ross, September 2, 1883. Shortly after the ceremony was performed he returned to his farm with his bride, coming via railroad and stage to The Dalles, where they were met by teams and escorted to the Kittitas valley.

Mrs. Rego was born in Harrison county, Missouri, October 9, 1864. Previous to her marriage, she lived on her father's farm, where she attended the public schools and received a good grammar school education. Her father, Branson M. Ross, was born in Ohio, 1833. His father and mother, both natives of England, died when he was a child. Mr. Ross now lives in Post Falls, Idaho. Mrs. Rego's mother is Susan A. (Terhune) Ross, born in Indiana, 1843, in which state she was educated. She later removed with her parents to Missouri, where she was married to Mr. Ross, with whom she now lives in Post Falls. Mr. Rego's brothers and sisters are: Mary C. Stevens, Josephine S. Killmore, Rosa L. Stevens, Anna Belle Burch and Effie Frances Stevens. The two first named were born in Indiana, the three latter in Missouri. They all are now living in the vicinity of Ellensburg. Mrs. Rego is one of a family of ten children, all born in Missouri, and her brothers and sisters are: Stanton Ross, who came west twenty years ago, and now lives in Post Falls; Nora N. Carder, of Elgin, Oregon; Susan S. Stockell, Rathdrum, Idaho; Naomi C. Ludington, now of Post Falls; Wm. S. Ross, now with his parents; Osie Stewart, Ellensburg; Effie Royce, Rathdrum; Robert J. and Bessie M. Ross, the former now in Spokane and the latter in Post Falls. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Rego are: Zeffa E., born February 5, 1885; John B., Jr., born March 31, 1890; Ruby, born October 5, 1893, and Ruth A., born December 24, 1895, all living at home with their parents. Mr. Rego is a staunch Roosevelt Republican. He has four hundred and fifty acres of well improved land, his crops consisting largely of alfalfa, timothy and clover. Of the latter crop he annually bales about two hundred tons of hay. He handles a herd of one hundred and fifty head of well-bred Durham cattle.

GEORGE MINIELLY. George Minielly is a prosperous and energetic farmer living not far distant from Ellensburg. He is a native of Ontario, Canada, which country is also the birthplace of his father, mother and the other members of his immediate family. His father and mother are still living in their native country, as are also his brothers, William and Albert, and his sisters, Eliza Price, Clara, Laura and Rozina. His brothers and sisters other than those mentioned are: James, a farmer residing near Ellensburg; Ellen Bryan, Lansing, Michigan; Alice, Detroit, Michigan. One brother, John, passed away in Canada. Mr. Minielly received his education in the common schools of his native country, working in the meantime on his father's farm. When he reached the age of fifteen he left home and entered the employ of various farmers in his neighborhood, working by the day, until he was nineteen, when he came west to Fairhaven, Washington. He worked in different logging camps thereabouts, and also spent some time on Orcas Island. In 1893 he left the island and went to Indian Territory, later going to Oklahoma and thence to Kansas City. He remained in the city three months, then came west once more and settled temporarily in Tacoma. After teaming there a short time, he crossed the Cascades to Yakima valley and spent the summer laboring on a ranch; the following two years he worked on a hay baler. In 1896 he came to Ellensburg and purchased a hay press, which he has since run during haying seasons. In 1899 he bought forty acres of land, four and one-half miles northwest of Ellensburg, and has since made his home on the property.

He was married in Ellensburg, December 25, 1898, to Miss Addie Ellen Ferguson, a native of Washington, who was born on a farm near where she now lives. Her father, James Ferguson, a farmer of Scotch-Irish descent, was born in Illinois, May 11, 1830, and still lives near Ellensburg. Mrs. Mimielly's mother is Elizabeth (McEwen) Ferguson, born July 3, 1857, in Kansas, and still lives with her husband on the farm. Mrs. Mimielly was educated in the common schools of Kittitas county and was married in her eighteenth year. She has four brothers and a like number of sisters, all of whom, with the exception of J. M. and Mrs. Montgomery, are native Washingtonians. They are: John M., native of Iowa; Margaret O. Montgomery, James H., Lottie R. E. Harris, George H., Lillie D., Benjamin F. and Bessie L. Ferguson. The first named, and eldest of the family, was born in 1870; the last named, and youngest, was born in 1880. All reside near Ellensburg. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mimielly are: Myrtle, born October 13, 1899, and Stanley, born March 20, 1900. Both were born on the farm near Ellensburg. Mr. Mimielly is fraternally a member of the Modern Woodmen of America, and belongs to the Presbyterian church. His wife is a Baptist. In politics, he is a Republican, though not active in the councils of his party. His principal property interest is the valuable farm where he makes his home.

EDGAR PEASE. Edgar Pease is engaged in the farming and stock raising business about five miles northwest of Ellensburg. He was born in Woodhull, Steuben county, New York, September 5, 1853. His father, Benjamin S. Pease, was born in the state of Pennsylvania in 1827. Edgar Pease's grandfather was a native of Vermont, and his grandmother of Massachusetts. His grandfather, John Olives Pease, was an ardent Methodist, and for nearly half a century was a ruling elder in that church. He was married in the state of Pennsylvania and died in that state at the age of eighty-four. His wife followed him to the grave five years later, leaving a family of fifteen children, of whom Benjamin was second in age. His mother's name was Roxey L. (Williams) Pease, and she was born in New York in 1832. Benjamin S. and Mrs. Pease removed with their family from the state of New York to make their home in Iowa, near Mason

City, in the old pioneer days while the Indians still claimed mastery of the country. In 1857 they again removed, this time to Douglas county, Minnesota, at a time when their nearest neighbor lived twenty-five miles distant, and the nearest grist mill was at a distance of seventy miles. The country was rapidly settled, however, and three years later a school was established, where the children received their early education. In 1861 the Sioux Indian outbreak occurred and most of the settlers were driven out of the county. Some attempted to erect a stockade, but on account of a few faint-hearted ones, who became frightened and deserted, the attempt was a failure. Mr. Pease then removed in turn to Sauk Centre, Stearns county, and to St. Cloud. In the latter place the winter of 1861 was spent, and here again Edgar attended school. In the following spring the family returned to the east, and here one of Edgar's uncles died. The fall of 1862 found the family again in Sauk Centre, Minnesota, and in February, 1863, they returned to Douglas county.

In 1867 the father sold out and started for Washington, but on account of an insurrection in the party of emigrants the journey was postponed after Fort Ransom had been reached, and the Pease family returned to Parke's Prairie, Minnesota, and there settled on land. Here they lived until 1884, at which time they came to Kittitas county, Washington. Upon arriving in this state Edgar purchased a quarter section of land, to which, two years later, he added two hundred and forty acres. Two years ago he sold his old homestead to his son and bought his present farm. His surviving brothers and sisters are: Perry L., Cle-Elum; Ellia I. Waggoner, Thorp; Burt, Ellensburg; Clara L. Burlingham, Ellensburg, and they are all natives of Minnesota.

At Parke's Prairie, November 4, 1874, Mr. Pease was married to Miss Rebecca L. Logan, born April 25, 1854, in Sparta, Wisconsin. She received her education at first in the grammar school and later in the high school, of her native town, and for several years following her graduation taught in schools of her state. Her father was Samuel Logan, a native of Ireland, born in 1824. He came to America when a boy, and later engaged in the merchandise business in Sparta, Wisconsin. During the Civil war he held the rank of sergeant. He died in 1879. Her mother was Harriet Jane (Buessey) Logan, born in Massachusetts, 1830. Mrs. Pease's sisters are: Margaret E. Heath, Portland, Oregon; Sarah Jane Gordon, Thorp, Washington, and Eva J. Knoke, Bemidji, Minnesota. All were born in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Pease have three sons and one daughter, whose names and addresses are: Clarence M., Ellensburg; Ernest B., Ellensburg; Louisa H., at home, and Hugh L., also living with his parents. The first named was born in 1876, and Hugh in 1885.

Mr. Pease is an active Odd Fellow, having passed all the chairs in the subordinate lodge of that society and represented it in grand lodge, and his wife is an equally active Rebecca. He has been a life-long Republican, and is now holding the office of county commissioner, being elected in 1903 to the four-year term.

THOMAS MEEK owns and tills a farm two and one-half miles northwest of Ellensburg. Born in Durham county, England, in 1846, he is the son of Thomas and Hanna (Willis) Meek, both also of English birth. His father was a farmer, also born in Durham county, in 1797, and died in the old country in 1880. His mother was born in 1803, and became a highly educated woman. During the first twenty years of his life, Thomas Jr. worked on the farms of his father and others, in the meantime attended school, and in this way obtained a good practical education. At twenty he left the farm and followed teaming some twenty years, then opened a store. After three years in the merchandise business he left England to try his fortune in America. He arrived in New York in 1881, and almost immediately came west to Bismarck, North Dakota. He there entered the railroad service, in which he continued five years. His next move was to the state of Montana. He tarried in that state but three months, however, then pushed on westward and settled in Roslyn, Washington. At that point he became an employee of the North Pacific Coal Company, and remained with the firm fifteen years, then settled on the farm near Ellensburg, which he still owns and where he has since lived.

He was married to Miss Elizabeth Hodson, 1878, in Durham county, England. Mrs. Meek was born in Yorkshire, England, September 8, 1856. She was brought up in her native country and received a common school education. Her parents were George and Mary (Dent) Hodson, both born in England, the father in 1826, and the mother in 1827. Both were well educated in their mother country, came to America in 1881, and are now living in Roslyn. Mr. Meek has three brothers and the same number of sisters. His brothers are: John, born in England, where he now lives; George W., also living in England, where he was born, and Harry W., who was born in England, crossed the ocean in 1881 and now lives in Roslyn. His eldest brother, Nicholas, now deceased, was also born in England. His sisters are: Jane Anderson and Margaret Deacon, who were both born and still reside in England, and Elizabeth Jackson, also born in England, came to this country in 1893, and is now living in Roslyn. Mrs. Meek has two brothers, Thomas and Frank Hodson, both natives of Britain. The former lives near Ellensburg, and the latter makes his home in Colorado. Mr. Meek had one uncle, George Willis, who was accidentally killed while working on his farm in England. An aunt, Margaret Jewett, is still living. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Meek are: Isaac, Hanna, Frances, Thomas, Joseph, John B. and George. Isaac was born in 1880, and George, the youngest, is now five years of age. The family, while in the old country, were allied with the Church of England, but belong to no religious denomination at the present time. Mr. Meek, in politics, takes little more than a thinking part, except at election time, when he freely votes for the man of his choice. He is an ardent admirer of President Roosevelt, however, and will support him for another term, he says, if given the chance. He owns two hundred and eighty acres of farming land in the Kittitas valley, all well stocked and under cultivation. He has a dairy on his farm which is supplied with the milk of fifteen cows; he also has a small herd of cattle on the range. Among forage crops Mr. Meek has made a specialty of alfalfa, of which he has the finest field to be seen anywhere in the valley.

JOSEPH J. HANLON is a prosperous farmer residing near Ellensburg, on rural delivery route No. 1. He was born in Canada, May 17, 1866. His parents, John and Kate (Mallon) Hanlon, were both born in Ireland and later emigrated to Canada. His mother died while he was a small boy. As a boy, Joseph Hanlon attended the district schools of his native country, and when between twelve and thirteen years of age he went to Pretoria with his father, during the oil excitement in that place. In 1888 he returned to the United States and spent a short time in Rochester, New York. From there he went to Manitoba, Canada, and thence to Kittitas county, Washington, July, 1889. Here he purchased two hundred and sixty acres of land, which he has since lived upon and cultivated. He has four brothers, James, John, Thomas and Peter, and two sisters, Mary and Kate Hanlon; all of whom were born, and are now living, in Canada.

Mr. Hanlon was married February 4, 1894, to Miss Hattie Hatfield, then a resident of Ellensburg. She was born in Texas, July 27, 1878. While she was yet a young girl her father brought his family to Ellensburg, where she attended school until arriving at the age of sixteen, when she was married. Her father was Ephraim Hatfield, a native of Arkansas, and her mother was Kathren (Smith) Hatfield. She has two brothers and one sister: Charles and John Hatfield and Gertrude Barnett, all of whom were born in Texas and now live near Thorp, Washington. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hanlon are: John Oliver, Minnie L. and Ernest E. Hanlon, all living at home. They were born in this state, October 15, 1805, May 23, 1807, and March 29, 1809, respectively. Fraternally, Mr. Hanlon is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He was originally a Democrat, but is now an ardent supporter of President Roosevelt. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Hanlon at the present time has any church affiliation, although Mrs. Hanlon was brought up in the Baptist denomination. Mr. Hanlon's property interests consist, in the main, of two hundred and sixty acres of choice farm land, with the usual amount of stock found on an up-to-date farm. His crops are principally large quantities of hay, and he is rated as one of the substantial farmers of his county.

GEORGE ROBERT BRADSHAW. Since July 17, 1893, George Robert Bradshaw has been closely identified with the agricultural progress of the Kittitas valley. His farm lies on rural delivery route No. 1, and not far from the city of Ellensburg. Born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, he is the son of Benjamin W. and Mary J. (Larkin) Bradshaw, the former born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, January 4, 1844, and the latter in Virginia, December 18, 1846. The Bradshaws for at least three generations back have been born in the county of our subject's birth, where Benjamin W. Bradshaw's father still owns and conducts a farm and a country store. He has been a lifelong Republican, and a member of the Presbyterian church. Mrs. Bradshaw, mother of George Robert, was the daughter of a shipping merchant in Virginia. Her father, while accompanying a shipment of hogs from Bristol, Tennessee, to Baltimore, was caught beneath a railroad wreck and his lower limbs were horribly mangled. He was pinned beneath the wreckage for four hours, during which time he made his will. His daughter, upon being notified of the accident, mounted a horse and rode eighty miles to where Mr. Larkin lay, only to find him dead. She was educated in the state of Tennessee, and, with her husband, is now living in Wild Rose, in that state. George Robert Bradshaw up to his twelfth year attended the district school at the place of his birth, later spent four years in the academy at Churchill, and finished his education at Okolona College in Tennessee. At the age of twenty-one he left school and removed to Russell county, Kansas. But four months were spent here, however, when he decided to try his fortune in the state of Washington. He arrived in Ellensburg, July 17, 1893, and has been here ever since, with the exception of a five-months' visit to his old home in the east. Mr. Bradshaw has three sisters: Laura L. Hollenbeck, Lizzie Packwood and Elsie Paterson, all of whom are living near Ellensburg, save the last named, who lives at her father's home. All were born in Tennessee, in 1867, 1869 and 1878, respectively.

On January 12, 1898, near Ellensburg, Mr. Bradshaw was married to Miss Colorado Packwood, a native of Colorado Springs, Colorado. She was born June 4, 1874, and came to Ellensburg with her parents at an early age. She there received her education, and, at the age of sixteen, was married to W. S. Sewell, but the match proved to be not a happy one, so, after three years, the two were separated. During the next four years Mrs. Sewell lived with her parents, and then she became the wife of Mr. Bradshaw. Her father is Samuel T. Packwood, born in Missouri, July 4, 1844, and now a farmer in the vicinity of Ellensburg. He was a soldier in the Confederate army during the Civil war, and spent a year of his war service in the Little Rock military prison. Mrs. Bradshaw's mother, Martha F. (Holmes) Packwood, was born in Mississippi, 1845. At the age of nine years she removed with her parents to Missouri, where she obtained her education. She married Mr. Packwood at the age of nineteen years. Mrs. Bradshaw's brothers are: John R., Oliver F., William, Harry and Harvey Packwood. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Bradshaw are: Martha Farnetta, born near Ellensburg, November 18, 1892; Lizzie J., born near Ellensburg, October 18, 1899, and Lucreta T., born in Hawkins county, Tennessee, November 28, 1901.

Mr. Bradshaw belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America, and to the Republican party. He is active in politics. His wife is a member of the Church of Christ. He owns 400 acres of grazing land and 100 acres of land in cultivation. His specialty is the production of timothy and clover hay. He owns the handsome registered Percheron stallion Marquis, weighing nineteen hundred and fifty pounds—one of the finest draft horses in the valley.

PHILIP FREDERICK is engaged in farming his own lands five miles west and one mile north of the city of Ellensburg, rural free delivery route No. 1, Washington. He was born in Richardson county, Nebraska, January 8, 1869. His father, Henry Frederick, was born in Germany in 1835. He followed farming in Nebraska, served during the Civil war, in the Ohio National Guard, moved to Kittitas valley, Washington, in 1876 and died in 1877. His mother, Anna (Goulong) Frederick, was born in Ohio, July 26, 1840, and died at the age of fifty-seven years. Her son, Philip, was educated in the common schools of his native state and also those of Washington. Until fifteen years old he worked on his father's farm and later on other farms. In 1894 he bought eighty acres of land, which he has since farmed. He was married in Ellensburg, May 8, 1895, to Mrs. Rachel G. Adler, daughter of Jesse B. and Francis A. (Hall) Poynor. Her father was born in Missouri in 1837, crossed the Plains by ox team in 1850 and located in San Joaquin county, California, where he engaged in farming until his death, during November, 1875. Her mother was born in Greene county, Missouri, July 29, 1842, and was married at the age of sixteen. She died in Washington, April 28, 1901. Mrs. Frederick was born in San Joaquin county, California, May 15, 1867. She was educated in the Golden state and when nineteen years old moved to Washington with her aunt, Mrs. S. M. Prater. She was married August 11, 1886, to Joseph Adler, who died in 1891. By this union there were three children: Nettie A., born September 3, 1887; William H., born August 7, 1889, and Josie A. Adler, born August 5, 1891, all natives of Ellensburg. Mrs. Frederick had three brothers and two sisters. William Poynor and Martha J. (Poynor) Frederick are dead. Samuel H. Poynor lives in Seattle, Ritta E. (Poynor) Pease lives near Ellensburg, and Mathew A. Poynor lives in Tacoma.

Mr. Frederick's brothers and sisters are: Martin, born in Nebraska, December 13, 1864, now a resident of Kittitas county; Maggie (Frederick) Beck (deceased), born in Nebraska, March 20, 1869; Anthony, born in Nebraska, March 17, 1871, now living in Natchee, Yakima county, Washington; Mary (Frederick) Snipes, born September 11, 1874, a resident of Toppenish, Washington, and Jacob, born October 26, 1877, a resident of the Kittitas valley. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick have two daughters, Hazel M., born February 9, 1897, and Bertha V., born June 2, 1902. The parents are active members of the Methodist Episcopal church and Mrs. Frederick is third vice-president of the Epworth League. Mr. Frederick is a Republican and takes considerable interest in politics. He has an excellent farm of eighty acres, with about twenty head of cattle and nine milch cows and runs a dairy on a small scale. He is a prosperous and much esteemed citizen of this locality.

MARTIN FREDERICK has been engaged in farming in Kittitas county, Washington, since 1876. His home is near Ellensburg, Washington, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He was born in Nebraska, December 13, 1864, and came to Washington with his father and mother, Henry and Anna (Goulong) Frederick, when twelve years old. His father died the year after he took up his farm in Kittitas valley and Martin, as the eldest son, took charge of the farm. He ran the place for two years until his mother remarried and then until he was twenty-four years old, worked for other farmers. He purchased his present farm in 1889 and has since made his home on the property. His eldest sister, Maggie, is dead. Mary (Frederick) Snipes, the surviving sister, and his brothers, Philip, Anthony and Jacob, reside in Washington. Mr. Frederick was married November 18, 1888, to Miss Martha J. Poynor, who died December 9, 1891. He was again married, December 24, 1896, to Mrs. S. Francis Goss. Her father, Isaac O. Childs, was a native of Virginia and died in Nebraska in 1890. Her mother, Mary M. (Daniels) Childs, was born in Pennsylvania February 15, 1840, and was married when eighteen years old to Mr. Crane, by whom she had one child. A year after their marriage Mr. Crane went to the war and was never heard of again. She was later married to Mr. Childs, by whom she had six children. Mrs. Frederick was born in Nebraska March 20, 1872. In 1884 she came to Washington with her parents, by wagon, and after a year in this state returned with them to Nebraska, in like conveyance, making the return trip by way of California. She came to Ellensburg when eighteen years old and in 1891 was married to Edward F. Goss, from whom she separated after two years. Three years later she married her present husband.

Her brothers and sisters are: Ellen E. Daniels and Martha J. Abbot, of Pennsylvania; Amy A. Allison, of Kittitas valley; Dora I. Bailey, of Indiana; Warren G. Childs, of Idaho, and Hannah E. Stager, of Spokane. Her children are: Etta R. Goss, born December 7, 1891, and Jessie C. Frederick, born February 5, 1897. Mrs. Frederick is a member of the Christian church. Her husband is a member of Tanum lodge, No. 155, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and also a member of the Order of Washington. He is an active Republican and a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Frederick owns eighty acres of land, which he has brought under a high state of cultivation. He is a practical and experienced farmer and a valuable citizen.

HADDEN HAMTON SPIER, a Western product in the full sense of the term, lives six and one-half miles northwest of Ellensburg, Washington, on rural delivery route No. 1. He was born in Linn county, Oregon, June 1, 1877. His father, William S. Spier, was born in Tennessee in 1830, and was a farmer and miner. He died in 1882. Mr. Spier's mother, Hanna E. (Asher) Spier, was born at Marshalltown, Iowa, in 1853. When she was eleven years old she moved to Indiana and there at the age of seventeen she married Mr. Spier. Two years after his death she married Robert Wallis, who died in 1901. Mrs. Wallis lived continuously on one farm from 1880 to 1895.

Mr. Spier was educated in the common schools of Kittitas county until he was fourteen years old, living at his mother's home. Later he has been engaged at various kinds of work until he bought his present forty-acre farm on the Yakima river, where he has since resided.

His eldest sister, Carrie O., wife of John Lynn, lives at Rosa station, Kittitas county. His brother, William O. Spier, is the fireman at the power house at Roslyn, and his other brother, Frank Spier, is in Lane county, Oregon. A brother, O'Shea Spier, is dead. His sister, Minnie Hannen, lives at Cle-Elum. His half-sisters and half-brothers are: Anna Wallis, living at the family home; Robert Wallis, working in the Roslyn mines with his brother, Claud Wallis, and Ella Wallis, born in 1891, who is living at home.

Mr. Spier is an active Republican. He was raised in the Baptist faith. He raises some stock. The chief product of his farm is hay. Mr. Spier has a wide circle of friends and is one of the most popular and energetic farmers of the valley.

CARY A. SNYDER is engaged in farming near Ellensburg, Washington, on rural delivery route No. 1. He was born in Illinois May 24, 1858. His father was Andrew Snyder, a farmer, who was born in West Virginia in 1824. His mother, Manervia (Edie) Snyder, was born in Ohio in 1827 and passed away at Olympia, Washington, January 5, 1889. The subject of this sketch was one of a family of six children. His sister, Sarah S., born in Ohio in 1850, is dead. Benjamin F. was born in Ohio, August 17, 1851. Joseph H. Snyder was born in Illinois, June 4, 1856, and is living on Puget Sound. Fred A. Snyder was born in Illinois, October 11, 1863, and lives at Whatcom, Washington. Louis A. Snyder, the youngest brother, was born in Nebraska, July 23, 1869, and lives at Olympia, Washington.

Mr. Snyder received his first education in the common schools of his native state. When he was eleven years old his parents moved to Nebraska, where he went to school in the winter months and worked on his father's farm and for other farmers. In 1882 he left Nebraska and went to the coast, where he secured work in a logging camp near Olympia. After one year he came to Kittitas county and for the succeeding four years was employed on the J. H. Stevens' ranch. Then he bought land and started to farming on his own account.

He was married April 3, 1887, to Florence M. Stevens, who was then sixteen years old. She was the daughter of James H. and Mary C. (Rego) Stevens. Her father was born in Pennsylvania in 1842, and was a soldier in the Civil war. Her mother was born in Indiana, October 28, 1850, and became a bride when twenty years old. Her brother and sister are: Robert H. Stevens, born February 23, 1876; Nellie I. Stevens, born October 19, 1886, both natives of Washington and living near Ellensburg.

Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have five children: Elsie L., born June 26, 1888; Arthur E., December 27, 1890; Walter L., February 8, 1895; Kathleen, November 9, 1896, and Dorothy H., November 3, 1897. Mrs. Snyder belongs to the Christian church. Mr. Snyder has passed through all the chairs in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows and his wife has filled all the chairs in the Rebekahs. He also belongs to the camp of the Modern Woodmen of America. He is an active member of the Republican party. Mr. Snyder is a thrifty and energetic farmer. To his original farm of eighty acres he has added thirty acres and has a place that is under a high state of cultivation. He is also the owner of fourteen and three-fifths shares in the West Side irrigation ditch and is rapidly increasing his property interests.

MERTON L. THOMAS is engaged in farming, three miles west, and a like distance north, of Ellensburg, Washington. Like his father and mother, Loring and Juletta (Adams) Thomas, he is a native of the state of New York, born July 11, 1862. His father was born in 1820, and his mother, who is still living, is six years younger. Her son Merton spent his boyhood days in Minnesota and Iowa, where he was educated. He worked on his father's farm and also for other farmers nearby. In 1891 he drove overland from Iowa to Kittitas county, Washington, and the next summer engaged in farming a rented place. He spent one summer teaming in Okanogan county. June 5, 1903, he took charge of the county poor farm and still retains that position. His brothers and sisters, Mrs. Lodema R. Andrews, George A., John W., Mrs. Etta M. Francis and Mrs. Nellie A. Hewer, all reside in Kittitas county.

Mr. Thomas was married October 29, 1902, to Miss Nellie English, who was born in Stockton, Kansas, February 7, 1885, and was educated in the common and high schools at Ellensburg. Her father was Albert English, a native of New York. Her mother, Sarah J. (Nelson) English, was born in Missouri in 1868 and died in 1894. Mrs. Thomas has one sister, Eva Ethel English, born in Colorado and now living in Washington.

Mr. Thomas is an industrious and successful farmer and good citizen, and is esteemed by his neighbors and acquaintances for his many good qualities. In politics, he is an earnest supporter of President Roosevelt. He is a member of the Christian church and a progressive farmer, of modern ideas.

JOHN LINCOLN GREEN, engaged in farming near Ellensburg, Washington, is a stonemason by trade. He was born in Owen county, Indiana, June 27, 1860. His father, John William Green, was born in Indiana, February 22, 1832, and served with distinction during the Civil war. He was confined in Libby prison for a time, having been captured by the Confederates. Mr. Green's mother, Elizabeth E. (Gregory) Green, was born in North Carolina, October 10, 1821, and was married January 31, 1850. She died in Kansas in 1887. Her son was educated in Indiana, Illinois and Kansas, and in the latter state worked for various people until he was twenty-two years old, then began trading in stock. He left Kansas in 1888 and drove a span of mules from there to Kittitas county, Washington, where he bought the eighty acres of land he now owns. The first winter in the west was spent in the coal mines, and since that time he has been living on his farm. His brother, Joseph William Green, and his sister, Mrs. Margaret E. De Schager, are now deceased. Richard E., born April 26, 1852, and James F. Green, born in Indiana, November 24, 1857, are surviving brothers and reside in Douglas county, Illinois.

He was married in Ellensburg, June 12, 1890, to Miss Dora M. Adams, daughter of Jesse and Mary S. (Ellison) Adams. Her father was an Illinois farmer and her mother a native of Missouri; both reside in Ellensburg. Mrs. Green was born April 2, 1874, in Baxter Springs, Kansas, and was nine years old when she came to Washington with her parents. She was educated in the schools of the Evergreen state, and was sixteen years old at the time of her marriage. She has one sister, Mrs. Icca Fullen, living in Ellensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Green have five children now living: Mary Ellen, born January 12, 1891; Jesse William, born October 26, 1892; Ray D., born November 17, 1895; John D., born December 22, 1897, and Dora L., born November 27, 1899. A daughter, Elizabeth, born December 16, 1894, died January 5, 1895, and Mrs. Green passed away March 13, 1901.

Mr. Green is a prominent member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is active in politics and a member of the Republican party. He attends the Baptist church. His holdings include eighty acres of fine farming lands and a number of head of cattle and horses. He is making a specialty of raising English coach horses. He is well known, and a highly respected member of the community.

ARTHUR F. CURRIER is a native of Boston, Massachusetts, born February 19, 1857. He lives on his well-improved farm, situated about two and one-half miles west of Ellensburg, Washington. His father, Gideon Currier, was born in Maine, April 6, 1817, and removed to Boston when he was eighteen years old, and there learned the trade of a stonemason. He subsequently became one of the leading contractors of Boston, and erected some of the finest buildings in the city. Mr. Currier's mother, Jane (Safford) Currier, was born in New York state, May 23, 1819. She died in 1895, after fifty-five years of married life. Her other children, beside Arthur, are: Francis E., born March 18, 1842, now living in Brooklyn, New York; Alfred H., born February 6, 1846, now living in Boston, and Anson H., born August 7, 1854, now of Nashville, Oregon. The children were all born in Boston. Mr. Currier attended the public schools of Boston and graduated from the high school. He worked for four years for the Little Rock & Fort Smith Railway Company, in Arkansas, after his graduation, and in 1883 was married to Miss Leora Brumfield, who was born in Cleveland, Ohio, September 2, 1861. Her father, Erastus Brumfield, was born in New York September 28, 1820, and died when she was twelve years old. Her mother, Amy (Brockway) Brumfield, was also born in New York, April 4, 1822, and is now a resident of Kittitas county.

After his marriage, Mr. Currier went to San Diego, California, and engaged in fruit raising for four and one-half years. In 1888 he moved to Ellensburg and bought a farm ten miles north of the city. He made that his home for ten years, then sold it and purchased his present place. Mr. and Mrs. Currier have three children. The eldest child, Emma J., was born in San Diego, December 7, 1885, and is now attending the Ellensburg high school. Florence was also born there on August 26, 1887. Velma A., the youngest child, was born in Washington, August 12, 1890. Mr. Currier is one of the leading citizens of the county and very popular. Politically, he is a Republican. He and his wife belong to the Baptist church.

JESSE C. POLAND is engaged in farming his well-improved ranch, situated about one mile northwest of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Montgomery county, Illinois, July 20, 1876. His father, George C. Poland, was born in Illinois February 10, 1844, was a farmer and served three years in the Civil war. He died March 25, 1901. His mother, Ruth C. (Barringer) Poland, was likewise born in Illinois, December 27, 1849, and is now a resident of Ellensburg. Her son came to Washington with his parents when he was six years old. They located near Ellensburg, where he attended the public school and the high school and worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years old. He then began farming his own land and has continued to do so with great success. His brothers and sisters are: Clarence E., born in Illinois, October 19, 1869, now a resident of Ellensburg; Cortus O., born in Illinois, March 14, 1871, now a resident of Puyallup, Washington, and Mrs. Clara J. Litterer, born in Illinois, March 12, 1873, and also a resident of Ellensburg.

In Ellensburg, March 24, 1901, Mr. Poland was married to Miss Cora C. Grim, daughter of William and Anna (Bailes) Grim. Her father was born in Ohio, March 7, 1840, and is engaged in farming five miles east of Ellensburg. Her mother was born in Missouri, October 19, 1852. Mrs. Poland was born in Ellensburg, July 23, 1882, and was educated in the schools of Kittitas county. She was one of ten children. Her sisters, Jane, Ida and Dora E., are dead. The surviving children are: Jacob A., born September 19, 1872; Bird O., born May 20, 1877; Ivy A., born July 1, 1878; Minnie G. Walker, born November 11, 1880; William Harry, born March 1, 1885, and John E. Grim, born May 30, 1887, all living near Ellensburg. Mr. and Mrs. Poland have two children: Arthur M., born January 17, 1902, and Elmer E., born October 30, 1903. Their home place consists of one hundred and twenty acres of fine land. Much of the place has been seeded to timothy and clover.

CHARLES HERBY WILSON lives on his farm two miles west, and about a quarter of a mile north, of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Ohio, August 1, 1866, being the son of Charles and Angie (Teppie) Wilson. His father was an Ohio farmer and died in that state. His mother lives in Ellensburg. The family moved to Missouri when he was a small boy, and after residing there five years crossed the Plains in 1874 by wagon and located in the Willamette valley, Oregon. He lived there one year, and passed a year in Pendleton, then went to the Kittitas valley. In 1884 he engaged in freighting out of The Dalles, Oregon, which he followed for nine years. He then rented a farm two years, and in 1895 filed a homestead on his present farm. His brothers and sisters are: Ira, of Kittitas county; Grant, of Roslyn, Washington; Mrs. L. C. Preston (deceased); Mrs. Tillie Stout, of Colfax; Herman, of Roslyn; Ernest, of Ellensburg, and John S., of the Kittitas valley, Washington.

Mr. Wilson was married June 10, 1886, to Miss Mary Marsdon, who was born in England, May 12, 1866, and educated in private schools in her native land. She came to Ellensburg at the age of sixteen and married two years later. Her father, Peter Marsdon, a native of Scotland, and her mother, Debron (Jolly) Marsdon, born in England, died when she was a young girl. She has two brothers, John and Thomas, both in England. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson have one child, Phoebe Jane, born December 30, 1897. The family are members of the Church of England. The husband is a Republican and fraternally, is a member of the Woodmen of the World. He has one hundred and sixty acres of well improved land, one hundred and eighty head of cattle, mostly high grade Durham stock, and plenty of horses. He is a prosperous farmer and a man of pleasant address and esteemed by all.

JOHN S. WILSON was born in Oregon, January 13, 1881, and lives at Ellensburg, Washington. He is the son of Charles and Angie (Teppie) Wilson. His father, an Ohio farmer, is dead; the mother lives at Ellensburg. One of the children, L. C. (Wilson) Preston, is dead. The surviving brothers and sister are: Ira, Grant, Herman, Ernest and Charles H. Wilson, all residents of Washington, and Tillie (Wilson) Stout, of Colfax, Washington.

Mr. Wilson was educated in Kittitas county and has earned his own living since he was twelve years old. He has at times farmed and worked in the mines, and for about a year has been engaged in teaming. He was married June 15, 1903, to Mrs. Myrtle Pountain, whose maiden name was Jones. Her father is engaged in farming near Ellensburg. Mrs. Wilson was born in Missouri, November 23, 1879, and came to Ellensburg with her parents when she was an infant, and was educated there. She had two children by her first husband: Roy Pountain, born in November, 1896, and Melvin Pountain, born in 1898. Her brothers, Charles, Oray and Lloyd Jones, live in Ellensburg, which is also the residence of her sister, Gertrude. Mr. Wilson is a member of the Democratic party. He has a nice bunch of cattle in addition to his well-equipped teaming outfit of hacks and horses. By strict attention to business and courteous treatment of all patrons he is winning enviable success.

WILLIAM JONAS, one of Kittitas county's successful farmers, lives two miles north and a mile and a quarter east of Ellensburg, Washington. His father, Hubert Jonas, was born in Germany, in 1814, and came to the United States when thirty-six years old, and farmed in Michigan, Nebraska and Washington. His mother, Katherine (Shoemaker) Jonas, was born in Germany, in 1815, and died in America, in 1880. Their other sons are: Frank, who lives in Spokane county, and Joseph, a resident of Thorp, Washington.

Mr. Jonas, of this article, was educated in the schools of Michigan, and followed farming in that state until he was twenty-seven. Then he operated a farm in Nebraska for five years and, beginning in 1885, he was engaged in railroad work for one year. In 1886 he came to Washington and took up one hundred and twenty acres as a homestead, and later bought one hundred and sixty acres, which he has since farmed. He was married in Nebraska in March, 1879, to Emma Schnier, who was born in Germany in 1855. She is now deceased. The children which survive her are: Anna, born August 15, 1881; Hubert, born November 13, 1883; Lizzie, born April 15, 1885; Katie, born May 29, 1887; William F., born July 13, 1890; Emma J., born June 11, 1892; George, born March 8, 1898, all of whom are living at home.

Mr. Jonas is a member of the Catholic church. He takes an active interest in political affairs, affiliating with the Democratic party. His holdings consist of two hundred and eighty acres of land, which he farms admirably, forty-five head of cattle and five head of horses. He devotes about twenty acres to clover, the rest of his cultivated land to grain.

WILLIAM W. SPURLING, engaged in farming on his place two miles north and one mile west of Ellensburg, Washington, was born in Marion county, Iowa, January 17, 1851. His father, Noah Spurling, a farmer, died when the son was three years old. The mother, Emeline (Higgins) Spurling, married again, but died when William was ten years old. He lived with his stepfather until he was eighteen, attending the common schools of Iowa, then engaged in farming with his brother-in-law, until he was twenty-one. He then ran his own farm for nine years, and in the fall of 1880 moved to Oregon and spent one winter in Weston. In 1881 he moved to Kittitas county and worked for the Standard Mill Company, that fall taking up a pre-emption claim, which he later commuted. This land is his present home. His sisters are: Mary Jane Myers, Laura M. Davis and Louisa M. Thorp, all natives of Indiana. The two first named live in Iowa and the latter in Oklahoma. A half-brother, George W. Kee, lives in Colorado.

Mr. Spurling was married July 31, 1873, to Miss Amanda Stephens, daughter of C. and Sarah J. (Riddlen) Stephens. Her brothers and sisters are: Elizabeth Chambers, of Iowa; William, of Iowa; Virgil A., of Oregon; George W., of Iowa; Mary Jane Myers, of Iowa; Green Stephens, of Iowa; Martha De Vore, of Oregon; Nancy E. Rose, of Iowa, and Ada Jones, also of Iowa. Mrs. Spurling was born in Iowa, February 9, 1853, and was educated in that state. Mr. and Mrs. Spurling have eight children: Virgil A., born in Iowa, June 25, 1874, and now engaged in the lumber business on Puget Sound; Mrs. Lola J. Poland, born in Iowa, September 28, 1874, lives in Puyallup; Cecil E., born in Oregon, January 28, 1881; Seth L., born in Kittitas county, July 15, 1883; Ada E., born February 11, 1885, now taking the normal course in Ellensburg; Grover A., born February 13, 1888, and Amanda A., born December 25, 1891. Mr. Spurling is an active member of the Democratic party. On his present farm of two hundred acres he has fifty-five head of cattle, mostly Durhams, of which breed he makes a specialty; fifteen horses and other live stock. He is an energetic and successful farmer and deserves the prosperity which has come to him.

HOWARD EBERT, a successful farmer one and one-half miles west, and five miles north, of Ellensburg, Washington, was born in the state of Pennsylvania, March 7, 1839. His father, Philip Ebert, was a Pennsylvania farmer. His mother, Mary A. (Slaybaugh) Ebert, died in Illinois, to which state the family moved when Howard was eleven years old. He was educated there during the seven years residence of his family. In 1858 he went to Missouri for a year. In the spring of 1859 he started across the Plains with ten other men, in charge of the Cook and Miller drove of six hundred cattle. They arrived on the Carson river after a trip of about four months, and he there went to work in the mines. He later visited San Francisco, and went to Mendocino county, where he became the owner, for the first time, of cattle and horses. He remained in California until 1863, when he moved to Oregon. He was in the produce business, and during the war he was a member of the First Oregon infantry. He took up a homestead in Benton county, and lived there twenty years. In 1884 he moved to Kittitas county, took up a timber culture claim, and bought railroad land. His brothers and sisters are: William, of Kansas City; Daniel, of Illinois; Mrs. Sophia Goldsberry, of Illinois, and Mrs. Jane S. Long, of Iowa.

Mr. Ebert was married, in Oregon, to Miss Elizabeth Johnson, who died in 1873. He later married Miss Jane Porter, daughter of Andrew Jackson and Elizabeth (Lee) Porter, both of whom are dead. Mrs. Ebert's brothers and sisters are: James T., of Oregon; Florence Hale, of Michigan; Elizabeth Dunn, of Oregon; Alva Chapman, of Oregon, and Rose Price, likewise of Oregon. Mrs. Ebert was born in Ohio, April 18, 1855, and crossed the Plains with her parents when very young. To the first marriage were born two children, Ernest, born May 5, 1865, and Marcus D., born June 3, 1872. By the second marriage there were five children: Varena J., born November 15, 1874; George A., born July 15, 1877; James T., born May 18, 1879; Amy Ann, born December 9, 1889, and Josie M., born October 27, 1891. Mr. Ebert is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He attends the Christian church. He is an active member of the Republican party. He now has four hundred acres of land and twenty-one head of horses. When it is remembered that at a time when he was but twelve years old he began breaking sod with an ox team, it is not strange that his ability as a successful farmer should be generally recognized.

PARISH A. DICKEY, a well-to-do farmer, living seven and one-half miles north of Ellensburg, Washington, was born in Fayette county, Indiana, February 8, 1830. His father, John Dickey, was a Kentucky farmer, who moved later to Indiana, where he died in 1855. His mother, Susan (Parish) Dickey, was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, and died in Indiana at the age of forty-five years. They had nine children, including Parish A., as follows: Robert, Mrs. Sarah Ward, John, Benjamin, James, Mrs. Dorcas Smiley, Mrs. Nancy Johnson and Oliver. Mr. Dickey was married in Fayette county, Indiana, November 2, 1854, to Miss Rebecca Remington, daughter of Martillo and Anna (Lyons) Remington. Her father was a blacksmith and carpenter in New York, and crossed the Plains to California in 1855, where he later died. Her mother passed away at the age of sixty in Indiana. Mrs. Dickey was born June 6, 1838, in Indiana, where she was educated. She is one of a family of twelve children, all of whom are now deceased with the exception of her brother, Moses, and herself. The brother still lives in Indiana, and is a man of public affairs, having served two terms in the state legislature. Mr. Dickey was educated in the schools of Indiana, and worked on his father's farm until twenty-four years old. Later he engaged in farming in various parts of his native state, until March, 1886, when he moved to Washington and took up as a homestead the land upon which he now resides. Mr. and Mrs. Dickey have seven children, as follows: Mrs. Ollie Birdsall, of Chicago; Mrs. Lucy M. Horney (deceased), born July 16, 1857; Henry D., born May 3, 1860, in Richmond, Indiana; Edward V., born February 12, 1870, at home; Mrs. Mary Phillips, born April 7, 1872, now residing in Harrison, Idaho; Mrs. Mattie M. Hubbard, born July 3, 1873, at home, and Maurice W., born February 18, 1883. Mr. Dickey was raised under strict church influences, his parents being members of the Presbyterian church. He is a pronounced Democrat politically, and takes an active part in the councils of his party. He is an up-to-date farmer and has one of the best places in the valley, a splendid orchard of choice fruits being one of the attractions of his well-appointed place.

THOMAS SWANN is engaged in farming three and one-half miles north, and one-half mile west, of the city of Ellensburg, Washington. He is a native of Nova Scotia, having been born in Colchester county, May 16, 1854. His father, James Swann, was a native of Scotland, born in 1812, and is deceased. His mother, Elizabeth (Graham) Swann, was a native of Nova Scotia, and died in Olympia, Washington, December 30, 1890. Her son was educated in his native land, and until he was twenty-one worked in his father's sawmill and on the parental homestead. He came to the United States in the spring of 1875, locating in Providence, Rhode Island. After six months, he went by rail to Sacramento, California, and from there to San Francisco, by steamer; thence to Port Townsend, Washington. He then worked two years in the Port Discovery sawmills and later spent nine months logging in Thurston county. In the spring of 1880, he drove logs in the Yakima river, then returned to the Sound and bought a ranch at the head of Mud bay, where he logged and farmed nearly eighteen years. In the summer of 1898 he returned to the Kittitas valley and took up as a homestead the land he now occupies. His eldest sister, Mrs. Mary S. McIntosh, and another sister, Margaret, are now deceased. The surviving brothers and sisters are: George G., living on the Sound; Robert, of this state; Mrs. Eliza J. Vincent, of Nova Scotia; Mrs. Jeanette J. Azels, of Berkeley, California, and Daniel C., of Palouse City, Washington.

Mr. Swann was married January 4, 1881, to Miss Margaret Ann Forbes, who died November 18, 1883. November 8, 1884, he married Miss Minnie L. McLane, and was divorced in 1892. February 12, 1900, he was married to Mrs. Adda (Hodges) Forbes. Her father and mother, William and Nancy (Dunlap) Young, are both dead. Mrs. Swann was born in Oregon, February 14, 1846, was educated in that state and in Washington, and is a graduate of the Olympia high school. After teaching school one year, she was married at the age of fifteen, to John Forbes. Her half-brothers are Mortimer, William and James Hodges. Mr. Swann has one child by his first wife, now Mrs. Audrey L. Sisk, born April 1, 1882, and now living in Kittitas county. By his second marriage he has the following children: Ruby V., born December 26, 1885; Martha P. (deceased); Torance M., born February 8, 1888, and James W., born March 9, 1889. Mr. Swann is an ardent supporter of President Roosevelt, and is a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. He has one hundred and sixty acres in the home place, which is well improved. He also owns a twelve-room house and two lots in Olympia. He is well liked in the community and is prominent in all matters tending to the upbuilding of the Kittitas valley.

CHARLES W. JONES lives on a farm eight and one-half miles northwest of Ellensburg. He was born in Clinton county, Illinois, December 30, 1861, and is the son of Charles L. and Elvira (Quick) Jones, both of whom are at the present time living on a farm four miles west of Centralia, Clinton county, Illinois.

Charles L. Jones was born in Virginia in 1829, and came to Illinois as a pioneer. He secured ownership of a large tract of land, on a part of which he and his wife make their home. Mrs. Jones, the subject's mother, is a native of Ohio, born in 1871.

Charles W. Jones received his education in a common country school of his native state, and worked on his father's farm until arriving at the age of twenty, when he was married to Martha J. Maxey, February 12, 1880. After his marriage he farmed on his own account, in Illinois, for a brief period, then, in 1884, came to the Kittitas valley and bought a relinquishment on a hundred and sixty acre homestead. He immediately began improving his land, and in the allotted time made final proof upon it. He now has it, for the most part, in grain.

He has one brother and two sisters living, Edward M., Mrs. Eliza L. Garretson and Mrs. W. Atwood Gerry. They were born respectively, in 1870, 1862, 1868, and are all living on or near the old home, in the state of their birth.

His wife was the daughter of Henry N. and Nancy J. (Downs) Maxey. Henry N. Maxey was born in Illinois in 1827. He was an old soldier in the Civil war. He enlisted in 1865, in Company G, Forty-ninth regiment, and served until the close of the war. He then returned to Illinois and continued farming. He came to Kittitas in 1884, where he lived until his death, in 1894. Mrs. Maxey is now living at Ellensburg.

Mrs. Martha Jones was born in Illinois in 1859. She, too, was educated in the Illinois common schools. Her brothers and sisters are: Thomas M., William N. and James H. Maxey, and Alma Watts, all natives of Illinois. Two brothers are living in Kittitas valley and Mrs. Watts and James are still in the state of their birth.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Jones are: Thomas L., Inez, Ira S. and N. Evaline. The dates of their births are: 1883, 1888, 1890, 1893, respectively. All are living at home, and with the exception of the first named, who was born in Illinois, all are natives of Washington.

Mr. Jones is an active worker in the Democratic party and is wide-awake in all enterprises launched for the benefit and upbuilding of his community. With a fine farm, stocked with herds of well-bred cattle and horses, an enviable reputation as a neighbor and business man, Charles W. Jones is universally rated as a substantial and valuable citizen in his community.

ALEXANDER MADDUX. Alexander Maddux, a prosperous farmer whose home is nine miles northwest of Ellensburg, was born in Washington county, Illinois, December 25, 1852. His father was Benjamin Maddux, a native of Georgia and of Irish-German parentage. He removed with his father to Illinois when a boy of ten years. Subject's mother was Malinda (Smith) Maddux, a native of Illinois. She passed away when he was a babe of three weeks. As a boy, Alexander attended the common schools until seventeen years of age. His father died and left him an orphan in his seventh year, and from that time until he was eleven he was given a home with his uncle. From his eleventh to his seventeenth year he worked in different places for his board and schooling. After leaving school he worked out by the month until he arrived at his majority, when he began farming independently. In 1879 he went to Vernon county, Missouri, where he followed agricultural pursuits for some twelve years. In 1891 he came to the Kittitas valley and took up a forty acre farm, to which he has since added eighty acres, which comprise his present real estate holdings. He has one brother, George, born in Illinois, 1851, and now residing in Missouri.

In Vernon county, Missouri, January 7, 1885, Mr. Maddux was married to Miss Mary E. Trimble, born in Kentucky in 1859. She is the daughter of David F. Trimble, a Kentuckian by birth and a farmer and veteran of the Civil war. Mrs. Trimble, whose maiden name was Fox, was born in Kentucky, and is now living in Virginia.

Mrs. Maddux has brothers and sisters, as follows: John H. Trimble, living in Indiana; George W., deceased; Marion, Frank and Leander, of West Virginia; Mrs. Emily J. Knox, of Nebraska, and Mrs. Sarah A. Stamper, a resident of Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Maddux have one daughter, Ruby P., born November 16, 1895. Mr. and Mrs. Maddux both affiliate with the Free Methodist church; the husband is an active worker in the Republican party. Few men have been thrown against the sharp corners of life harder and more roughly handled by Fate than has Alexander Maddux, and equally few have overcome besetting obstacles and borne reverses with greater fortitude and bravery than has he. Being left an orphan at a critical period in life, he was compelled to work out the problem of success practically alone and unaided, and he may justly feel proud of his achievements, since he now has a comfortable and happy home, and is regarded by the world at large as a trustworthy and honorable man.

WILLIAM B. LASSWELL, living on his farm near Ellensburg, was born in California, March 16, 1861, the son of William and Ellen (Williams) Lasswell, the former of English descent, the latter a native of Scotland. William Lasswell was born in Illinois in 1833, and at an early age removed with his parents to Indiana. In 1852 he came to California in a wagon drawn by oxen, and has lived in that state since. Mrs. Lasswell, our subject's mother, came from Scotland to Ohio during her first year, remained there until grown to womanhood, then came to California, where she is now living. Her son, William B., attended the common schools of his native state until fourteen years of age, and then began driving a four-horse express wagon over the mountain roads. He followed this vocation until in his sixteenth year, when he went to Contra Costa county, California, remaining there three years. In the spring of 1880 he came to Ellensburg and worked on various farms for five years, during which time he filed a pre-emption on a piece of land, upon which he later made final proof. He disposed of his claim to good advantage, rented land, and followed the cattle business two years. He purchased his present farm in 1899, and has constantly improved it since that time until he now has it in a high state of cultivation. He has four brothers and four sisters; Anna, Carrie, Robert, Ida, George, Alice, Edward and Albert, all of whom were born in California, and, with the exception of Anna and George, who have passed away, are still living in their native state.

Mr. Lasswell was married in Ellensburg, October 8, 1886, to Miss Nancy Garrison, who was born in Chehalis, Washington, June 29, 1870. She received her early education in the town of her birth, and came to Kittitas county at the age of thirteen years. Her father, Calvin Garrison, is a native of Oregon, and is now living in Centralia, Washington. Her mother is Pollie (Phelps) Garrison, born in Iowa, and is now living with her husband in Centralia. Mrs. Lasswell's brothers and sisters are: Hurley, living in British Columbia; Albert, British Columbia; Lillian Huntington, Washington; William G., Washington; Subenia English, British Columbia; May Huntington, California; Frank, British Columbia; Joseph, Centralia, Washington, and Myrtle Garrison, living in Centralia. All were born in the state of Washington. One brother, George, born in Washington, is now deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Lasswell have three children: Pearl, born January 27, 1889; Mabel, born September 7, 1895, and Minnie, born April 16, 1899.

All were born in the Kittitas valley. Besides these, five children have died. Their names and dates of birth were: Lillie, July 29, 1887; Ewing, January 27, 1889; Maud, September 6, 1893; Lottie, October 7, 1894, and Della, September 6, 1902.

The father of the family is, fraternally, a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and the A. O. U. W. Politically, he is a Republican. Both he and his wife are members of the M. E. church. Mr. Lasswell owns eighty acres of choice land, forty head of cattle and a sufficient number of horses with which to successfully cultivate his land. He makes a specialty of dairying and is operating a modern and well appointed dairy on his ranch. He is an enthusiast in matters pertaining to education and for the past three years has been a member of his local school board. He is counted a trustworthy and valuable citizen of his county.

BENARD HANSON, born in Norway, October 10, 1844, is now a farmer residing on an extensive tract of land near Ellensburg. His father, Charley Hanson, a farmer, lived and died in Norway, the country of his birth. Our subject's mother was Bertha (Béran) Hanson, also born in Norway. Benard Hanson left home at the tender age of eight and worked for his board and clothing until fourteen, when he adopted the life of a sailor. He followed the sea, covering the greater part of the globe, until October 5, 1867, when he landed at San Francisco, and went to work in the state of California. He remained there for ten years, then came to the Kittitas valley and worked among the mills thereabouts for five years. In the meantime he had filed a timber claim, and later purchased 437 acres of railroad land. On this tract he made his present home. He has his land in a high state of cultivation, a select orchard, forty acres of alfalfa and twenty-five acres of timothy. The remainder of his land is in grain and native grass. His brothers and sisters are: Hans, Ole, John, Bardenes, Brendler and Agnes. All were born in Norway and are still living in that country. Besides these, two brothers, Charles and Jacob, are dead.

Mr. Hanson was married in the Kittitas valley, December 25, 1882, to Miss Sophia Bell Jones, born in California, November 20, 1865. Her early girlhood was spent in school in her native state, when, at the age of thirteen, she came to the Kittitas valley with her parents, where she finished her education. At the age of eighteen she was married to Mr. Hanson. Her father is John B. and her mother Martha L. (Brown) Jones; the former born in Kentucky and the latter in Illinois. Mr. Jones was born in 1838, was a farmer and came to this state in 1877. He is now living on Wilson creek, five miles from Ellensburg. Mrs. Jones crossed the Plains to California in an early day. Her father was a Canadian, and lived in California for a number of years. Mrs. Hanson's brothers and sisters are: Mary F. Coble, California, born in 1804; Mattie R. Waycott, born in California in 1867, now of Washington; Narcissus Needham, born in California in 1870, now of Washington; Johnie, born in California in 1872, living in Washington; Henrietta Washburn, born in Washington in 1878 and still a resident of Washington; Water, born in Washington in 1882, living on Wilson creek, and Alpha Fetters, born in Washington in 1884, and still living in this state. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Hanson are: Bertha Taylor, born in Kittitas county, 1883, now living in the valley; John Henry, Kittitas county, 1886, at home; Martha E., Kittitas county, 1888, at home; Jacob W., Washington, 1891, at home; Mary F., Kittitas county, 1893, at home; Ora Bell Hanson, Kittitas county, 1895, at home; Charles Richard, Kittitas county, 1897, at home; Narcissa, Kittitas county, 1899, at home, and Theodore R., born in the Kittitas valley, 1902, and now living with his parents. Mr. Hanson is a Republican, and both he and his wife are members of the Lutheran church. He has a good farm and a large number of cattle, horses and hogs. He is a well-to-do and a good citizen, held in high esteem by his neighbors.

MARCUS M. CAHOON. Marcus M. Cahoon was born in Benton county, Oregon, August 29, 1849, and now lives on a farm nine miles northwest of Ellensburg. His father was Mark Cahoon, born in Virginia, November 16, 1810. He, too, was a farmer, and removed from his native state to Ohio, thence to Indiana, and later to Missouri. During 1847 he came to Oregon in the capacity of captain of a wagon train, having in line one hundred and fifty wagons. In 1858 he went to Jackson county, Oregon, and in the spring of 1860 went to Yolo county, California, and from that state, in 1865, came to Lewis county, Washington Territory. In 1877 he removed to Yakima county, and in the spring of 1878 he came to the Kittitas valley, where he died in 1890. He was of Irish descent. Our subject's mother, Ann (Modie) Cahoon, was born in Ohio, of Scotch and German parents, and died May, 1852. The first eleven years of Marcus M. Cahoon's life were spent in school in Oregon, in Benton and Jackson counties. In 1860 the family removed to Yolo county, California, and thence, August 8, 1865, to Lewis county, Washington, and engaged in farming. November, 1877, Marcus left Lewis county and came to Yakima county. In the spring of 1878 he removed to the Kittitas valley, and in May pre-empted a quarter section of land, which he later homesteaded. He has been improving this land ever since, and now has the major portion of it in cultivation. His brothers and sisters are: Adaline E. Simmons, born in Missouri, 1837, now of North Yakima; Jenette Ford, Liddie A. Ford, Cynthe J. Hawkins, and J. W. Cahoon, of Ellensburg, all born in Missouri, and only the first and last named are now living.

In Lewis county, Washington, December 6, 1875, Mr. Cahoon was married to Miss Emma Barton, daughter of Jackson and Belinda (Calvert) Barton, the former a native of Ohio, born in 1824, and the latter of Pennsylvania, born in 1833. Mrs. Barton died in 1873. Jackson Barton was a farmer who crossed the Plains in 1853 and settled in Lewis county, Washington, where he still lives. Here Mrs. Cahoon was born, December 6, 1857, and was educated in the common schools of her native county. She was married in her eighteenth year. Her brothers and sisters are: Effie Kieth, born September 6, 1864; Grant, June 14, 1867; Alvin, February 13, 1870; Clinton, October 17, 1874; Mary Sidel, born in Missouri, July 16, 1851; Clark, born in Umatilla county, Oregon, en route from Missouri, July 24, 1853; Amelia Davis, July 4, 1855; Harvey, January 7, 1860, and Ella Harrison, June 13, 1862. They were all born in Lewis county, Washington, with the exception of Mary and Clark, and all but Clark, Harvey and Alvin, who are now deceased, reside in the Evergreen state.

The children of Mr. and Mrs. Cahoon are: Clinton M., born in Yakima county, January 3, 1878; Effie A. Moen, born in Kittitas county, September 5, 1882; Marcus E. and Nora E., both born in Kittitas county, June 22, 1884, and February 19, 1886, respectively. The children all live in the vicinity of Ellensburg. Mr. Cahoon has, besides his land, forty head of cattle, and a sufficient number of horses, implements, etc., to successfully cultivate his farm. He is an active worker in the ranks of the Republican party, is a foremost leader in all movements put on foot for the betterment of surrounding conditions, and is universally respected and regarded as an industrious and conscientious citizen.

SIMEON EVANS. Originally from Ozark county, Missouri, born March 9, 1853, Simeon Evans is now a prosperous farmer residing twelve miles north, and four west, of Ellensburg. His parents are Jesse and Bertema (Welch) Evans, the former a farmer, born in Indiana, 1815, coming from one of the early pioneer families of that state. Simeon received his early education in the common schools of his native state, and at the age of nineteen launched out upon an independent career to make his own way in the world. His father, as a result of the Civil war, met with financial disaster, and this made it extremely difficult for the son to acquire an education. He persevered, however, and succeeded in becoming proficient in the branches taught in the grammar schools of his day. After leaving home young Evans farmed in the state of his birth until 1882, then departed for the state of Washington. He bought a farm soon after his arrival, but later sold it and purchased the property where he makes his present home. He has forty acres of his land in timothy and clover meadow. His two brothers and one sister were born in Missouri, and are named: Robert, living in Missouri; Jane Filand, born in 1851, now living in Yakima county, and James, born 1855, now of Kittitas county.

Mr. Evans was married to Miss Malinda McDonald, in September, 1872, in his native state. She died in June, 1881, and six years later he married Miss Florence J. Ellison, the daughter of William and Mrs. (Fleek) Ellison, the former a farmer. Mrs. Evans was born in Kansas, 1870, and educated in the grammar schools of her native state. She came to Washington with her father in 1889, and was married the following year. To this union have been born fourteen children, as follows: Born in Kansas and now living in Kittitas county, Charles Ellison, Eugene, Lewis, Minnie Baugh and Roy; Elizabeth Fletcher, born in Missouri, March 9, 1870, living in Yakima; Robert, born in Missouri, April 24, 1882, now in Kittitas; Sarah S. Cahoon, born in Missouri, now in Kittitas; Rolla, born in this state; Ruth, Henry and May, all born in Kittitas county; Leonora and Verna, also natives of Washington. The last six named children live with their parents in the Kittitas valley.

Mr. Evans is a Republican in politics. He owns 160 acres of land, thirty head of cattle and three horses, besides farm equipage. He is rated a well-to-do farmer and a peaceful, law-abiding citizen. He is liberal and enterprising whenever called upon for co-operation in any undertaking for the betterment of surrounding conditions, and, as a consequence, stands high in the estimation of his fellows.

BARTHEL ZWICKER., a prosperous farmer residing near Ellensburg, Washington, is a native of Germany, born February 19, 1860. His father, Cornelias Zwickler, was a German, and died while Barthel was a small lad. His mother, Anna M. (Meier) Zwickler, was born in Germany in 1823. She came to the United States in 1874 and settled in Michigan, dying in 1896. Mr. Zwickler received his education, up to his fourteenth year, in the common schools of his native country, coming to this country with his mother in 1874. He was in Michigan ten years, most of which time was spent as an employee in a copper stamp-mill. In 1884 he came to the Kittitas valley, and for four years worked by the month for various farmers, then took a homestead of his own and added to it by a purchase of 160 acres of railroad land. He has been farming this property from that time until the present, and has it all under cultivation, his crops being principally grain and grass. He has four sisters, all natives of Germany, and all living in the state of Michigan. Their names are: Anna Mertes, Mary Peck, Thersia Glesener, and Clara Molton.

Mr. Zwickler was married, May 20, 1891, to

Miss Frances A. Robbins, a native of England. She grew to womanhood and was also educated in the Kittitas valley, Washington, and was married at the age of twenty-six. Her father, Dr. John Robbins, was born in Birmingham, England, in 1834, and came to the United States in 1872. In 1878 he came to Washington Territory, and was a pioneer of the West. He is now living in the vicinity of Ellensburg, on Springfield farm. Her mother, Elizabeth (Benton) Robbins, was born in Yorkshire, England, 1812, and was married in 1833. Mrs. Zwickler's brothers and sisters are: Walter J., born January 6, 1856; Earnest A., March 3, 1858; Fannie Thomas, November 30, 1860; Bertha Vradenburgh, April 9, 1862; William Von E., September 26, 1863; Harry E., August 27, 1865; Minnie E. Sellwood, December 8, 1866; Charles O., born February 13, 1868; George B., February 24, 1869; Nellie E. Craig, November 25, 1872; Blanche A., May 13, 1870; Lillie A., August 24, 1874; Daisie E., April 28, 1876; Mary B., August 24, 1878; Clara A., February 17, 1883, and Laura M. Robbins, February 23, 1885. Mrs. Zwickler died May 14, 1900, leaving two children, Anna E. and Clara M., both born in the Kittitas valley, May 8, 1897, and August 6, 1899, respectively. Both live at home with their father. Mr. Zwickler is a Republican in politics. In addition to the land previously mentioned in this biography, he has one hundred head of well bred Durham cattle and twelve head of horses. He takes an active interest in all public affairs of his locality. He is a man of high morals, excellent social and financial standing, and is determined and aggressive in furthering all public enterprises which his conscience tells him are for the best advantage of the community at large, and equally so in opposing those which he considers to be detrimental to the best interests of the citizens. In all, he is a leading man in the valley.

CHARLES H. McDONALD, Charles H. McDonald is a native of Portland, Oregon, born September 9, 1852, and is now a farmer living in the Kittitas valley. His father, Halley McDonald, was born in Providence, Rhode Island, in 1810, and was an architect by trade. He crossed the Plains to California in 1847, and three years later made his home in Portland, dying there March 10, 1901. Elizabeth (Sampson) McDonald, mother of Charles H., is also a native of Providence, Rhode Island, born in 1821, married at the age of twenty, and now living in Portland, Ore. The school life of Mr. McDonald was spent in the grammar and high schools of his native city. He finished his course at the age of eighteen and began farming. He followed this vocation four years, then went to eastern Oregon and engaged in the stock raising business, which he pursued some six years. In 1882 he turned his attention to mining, and followed that branch of industry for a similar length of time. In 1888 he came to Ellensburg, entered the field as a stockman and creamery operator, and still remains in that business. He has a brother, William H., born in Providence, now a business man in New York City. His other brother, John C., born in Portland, Oregon, is still living in his native city, engaged in the insurance business. His sisters are: El a Hinman, born in Portland, now of Ellensburg; Bertie G. Innes, a native and resident of Portland, and Anna McDonald, of like place of birth and residence.

Mr. McDonald was married in Ellensburg, June, 1889, to Miss Carrie Cannon. Two children have been born to this union, Henry Earl and Nellie; both born in the Kittitas valley, the son on September 14, 1889, and the daughter February 14, 1893. Both children are living at home. Mr. McDonald is an active and aggressive Republican, taking a deep interest and a foremost part in the county organization of his party. Besides his farm and dairy he has seventy head of cows and a sufficient number of horses to carry on the business of farming. Few men are better posted on the early history of the Northwest, in which he has taken an active part, than is Mr. McDonald. He is a substantial business man and a good citizen.

WILLIAM WALTERS lives one and one-half miles west of Ellensburg, Washington, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He owns twenty acres of excellent land watered by the big irrigation ditch and expects to make this place his permanent home. He is also a stockholder in the Lagoon cannery, which is being successfully operated in Nelson, Alaska, and has other investments and securities, ample evidences of his business ability and prosperity. He was born in Granola, Elk county, Kansas, April 14, 1874. His father, David Walters, was of Dutch descent and a native of Kentucky. He served in the Mexican war and died when the subject of this sketch was an infant. William's mother, Alice (Williams) Walters, was also a native of Kentucky. Her father was of an English family and he served during the war with Mexico. Mr. Walters attended various schools in his native county until he was sixteen. In 1890 he got the Washington fever and moved west, locating in Ellensburg. He invested his money in the sheep business, in partnership with his brothers. In the fall of 1901 he sold his interests and purchased the small irrigated farm that is now his home. He has three brothers. Hubbard, born in Illinois in 1868, is now a resident of Owyhee, Oregon. The second brother, Jefferson, was born in 1871, and lives in Ellensburg. David, born in Kansas in 1876, is a resident of North Yakima, Washington. Nellie Walters, a half-sister, born in Kansas in 1884, now lives in Granola, that state.

Mr. Walters was married in Howard, Kansas, August 15, 1900, to Miss Cora Gulick, who was born in Elk Falls, Kansas, February 22, 1880, and was educated in the schools of her native town. She is the daughter of Gilbert and Mary Gulick, both natives of Champaign, Illinois, and was one of a family of thirteen children. Her brothers and sisters were as follows: Warren, Fredenburg, Edward S., Harvey L., Charles J., Rose E., Nettie and Rettie (twins), Grover C., Hattie (deceased), Judd S. and Josie F. Gulick.

Mr. and Mrs. Walters have one child, William D., who was born September 29, 1901.

HENRY TONER was left an orphan when but a mere lad, and has had to struggle for himself since he was thirteen years old. He is to-day one of the leading farmers of central Washington, having by application and business acumen accumulated a property that assures a steady income. He resides two miles west and one-half mile south of Ellensburg. Mr. Toner was born in Lonesdale, Rhode Island, March 18, 1857. His father, Henry Toner, was a native of Ireland, and his mother, Mary (McCartan) Toner, was born in Scotland. Mr. Toner's educational opportunities were limited on account of the death of his parents, but he received a few years' instruction in the public schools of his native county before he went to Marysville, California, when fourteen years old, and began farm work. He continued that employment until 1880, when he moved to Kittitas (then Yakima) county, Washington. He rented a farm and established the foundation for his fortune. He was most successful on the rented place and later purchased his present farm. He has acquired a property, the income from which will keep him and his family comfortably, without the hard labor which usually accompanies farm life. He now rents the farm, except the home and garden. He owns 280 acres of farm lands, 1,440 acres of grazing land, 100 head of horses and cattle and about 3,000 head of sheep. Mr. Toner was one of a family of four children. His eldest brother, John, was an engineer on a man-of-war. His sister, Alice, and brother, Barney, are dead. The youngest sister, Kittie, is a resident of Lonesdale, Rhode Island. He was married in the city of Old Yakima, December 24, 1880, to Miss Katinka Coleman, who was born in Santa Rosa, California, October 14, 1850. Her father, William Coleman, was born in Kentucky in 1822, and died in Ellensburg, April 7, 1888. Her mother, Mary (Neurdan) Coleman, was born in Kentucky and died when her daughter Katinka was very young. James, born in 1840, and Mrs. Angeline Brown, Mrs. Toner's eldest brother and sister, are now deceased. Elias, born in 1853, now a resident of Ellensburg, and Orange Coleman, born October 10, 1857, and now living in Oregon, are her brothers. Mrs. Toner is a member of the Methodist church and both husband and wife are among the most respected citizens of the valley.

PETER J. NORLING, a native of Sweden, where he was born November 16, 1848, has been a resident of Washington since 1883. He is engaged in farming and stock raising, on his farm two miles southwest of Ellensburg, on rural free delivery route No. 1. He is the son of John and Elsie (Peterson) Nelson, both natives of Sweden. His father died when he was but twelve months old, and his mother passed away five years later. Mr. Norling was educated in Sweden and came to the United States in 1871, locating in Chicago. He was there employed as a carpenter until 1875, when he went to Colorado to accept a position as millwright in a mine. May 1, 1883, he arrived in Ellensburg and was employed by State Senator J. P. Sharp, for whom he worked three years. Mr. Norling then purchased a farm of one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he worked for five years and then disposed of. He then purchased the ranch upon which he now resides. He has two sisters and one brother: Hannah, born in 1841; Angie, born in 1843, and Nels Nelson, born in 1845.

He was married in Ellensburg, July 3, 1894, to Annie Marie (Magnuson) Swanson, a widow, who was born in Kalma, Sweden, March 25, 1858. She has two brothers and three sisters, all natives of the old country. They are: Otto W. Magnuson, born in 1860 and now a resident of Utah; Augusta, born in 1865, a resident of Stockholm; Mrs. Amelia Johnson, born in 1873 and dwelling in Africa; John, born in 1878, and Annetta, born in 1880, and now living in Stockholm. Mrs. Norling had three children by her first marriage: Augusta, born February 4, 1887; John, February 11, 1889, and Oscar Swanson, February 27, 1891. Mr. Norling is the father of one child, George W., who was born May 14, 1896. The parents are members of the Swedish Lutheran church, and Mr. Norling's political affiliations are with the Republican party.

GEORGE P. JAMES followed coal mining in many of the states of the union until he secured his present land holdings and settled down as a farmer on his one hundred and sixty acre farm five miles southwest of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England, October 13, 1850. His father, John James, was noted as the inventor of the first tubular boiler ever used in England, but was defrauded out of the profits of his patent. The mother, Jane Ann (Graham) James, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, October 21, 1823, and was a direct descendant of Graham, the famous Scot, who was chief lieutenant for William Wallace. Mr. James received his early education in England and came to the United States in 1876. He has traveled extensively on this continent and has followed coal mining in every state where the "black diamonds" are found. He was one of a family of nine children, named as follows: Susanna, John, William, Annie, Daniel, Mary, Thomasina and Hanna.

He was married in Jellico, Tennessee, to Miss Mary L. Bolton, June 19, 1890. His wife is the daughter of Tandy and Sarah M. (Hansard) Bolton. Her father was born in North Carolina, served as a blacksmith in the Civil war, on the Union side, and died in Texas. Her mother was a native of Virginia, of English parentage, and died in Kentucky. Mrs. James was born in Knox county, Tennessee, May 11, 1847. Her brothers and sisters were also natives of that county. They are: Nellie Ann, Betsie Jane, John Thomas, William J., Margaret A., Mary, the wife of R. L. Munday, married in 1862, and the mother of two children, both of whom are dead; and Sarah J. Munday, now living in Whitman county, Kentucky. Mr. James has sixty-five acres of his land under a high state of cultivation. He has ten head of cattle and five horses. Both he and his wife are members of the Methodist Episcopal church, and the husband is a member of the Republican party.

JOHN N. WEAVER is a progressive and successful Kittitas farmer, living on the place, on rural free delivery route No. 1, out of Ellensburg, Washington. There he has his original homestead of one hundred and twenty acres, of which the greater part is under irrigating ditches, and he is now arranging for the construction of a reservoir which will provide water to irrigate the remainder of the place. His place is well equipped with farming implements and he owns a half interest in a steam thrasher. He has a comfortable home and fine barn. His live stock includes forty-five head of range animals and twenty milk cows.

Mr. Weaver was born in Clinton county, Indiana, January 22, 1850. His father, James M. Weaver, was born in Sandusky, Ohio, in 1822. His mother, Ann (Hupp) Weaver, was born the same year in Pennsylvania, of German descent. Mr. Weaver was educated in Illinois, Indiana and Missouri and in 1870 began work on his father's farm in Cherokee county, Kansas. In 1871 he rented a farm adjoining, which he worked four years, but met with poor success on account of droughts and grasshoppers. He then moved to Joplin, Missouri, where he was engaged in lead mining for two years. He took a course in engineering and for the succeeding seven years ran an engine and was later master mechanic for the Fitcher Lead & Zinc Company at Joplin. In 1883 he moved to Ellensburg and took up the land where he now resides.

Mr. Weaver's eldest brother, William W. Weaver, was born in Indiana in 1845, and served during the war, being present at the fall of Richmond. Mary Ann (Weaver) McDowell, a sister, was born in Indiana in 1847 and lives at Roslyn, Washington. She is a widow. Elizabeth E.

(Weaver) McDonell, born in Indiana in 1848, died in Kansas in 1875. George W. Weaver, a brother, born in Indiana July 4, 1851, is farming near Ellensburg. Charles W. Weaver, the next brother, was born in Indiana, April 20, 1853, and lives at Grand Junction, Colorado. James H. Weaver, born in Indiana, November 1, 1854, lives at Joplin. Amanda V. (Weaver) Kennedy, born August 12, 1859, resides in Cherokee county, Kansas. Joseph W. Weaver, born November 15, 1858, and Pheba A. (Weaver) Reynolds, born September 25, 1860, live at Joplin, where Mr. Reynolds owns an automobile factory. Roda A. Weaver, who was born February 12, 1862, died March 9, 1866. Indiana I. Weaver, born April 12, 1864, passed away June 9, 1869. Franklin M. Weaver, who was born November 30, 1867, died December 21, 1872.

Mr. Weaver was married at Columbus, Kansas, May 18, 1871, to Anna M. McDonell, who was born in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, November 14, 1852. Her father was James T. McDonell, who was born in Virginia August 14, 1827, now a resident of Ellensburg. Her mother, Mary Ann (Warner) McDonell, was a native of Indiana. Mrs. Weaver has one brother, Albert G., born December 24, 1850. Her sisters are Mary M., born August 26, 1855; Adda A., born June 20, 1858; Carrie L., born July 12, 1860, and Emma J., born March 23, 1862.

Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have had five children, four of whom survive. The eldest daughter, Cora B. Weaver, was born June 3, 1872. She was educated at the Ellensburg state normal school and graduated in 1898. She received a life diploma in 1902 and is engaged in teaching at Ellensburg. The eldest son, Leffa M., was born December 23, 1874, and is married and living in California. Roy A. Weaver, the second son, was born August 29, 1880, graduated from the Indiana Dental college April 2, 1903, and is practicing his profession at Ellensburg. Victor M. Weaver, who was born December 28, 1883, is taking a course in agriculture at the State Agricultural College and School of Science at Pullman, Washington. Ina M. Weaver, born January 17, 1893, died March 17, 1895.

Mr. and Mrs. Weaver are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Weaver has never taken an active interest in politics.

CHARLES F. STOOPS, a substantial farmer and stock raiser, living on his place some four and one-half miles southwest of Ellensburg, Washington, was born in Dallas City, Illinois, March 5, 1850. His father, John Stoops, was of Dutch descent and was born in Pennsylvania July 11, 1835. He served three years in the Union army under General Buchanan. The mother, Elizabeth (Kenard) Stoops, was born in Kentucky, July 11, 1838, of Scotch parentage. Her father took an active part in the extermination of the Mormons in Nauvoo, Illinois. Mr. Stoops was educated in the common schools of Durand, Wisconsin, but on account of his desire to help support his parents he left before graduating from the high school and went to work on a farm, where he labored until he was twenty-seven years of age. He then moved to Blaine, Washington, where he engaged in the sawmill business for about seven years. He then moved to Kittitas county and located some prospects on the Man-as-lash river. Failing to secure returns he engaged in farming and stock raising, to which he has since devoted his energies and ability.

He was married in Ellensburg March 29, 1893, to Miss Marian H. Williams, daughter of Thomas D. Williams, a native of Canada and pioneer of Illinois. Her mother, Margaret E. (Crawford) Williams, was born June 26, 1848, near Canton, Illinois. The Crawford family made the trip across the Plains from Illinois to Oregon, in 1851, by wagon and were among the earliest settlers in the Willamette valley, arriving there August 2, 1851. Charles F. Stoops had four brothers and five sisters, as follows: Mary E. Ottly, born June 2, 1859, the wife of John Ottly of Custer, Washington; Mrs. Amanda Mercer, living in Pierce county, Wisconsin, her native state; William, born January 31, 1850, in Dunn county, Wisconsin, his present residence; where he has served three terms as justice of the peace; Jesse E., born August 31, 1866, died in Walla Walla, Washington, July 11, 1899; Mrs. Alice Hays, died June 17, 1898; Mrs. Irene G. Robertson, living in Seattle; Herbert P. and Archibald, residents of Blaine, Washington, and Clara A. Stoops, the youngest, born September 19, 1876, now living in North Yakima, Washington. Mrs. Charles F. Stoops was born in Santa Rosa, Sonoma county, California, June 13, 1869. She has three brothers and one sister. The brothers are: John H., residing in Rexburg, Idaho; Thomas A., living in Ellensburg, and Ralph, a resident of Wasco, Oregon. The sister, Mrs. Margaret E. Sharp, is living in Seattle.

Mr. and Mrs. Stoops have one son, Roy T., born December 21, 1893. They are both members of the Methodist Episcopal church. The husband has 120 acres of state school land leased for five years from August 2, 1902, and they have a comfortable house on the place. The farm has an ample barn, is well stocked with horses, cattle and swine, and is a modern, well-cultivated ranch.

CHARLES M. RICHARDS, a successful farmer and owner of a well-improved ranch six and one-half miles west of Ellensburg, Washington, has been a farmer all his life. Born November 7, 1860, in McLean county, Illinois, Mr. Richards received his education in the common schools of that state and of Iowa, and worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-two years old. His father, Albert Richards, was a native of Indiana, born in 1820, and died in Waterville, Washington, in 1896. The mother, Elizabeth (Cooper) Richards, was born in Ohio in 1835, and is now a resident of Nebraska. Her son, Charles, has three brothers and two sisters. Allen, born February 22, 1858, is living in Sunset, Washington. Oliver, born July 3, 1865, resides in Thorp, Washington, and the youngest brother, William, born in March, 1873, is a resident of Ponca, Nebraska, where both sisters live. They are: Mrs. Fannie Jones, born in 1807, and Mrs. Jennie Tucker, born in 1809. In 1884 Mr. Richards came to Kittitas county, Washington, where he worked one year on a farm and later rented the same place for a like period. He then moved to the Big Bend country, remained there until the spring of 1898, then returned and purchased the farm he is now working with so much success. He owns 400 acres of farm land, and the ranch is equipped with all necessary implements. There are two large barns and a comfortable home on the place, and he owns about sixty-two head of cattle, fifteen head of horses and thirty hogs.

Mr. Richards was married in Thorp, Washington, October 5, 1885, to Miss Salena M. Southern, daughter of Braxton D. and Nancy J. (Veach) Southern; the former a native of Virginia, the latter of Michigan. Mrs. Richards was born in Cedar county, Iowa, December 28, 1868, and was one of nine children. Her brothers were: Leroy, born in Iowa; Eli C., who died in 1892; Seward, Festes E. and Edward E. Southern. The last named is a resident of Thorp. One sister, Clara J., passed away May 28, 1898, at the age of twenty-five. A married sister, Anna E. Ross, died in North Yakima. The other sister, Mrs. Corinne Beck, born in 1865, is a resident of North Yakima.

Mr. and Mrs. Richards have one child, Leroy D., born in Waterville, Washington, November 17, 1892. The father is a member of the Woodmen of the World and his wife belongs to the Women of Woodcraft. Mrs. Richards is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Her husband is a Republican in politics and active in party work.

JAMES T. HAYES, a well-known resident of Kittitas county, is at present residing on a farm five miles east and five miles south of Ellensburg. He was born in Iowa, May 23, 1856, the son of Sanford and Rebecca (Fry) Hayes, both of whom are now residing in Kittitas county. Sanford Hayes is a native of Vermont, born in 1827. After attaining manhood he farmed for several years in his native state, and later went to Iowa, this state then being in the earliest stages of settlement. After residing in Iowa for several years, during which time he was married, he crossed the Plains to Washington Territory, his newly wedded wife accompanying. This journey was made in the latter fifties. Mr. and Mrs. Hayes settled in Olympia, then a pioneer town of Washington. Later they proceeded to Oregon, and thence to California, where they remained for several years. The West at this time, however, was a bit too wild to suit Mr. Hayes and his wife, so they returned to Iowa, but eventually found that they had seen too much of the West to be satisfied to live permanently in the East. In 1881 they came back to Washington, this time to stay, and are now residing in Kittitas county. Mrs. Rebecca Hayes was born in Pennsylvania in 1835, and when a child moved with her parents to Iowa. She grew up in pioneer Iowa, and after marriage, as mentioned, crossed the Plains to the Pacific coast states, thus more than keeping pace with the westward march of settlers. She shared with her husband all the hardships incident to the journey westward, then returning with him to Iowa. James T. spent the greater part of his boyhood in Iowa, the state of his nativity. He lived with his parents at the Iowa home till twenty years of age, then going to Missouri, where he was engaged in farming for one year. Farming, however, did not prove entirely to his taste, so he went to Colorado and for a year was employed as a freighter. Next, he went to the vicinity of Nebraska City, Nebraska, where he farmed for two years, after which he moved to Cherokee county, Iowa, there farming for a year. His final move was to Kittitas county, Washington, in 1882. For eleven years after his arrival he followed freighting, the greater part of the time between The Dalles and Ellensburg, and from Ellensburg into the Salmon river country. He acquired his present farm in 1890, first renting, and later purchasing it.

On April 25, 1876, in Cedar county, Missouri, Mr. Hayes married Miss Nancy Fortney, a native of Iowa, born March 14, 1858. Her parents were David and Neta E. (Cox) Fortney, early settlers in Missouri. David Fortney was born in Kentucky in 1828, and in after life was a farmer. He was among the early settlers in Missouri, residing there all his life except a short time spent in Iowa, during which time Nancy was born. Neta E. (Cox) Fortney was born in Indiana and died in Cedar county, Missouri, in 1898. She was the mother of ten children. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Hayes are: Elsie, in Colorado, February 21, 1877, deceased at the age of five years; Johnthan, February 22, 1880, George, January 30, 1881, both in Nebraska; Abraham, July 31, 1883; Maria, May 24, 1885; Dora, August 25, 1889; Clarence, December 13, 1892; Samuel, May 28, 1894; Harry, June 16, 1897, and Cora, September 8, 1899, all in Kittitas county. Fraternally, Mr. Hayes is affiliated with the Woodmen of the World. He is a man of high standing socially and in a business way, undoubtedly being, as he is reputed, one of the leading men of his community.

CHRIS JACOBSON is a hale and hearty rancher, residing at present on his farm four miles east and five miles south of Ellensburg. He was born in Denmark, August 14, 1860, the son of Jacob and

Else (Larsen) Jacobson, both now deceased. The elder Jacobson was born in Denmark in 1823, and in after years was a farmer. His death occurred in Denmark in 1894. Else (Larsen) Jacobson was also a native of Denmark, and is now deceased as mentioned. Young Chris received in his Denmark home the parental training usual to Danish lads, such being conducive to his development into a young man respectfully obedient to the wishes of his elders, rather than a young "tinder-head" who strikes out during the pin-feather stage charged with fervor to set the world on fire with his achievements, to the utter demoralization of all filial ties. His home training, however, did not prevent his being seized with a desire to come to America when he had reached the age of eighteen. He managed to work his way across the broad Atlantic, landed at New York, and after divers experiences in the New World,—utterly new to him—sometimes prospering and frequently the reverse, finally drifted into Nebraska. Here he found farming congenial to his desires, so he tried it. Two years satisfied him with farm life in Nebraska; then he hied himself westward, and the year 1889 found him in Ellensburg. Here he accepted employment of the Northern Pacific Company, first as a section workman and later as oiler in the yards at Ellensburg. After a year thus spent he was promoted to the position of car inspector, and acted in this capacity until 1894, then quitting the railroad for good. Since that time he has farmed to the exclusion of any other regular vocation, and at present possesses a neat little farm, one of the most attractive, perhaps, in the community of which he is a resident.

On August 8, 1891, Mr. Jacobson married Miss Johne Shorman, then a resident of Kittitas county. She was born in Denmark, November 16, 1866, and in the land of her nativity grew to womanhood and was educated. In 1890 she came with her brother from the old country to the United States, her objective point being Kittitas county, and a year later married Mr. Jacobson. Carl Shorman, her father, was born in Germany in 1838, and when seventeen years of age went to Denmark, where he was married later. He came from Denmark to the United States in 1904, and on May 10th of that year landed in Kittitas county. Annie (Fredricksen) Shorman, the mother, was born in Denmark in 1843. At present she is residing in Kittitas county. Children born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Jacobson are: Annie, in Klickitat county, October 13, 1893, now living at home; Carl, November 5, 1894, and Emma, November 30, 1899, the latter two being natives of Kittitas county. Fraternally Mr. Jacobson is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, and in religion with the Lutheran church. He is a Republican and ardently in favor of the Roosevelt administration. Though not one of the most extensive farmers of his neighborhood he is one of the most worthy, and what his farm lacks in size it makes good in being extremely well cultivated and neat in appearance.

JENS SORENSON is a sturdy son of Denmark, residing on a well-cultivated farm four miles east and four miles south of Ellensburg. He was born in Hourup, Denmark, June 29, 1860, the son of Soren C. and Mary (Nelson) Sorenson, both now deceased. Soren C. Sorenson was born in Denmark in 1823, and in after life was a farmer. He died in Denmark in 1897. Mary (Nelson) Sorenson, also native of Denmark, was born in 1828, and died in 1887, having lived in the land of her nativity all her life. Jens lived with his parents till he was twenty-one years of age, during boyhood receiving as good an education as was to be had in the common schools of Denmark. At the age mentioned, in 1881, he came to the United States, his objective point being Council Bluffs, Iowa. Here he was a railway employee for five years, the last two of which he was in the car repairing shops. Upon discontinuing this employment he went to Nebraska, where he farmed for three years. Then, in 1888, he came west, settling at Ellensburg, where he accepted employment of the Northern Pacific Company in the car repairing shops. He was thus engaged for five years, at the end of which time he bought a tract of fine hay land, on which is his present home. This was in 1892. The next year he moved his family upon the place, making preparations to reside there permanently. The house they occupied at the time was an unpretentious "shanty" answering only the purpose of a shelter, but well in keeping with the worldly means of its occupants. Since then, however, the prosperity due to hard work and capable management has enabled Mr. Sorenson to build a fine seven-room house on his farm, as well as an equally good barn and divers other farm buildings necessary for the protection of stock and crops.

Mr. Sorenson has been married twice. The first marriage occurred June 10, 1885, in Nebraska. Miss Mary Jacobson was the bride, twenty-two years of age at the time of her marriage. She was born in Denmark in 1863, and when a young woman came to the United States. Her parents, Jacobed P. and Else (Larsen) Jacobson, were natives of Denmark, the former born in 1823, and dying in 1896; the latter born in 1833, and passing away in 1889. The first Mrs. Sorenson, at the time of death, was the mother of five children. The present Mrs. Sorenson was Miss Sinea Jacobson before her marriage. She was born in Denmark, August 18, 1879, and in her native land grew to womanhood and was educated. She came to the United States in 1896, and her marriage occurred seven years later. Children born to the first marriage are: William, in Nebraska, and deceased when a child; Clara, May 17, 1888; Amel, March 31, 1890; Mary, December 10, 1892, and Elga, January 1, 1894, all but the first born near Ellensburg. The present Mrs. Sorenson has one child, John, who was born February 1, 1904. In religion Mr. Sorenson adheres to the Lutheran church, and in politics he is a Republican. He is a native of the old country, a Dane throughout, but notwithstanding is now thoroughly imbued with the political and social principles of newer America and fully in sympathy with the national spirit of the country of which he is a citizen.

GEORGE W. WEAVER is the owner of a fine grain and stock ranch of 600 acres, located on rural free delivery route No. 1, northwest of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born July 4, 1851, in Clinton county, Indiana, and received his early education in Tippecanoe county, that state. He left school when he was about sixteen years old and followed farming, the nursery business and mining, until 1875, when he purchased a farm in Cherokee county, Kansas. He resided there and conducted the place until 1883, then sold out and moved to Washington, arriving in Yakima county, June 18, 1883. He bought one hundred and sixty acres of land from the Northern Pacific Railroad and engaged in farming and stock raising, which pursuits he has since followed with abundant success. His home is modern, and the place is supplied with well built barns and all the necessary farming implements. He owns about one hundred head of horses and cattle.

August 2, 1876, during his residence in Cherokee county, Kansas, Mr. Weaver was married to Miss Eulia E. McDowell. Her father, Calvin C. McDowell, a native of Virginia, was born September 30, 1820. He was a practicing physician in Wirtonia up to the time of his death in 1883. During the War of the Rebellion Dr. McDowell was a captain of Company G, 26th regiment Indiana infantry, which was one of the last regiments to return after peace was declared. His wife, mother of Mrs. Weaver, was Nancy A. (Strain) McDowell, born in Ohio, May 6, 1835, and now a resident of Ellensburg, Washington. Mrs. Weaver was born in Indiana, January 27, 1855, and was one of a family of six children. Her eldest brother, J. Frank McDowell, born in Indiana, April 11, 1843, is living in Gray county, Kansas. Samuel O., born March 3, 1848, is also a resident of Kansas. Andrew W., the youngest brother, born October 8, 1856, is a resident of Missouri. Mrs. Eliza J. Coleman, born August 18, 1867, and Mrs. Claudia J. Hall, born July 7, 1871, live in Ellensburg, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Weaver have five children. Clyde C., the eldest, was born May 7, 1877. Clyde E. was born November 27, 1879. Velma, the eldest girl, was born May 22, 1884. Vera, November 1, 1886, and Hazel, born April 30, 1893, passed away July 6, 1901. The parents are active members of the Methodist Episcopal church. Mr. Weaver is a Republican and takes an active interest in matters of political importance.

OLIVER R. GEDDIS is a farmer and stock raiser residing near Ellensburg, Washington, on his well-improved farm one and one-half miles west of that city. Always a hard worker and ambitious, the panic of the early nineties, which swept away the bulk of his property, did not dismay him. Starting in with a few horses in 1893, he pluckily determined to achieve success. In 1900 he purchased his present farm of one hundred and twenty acres. By close attention to business he has accumulated a property valued at about eight thousand dollars. Stock raising, to which he devoted much attention in former years, he is abandoning to a considerable extent. He has sold most of his stock and is devoting his farm to hay and grain, for which he finds an excellent and profitable market. It is quite natural that Mr. Geddis should achieve the success that has come to him, as he is the son of a farmer and stock raiser, and for many years was his father's right hand man. He was born in Albany, Oregon, March 30, 1864, and came to Kittitas county, Washington, when but seven years old, so he might almost be considered a native of that county. He received his early education in the common schools of this county. At the age of nineteen he left school and began to ride range for his father, which he continued for twelve years. He and his father accumulated a large amount of property, consisting of live stock and land, which was almost all swept away, during the hard times following the panic of 1893. His father, S. R. Geddis, was born in Pennsylvania, February 12, 1837, of Scotch descent. He served in the Rogue River war during his residence in Oregon. He is now a resident of Alaska, where he is engaged in mining. The mother, Emma (Tureman) Geddis, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1844, of Dutch descent. Oliver R. was one of a family of ten children. His sisters, Mrs. Melinda Barnes and Mary Geddis, and brother, Charles B., were born in Oregon and are now deceased. The surviving brothers and sisters all live in Ellensburg. They include Fred L., Jessie A., and Lott O. Geddis, all born in Yakima county, Washington; Mrs. Emma C. Van Geisen, Mrs. Pearl Wilson and S. R. Geddis, all born in Kittitas county.

Mr. Geddis was married in Ellensburg, Washington, March 25, 1897, to Miss Minnie Charlton, daughter of Charles A. and Permelia (Newland) Charlton. Her father was born in West Virginia, March 23, 1820, was a farmer and served in the Rogue River war in Oregon. Her mother was born in Missouri, December 12, 1843, the daughter of a lumber merchant. Both parents were of Scotch extraction. Mrs. Geddis was born in Lebanon, Linn county, Oregon, November 11, 1876, and had six sisters and five brothers, as follows: Mrs. Francis S. Turner of Colville, Washington; Mrs. Elizabeth J. Burrell, a widow, of Denison, Texas; Mrs. Mary E. Smithson, and James M. Charlton, both dead; Mrs. Charlotte A. Burke, a resident of the Kittitas valley; Joseph H., living in Wenatchee;

Mrs. Margarette H. Clifton, a widow, of Kittitas county; Charles H., of Seattle; Mrs. Iva M. Holbrook, of Tacoma; William L., a traveling salesman with headquarters in Ogden, Utah, and Alfred H. Charlton, of Ellensburg, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Geddis had one child, born June 12, 1899, who passed away March 4, 1900. Mrs. Geddis is a member of the Presbyterian church, and she and her husband are regular attendants. Mr. Geddis is an active Republican. He does not believe in fraternal insurance and for that reason is not a member of such orders.

CHARLES W. MOFFET, living on his place two miles west of Ellensburg, is a skilled butter maker, a calling followed by his father and forefathers. He was practically raised in the business of butter and cheese making and relatives are today still operating the plant in Ohio that his grandfather started in 1832. In 1890 Mr. Moffet came to Ellensburg, Washington, where he commenced work for the Ellensburg Creamery Company, as butter maker and manager, which position he has filled so successfully that he has finally consummated a deal for its purchase. Mr. Moffet was born in Shawnee county, Kansas, August 17, 1856. His father, Orlando Moffet, was a native of New York, of Scotch descent, born in February, 1818. The mother, Catherine (Beam) Moffet, was a native of Iowa.

Charles W. received his education in the schools of his native state and when seventeen years old commenced work in his father's dairy, where he learned his trade. He worked there four years and then engaged in the dairy business for himself, in the same county, at which he continued six years, with much success. He then sold out and moved to Topeka, Kansas, where he learned the trade of a brickmason and followed that for sixteen years in that state, and in Oregon; but later returned to butter making in the Ellensburg creamery. He has three sisters and two brothers, as follows: Mrs. Margaret Cruse, now residing in Tecumseh, Kansas; William, now living near Topeka, where he has been operating a dairy for thirty years; Mrs. Susan Howey, whose husband has been engaged for many years in breeding fancy swine and has taken many first premiums at state and county fairs in Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska; Isaiah, a farmer near Topeka, and Mrs. Laura Beam, wife of a carpenter living near Topeka—all being residents of Kansas.

He was married in Shawnee county, Kansas, February 4, 1877, to Miss Fanny Burbank, daughter of Samuel Burbank, a native of Canada, since deceased, and Margaret (Washington) Burbank, a native of Illinois and now a resident of Kansas. Mrs. Moffet was born in Scott county, Illinois, April 19, 1857, and has the following brothers and sisters: Mrs. Ellen Moffet, born February 7, 1854;

Ottis Burbank, born August 2, 1859, and now residing in Shawnee county, Kansas; Mrs. Mary Tavis, born January 1, 1861, and residing in Kansas; Mrs. Hattie Reed, born April 5, 1865; Mrs. Jane Foust, born December 12, 1870; Mrs. Anna Middendorf, born February 12, 1871, now a resident of Scott county, Illinois, and Joseph, born in Kansas, October 8, 1872, and now living at home. With the exception of the first and last named, they were all born in Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Moffet have four children, all born in Kansas. Their eldest daughter, Minnie L., born February 15, 1880, is now keeping books for the Ellensburg creamery; Edith, born December 7, 1882, died the following spring, and Calley O., born July 21, 1883, died May 19, 1885. Frankie M. was born March 29, 1886. The father of the family has been most successful in his business undertakings and has accumulated a comfortable property. He is a Republican in politics and is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the National Union. Mr. Moffet and his family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

EVEN T. STRANDE was born in Christiania, Norway, March 20, 1851, and came to the United States when he was but eighteen years old. He was one of the first settlers in Kittitas Valley, Washington, having freighted for twelve years from The Dalles, Oregon, before there was any railroad. His home is on rural free delivery route No. 1, one mile south and four miles west of Ellensburg, Washington, where he is engaged in farming four hundred acres of land which he owns. He has fifty head of cattle and fifteen head of horses on the place, which is fitted up with a nice home. He is now building a large barn.

His father, Thorston L. Strande, was born in Norway about 1821. He was a stone mason, but for fifty years just previous to his death, about two years ago, he was foreman of a glass factory at Christiania. Mr. Strande's mother was born in Norway, about 1822. Her maiden name was Bertha Evens. Mr. Strande's elder brothers, Engon and Lars, are also in this country, residing respectively in Iowa and South Dakota. Senard Strande, born in Norway in 1854, took the father's place in the glass factory. The other brother, Andrew, who was born in 1863, is living in Norway. The sister, Mary Strande, is a resident of Iowa.

Mr. Strande was educated in the land of his birth, where he also learned the trade of a stone mason, which he followed seven years after his arrival in this country. After freighting, Mr. Strande in the spring of 1874 filed a pre-emption on eighty acres of land. He was married at Ellensburg, February 14, 1875, to Rebecca Anderson, and they have made their home since on the farm. The original eighty acres has greatly increased. Mr. Strande used his homestead right on eighty acres of railroad land, which he had to contest, and secured another eighty by purchase, making him two hundred and forty acres in his home farm. He has also one hundred and sixty acres of grazing and timber lands. Mrs. Strande is the daughter of Andrew Anderson, a native of Norway, who died in Iowa in 1879. She was born in Norway, June 6, 1846. She has had six brothers, John, Michel, Isaac, farmers in Minnesota; Mangus and Arne, in Norway, and Albert, deceased, all natives of Norway. Mr. and Mrs. Strande have four children. Their eldest child, Melinda Strande Nelson, was born at Ellensburg, November 19, 1875, and is the wife of a farmer living near there. The other children are: Theodore, born June 26, 1880; Matilda, born December 11, 1884, and Oscar, born August 20, 1887. Mrs. Strande's mother, Mrs. Anderson, who was born June 15, 1812, is still living, a resident of Minnesota.

Mr. Strande is a Republican and takes an active interest in political matters. He and Mrs. Strande are members of the Methodist Episcopal church.

WILLIAM A. RICE, now engaged in farming his home place, two miles south of Ellensburg, Washington, is considered one of the best forest rangers in the state. He received an appointment as forest ranger in 1899 and served until 1901, when he resigned. Since that time the national department has tried earnestly to induce him to re-enter the service, for the performance of the duties of which he has shown conspicuous ability. There is a position open for him in the forest reserve force at any time he wishes.

Mr. Rice was born in Montgomery county, Indiana, January, 19, 1856, and is one of a family of seven children. His father, James M. Rice, was born in Shelby county, Kentucky, in 1823, and was the leading Republican of the county. Mr. Rice received his early education at Waveland Collegiate Institute, in Indiana, for about six years, when sickness required him to leave school and his native state. He went to Colorado in search of health in 1877, and there spent ten years in farming and freighting. He then moved to Ellensburg, invested in city property and engaged in carpentering for about four years. He then bought one hundred and ten acres of raw and partially uncultivated lands. He has now brought about seventy-five acres under cultivation and has built a home on the place that is one of the finest farm residences in the county. It contains nine rooms, and bath and modern conveniences are to be put in at once.

Mr. Rice was married April 4, 1882, in Rockville, Indiana, to Miss Mary Ellen McCampbell, a native of the state, born May 18, 1826. She is one of a family of eleven children, and her father, John H. McCampbell, was born in Kentucky, about 1818, and died in 1881. Her mother, Sarah A. (Grismore) McCampbell, was born in Kentucky in 1820 and died in 1892. Mr. and Mrs. Rice have three children: Emma V., born April 6, 1883; James L., April 23, 1886, and Thomas H., December 8, 1892. The eldest two were born in Buena Vista, Colorado, and the youngest boy in Ellensburg. Mr. Rice is a Republican and served three consecutive terms as councilman in Ellensburg, where he was the leading advocate of good sewerage and was to a large extent responsible for the installing of the system which has made that city one of the most healthful in the country. He was nominated for a fourth term, but declined to run, being averse to office holding. Both he and Mrs. Rice are members of the Presbyterian church.

EDWIN P. EMERSON is a successful agriculturist residing at present four miles south and five miles east of the thriving town of Ellensburg. He was born in Stetson, Maine, thus being of that popular class of American citizens known as Yankees. His parents also were Yankees, both being natives of Maine. Cyrus W. Emerson, the father, was born in 1825, and died February 22, 1903, having lived his entire lifetime in his native state. The mother, Hannah (Hammonds) Emerson, was born in 1831, and attained womanhood and was married in the Pine Tree state, but resides at present in Seattle. Edwin P. lived with his parents on the farm in Maine until he reached his nineteenth year, during boyhood acquiring a fair education in the common schools. At the age mentioned, he migrated to Minnesota, this being in 1882. He remained in Minnesota only ten months, however, then came west to Kittitas county, where for four years following his arrival he was employed as a lumberman. In 1877 he went to the Puget sound region and for the ensuing three years logged on Skagit river. After this time he went to a point near Tacoma, there logging for four years. In 1894 he discontinued this vocation permanently, having filed a desert entry on his present farm eight years previously. Water was first put on the place in 1889, since which time eighty acres have been put under cultivation, the other eighty being left as a salt grass pasture.

On January 11, 1898, Mr. Emerson married Miss Maggie Bollman, a native of Yakima, born in 1875. Her parents, Mose and Susan (Funk) Bollman, are at present residing in Kittitas county. Mose Bollman was born in Pennsylvania in 1837, and since attaining manhood has been a contractor and farmer mainly. When the gold fever in California was at its height he crossed the Plains with a wagon train, like thousands of others at that time, bent on the acquiring of fortune at whatever hazard to life or health. After following divers occupations for a number of years in that state he came to Kittitas county, arriving in the early seventies. He is of German descent. Susan (Funk) Bollman was born in Missouri in 1851, and when a young woman came west, afterwards being married in The Dalles, Oregon. As mentioned, she is at present residing with her husband in Kittitas county. Children that have been born to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Emerson are: Cyrus M., born April 11, 1901; Roy, born June 5, 1902; Fred, born April 25, 1903. All are natives of Kittitas county. In religion Mr. Emerson is an Adventist, and in politics he holds to the Republican views. He is a good representative man, popular wherever known, and possessed of industry and integrity.

NIELS LARSEN is one of the many Danish settlers who live in the Ellensburg country, his home being four miles south and four and one-half miles east of the city of Ellensburg. Mr. Larsen was born in Denmark, August 21, 1860, the son of Anders and Mary (Nelson) Larsen, the latter deceased and the former at present residing in Denmark. The elder Larsen was born in 1834, and now at the age of seventy years is residing in the old country, farming, as he has ever been since attaining manhood. The mother was born in 1834 and died in 1901, having lived all her life in Denmark and raised a family of six children. Niels grew to manhood and was educated in the land of his nativity. He lived with his parents until he was twenty-seven years of age, from his twenty-first year till that age being in partnership with his father on the farm. When twenty-seven, he came to the United States, his objective point being Duluth, Minnesota, where for a year and a half after arrival he followed occupations of a diverse nature. Then he came west to Washington, arriving at Ellensburg in 1880. Here he was first employed in a brick-yard for three months, after which he accepted employment from the Northern Pacific Company as a section workman. For three years he was thus engaged, during the time his wages being one dollar and sixty cents per day. Quitting the section gang, he went into the round-house as an engine-wiper, following the vocation for a year afterwards. The big strike of 1894 compelled him to cease his work with the railroad company, so he tried the life of a farm hand. A year of this was sufficient, however, and the strike being then settled, he returned to his old vocation on the railroad section. He continued at this work for four years following, and during that time accumulated enough money to purchase his farm. During the last nine months of his work with the railway company he was employed in the car repairing shops, having been promoted from the section gang. He bought the farm, as mentioned, in 1901, and since then has made the place his home.

December 22, 1891, Mr. Larsen married Miss Christena Somesen, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hans C. Somesen, who came not many years ago from Denmark to the United States. The parents are now residing in Wisconsin, their home having been there since 1898. Miss Christena was born in Denmark, August 27, 1853, and in her native land grew to young womanhood and was educated. She came with her parents to the United States when a young woman, her marriage to Mr. Larsen occurring later when she was twenty-seven years of age. The event was solemnized in Ellensburg. Children that have been born to this marriage are: Harry, July 17, 1892; Myers, July 18, 1894; Daniel, September 29, 1896, and Betena, July 22, 1898. All were born near Ellensburg. Mr. Larsen is a member of the Lutheran church, and in politics a Republican. He is an honest, hard-working man, who, as did many of his Danish neighbors in this locality, came from the old country with neither money nor experience, his sole reliance being a determined will. He is worthy of respect for his patient, persevering industry, to which quality he is mainly indebted for his success.

ERICK A. MOE. Among the numerous ranchers of the Ellensburg country who by industry and capable management have acquired comfortable homes and well improved farms none is more worthy of mention than Erick A. Moe. Mr. Moe is a native of Norway. He was born in this land of noble traditions, November 26, 1871, and was the son of Anders A. and Mary (Erickson) Moe, the former now living in Norway, and the latter deceased. The elder Moe was born in Norway in 1843, since his birth having resided there continuously. The mother, Mary Moe, likewise a native of Norway, was born in 1853, and, as mentioned, is now deceased. Erick A. resided at home with his parents till his seventeenth year, at that age coming to America. This was in 1888. He came at once to Tacoma and was immediately employed on a steamboat plying on Puget Sound. He was thus engaged for a year. His next employment was with the railroad company between Tacoma and Steilacoom, here spending nearly a year. Next he came to Ellensburg, where he was employed for six years in the mill of that place, owned by R. P. Tjossem, during which time he married the daughter of his employer. In 1897 he gave up his position in the mill and rented a farm, shortly afterwards buying his present farm. He moved onto this ranch with his wife in 1898, and since then has resided there continuously.

On April 27, 1897, Mr. Moe married Miss Torena Tjossem, then residing with her parents in Ellensburg. She was the daughter of Rasmus P. and Rachel (Heggem) Tjossem, the former a mill-owner and one of the prominent business men of the Ellensburg country. Rasmus P. Tjossem was born in Norway in 1841 and came to the United States in 1876, first visiting the eastern states. He arrived in Ellensburg in the early eighties, and before becoming a mill-owner was a farmer. Rachel (Heggem) Tjossem was born in Norway, and when a young woman came to the United States. She married the elder Tjossem in Iowa, and later came west with him, settling at the present location near Ellensburg. Miss Torena was born in Marshall county, Iowa, in 1872, and when a child came west with her parents. She married Mr. Moe when twenty-four years of age. Children that have been born to this marriage are: Rachel, born March 25, 1898; Mary A., born January 27, 1900, deceased at the age of thirteen months; Dollie T., born October 24, 1903, all born near Ellensburg. In religion, Mr. Moe is a Presbyterian, and in politics he espouses the Republican cause. From the point of view of property interests he is undoubtedly one of the most substantial citizens of the county in which he resides, and he is no less worthy in all the manly attributes.

WILLIAM T. SHELDON is a wealthy farmer and stockman residing five miles south and four miles east of Ellensburg. He was born in Clinton county, Iowa, February 4, 1862, the son of Iram and Catherine (Ellis) Sheldon, the former now deceased. Iram Sheldon was born in New York state in 1847 and when a youth moved with his parents to Iowa, in which state he grew to manhood and was married. He died when thirty-three years of age. Catherine (Ellis) Sheldon was born in Illinois, and when a girl moved with her parents to Iowa, in this state marrying the elder Sheldon, as mentioned. She was of Scotch-Dutch descent and her husband of English. William T. grew to manhood and was educated in Iowa. His mother married a second time, and William lived until nineteen years of age with this parent and his stepfather in Cherokee county, Iowa. At the age mentioned, he took up the carpenter's trade, but worked at it only a short time, then returning to his former vocation of farming. After a year of farming in Iowa he came west, his objective point being Kittitas county, where he settled near Ellensburg. For five years following his arrival he teamed, generally out of The Dalles, Oregon, to tributary points. Then he went to the Palouse country, where he spent three years at farming, after which he returned to Kittitas county and bought an eighty-acre tract of land, which property he owns at present. He is now farming and raising stock, as mentioned, and in addition operates a threshing machine and hay-baler every fall.

Mr. Sheldon was married September 8, 1881, to Miss Viola Hayes, who, at the time of marriage, was residing in Nebraska. She was the daughter of Sanford and Rebecca (Fry) Hayes, who were among the pioneer settlers of Washington. Sanford Hayes was born in Vermont in 1827. After reaching manhood he farmed for a few years in his native state, later moving to Iowa, which was then being settled up. He lived in Iowa several years, marrying during this period, then, with his bride, crossed the Plains, his objective point being Washington. He first settled in Olympia, but later visited Oregon and California, traveling at a time when the "prairie schooner" and pack-train were the only means of transportation and the settler's rifle the only protection from hostile Indians and animals. Eventually, however, he settled in Kittitas county, where he is residing at present. Rebecca (Fry) Hayes was born in Pennsylvania in 1835, and when a child moved with her parents to Iowa, in which state, as stated, she was married. Her present residence is in Kittitas county. Viola Hayes was born near Olympia, April 15, 1865, and accompanied her parents during their travels in Oregon, California, Iowa, Nebraska and Missouri. In the three latter states she received her education. While in Nebraska, as mentioned, she married W. T. Sheldon, being seventeen years of age at the time of her marriage. Children that have been born to this marriage are: Villy, born in Whitman county, June 9, 1885; William B., April 10, 1891; Clara, September 19, 1893; Milo F., July 25, 1897; Iram, August 12, 1899, and Howard M., July 26, 1901, all in Kittitas county. Mr. Sheldon belongs to the Reorganized Church of Latter-Day Saints. He is a Republican, and ardent in his support of the Roosevelt administration. His property holdings are extensive, comprising slightly over thirteen hundred acres of land, two hundred and fifty head of cattle, and numerous other possessions in line with the business which he conducts. It is worthy of mention that Mr. Sheldon owns the largest apple orchard in Kittitas county. It is twenty acres in extent, almost all the trees being in full bearing.

WILLIAM D. CARTER, a transfer man at Ellensburg, Washington, is a Virginian, as his father and mother were before him. Born in the famous old Shenandoah Valley, August 19, 1860, he left home July 4, 1887, to come west and eventually located at Ellensburg. His father, John L. Carter, who was a farmer and a native of the Shenandoah valley, saw service during the war. His mother was Virginia E. (Rawlings) Carter, born in Virginia in 1839. Mr. Carter has two brothers and a married sister. Marge L. (Carter) Kinchloe, the sister, and Shelby H. Carter, the younger brother, live in Virginia. J. P. Carter, the elder brother, resides in Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. Carter was educated in the Shenandoah academy at Winchester, Virginia, and when eighteen years old went to Charleston, West Virginia, where he handled wheat stocks successfully for two years. He then moved to Millwood, Virginia, and clerked in a general merchandise store two years, after which he spent a year at home before moving west. He arrived at Ellensburg July 12, 1887, and went to work in a flour-mill owned by R. P. Tjosem. With a blacksmith from his old home he formed a partnership and engaged in blacksmithing, but sold out next spring and engaged in the transfer and livery business. He sold out in 1894, but the purchasers failing to make payments he resumed control in 1896. Two years later he closed out the livery, went into partnership with Mart Mason and secured a lease on three hundred acres of Yakima Indian reservation lands, the first ever sanctioned by the government. He was engaged in farming until 1900, during which time he purchased six carloads of horses and took them to North Dakota for sale. December 15, 1900, he bought an outfit and started his present transfer business. He has now two outfits running, thoroughly equipped, has a nice five-room house, two lots and a good barn.

Mr. Carter was married at Ellensburg, December 6, 1888, to Miss Anna Hardwick, daughter of Hugh M. Hardwick and Fannie (Grider) Hardwick, both natives of Tennessee. Mrs. Carter was born at Decatur, Texas, was educated as a school teacher, and taught for a time in her native state. Her mother and three sisters and four of her brothers live in Oklahoma. One sister, Cora (Hardwick) Ewing, is dead. The others are: Mattie (Hardwick) Culbertson, Jennie (Hardwick) Smith, Jessie (Hardwick) McBee, Lee, Hugh, Roy and Homer Hardwick.

Mr. and Mrs. Carter have one child, Phelma V. Carter, born at Ellensburg, June 22, 1900. Both Mr. and Mrs. Carter are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Carter is a Republican and has served five terms in the Ellensburg city council. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and has been through all the chairs, also has the distinction of having been elected a delegate to the grand lodge session held at Seattle, Washington.

CATHERINE MORRISON is a successful farmer and stock raiser, whose home is one mile south and seven miles east of Ellensburg, Washington. She is one of the few women who have displayed business ability and sagacity in the successful conduct of such enterprises in the Northwest. Her ability in this line is possibly due to the fact that she comes from a race of successful tillers of the soil.

Mrs. Morrison was born in Pierce county, Washington, April 17, 1859—a time when the residents of the Northwest were few in number. Her father, Charles Wheeler, a native of Illinois, was a farmer and moved from the coast to Kittitas county in 1870. Her mother, Maria (Fry) Wheeler, was born in Ohio in 1832, her father being also an agriculturist.

Mrs. Morrison received her education, though it was a meagre one, in the schools of Pierce county, Washington. She was but twelve years old when her father moved to Kittitas county. July 15, 1876, she was married to William Morrison. Her brothers and sisters include the following: Samantha (Wheeler) Curtice, now a resident of Okanogan county, Washington; George Wheeler and Abe Wheeler, residents of Kittitas county, Washington;

Virenda (Wheeler) Cook, also a resident of Kittitas county, and Carrie (Wheeler) Harper, now residing in Iowa.

Mrs. Morrison is the mother of seven children. Her son, Thomas J. Morrison, was born May 11, 1877; Mary V. (Morrison) Roberson, born May 11, 1879, died May 1, 1903; Charles W. Morrison was born September 16, 1881; Abraham Morrison was born January 9, 1884; Georgie Morrison was born February 13, 1886, and died December 9, 1899; Grant Morrison was born February 9, 1888; Anna Morrison, the youngest child, was born March 22, 1891. Mrs. Morrison has one grandchild, John T. Roberson, born April 21, 1901.

Mrs. Morrison owns a farm of one hundred and seven acres, of which she has thirty acres in cultivation. She also has about sixty head of good cattle and horses.

CHARLES W. C. PANSING is a successful farmer and stock raiser, and personally does much of the labor on his place despite the unfortunate accident which robbed him of both his feet. He has eight hundred acres of farm land, half a mile south and seven miles east of Ellensburg, Washington, well supplied with farm buildings, implements and machinery. He also owns about one hundred and seventy-five head of cattle and twenty head of horses. Mr. Pansing is a native of Hanover, Germany, born March 20, 1846. His father, Edward Pansing, and his mother, Margaretta (Ameshoff) Pansing, natives of the same country, are both dead. Mr. Pansing was educated in Germany and left school when he was fourteen years old to work on his father's farm. He came to the United States in 1868 and located in Montgomery county, Ohio, where, for ten years following, he worked on a tobacco farm. Leaving Ohio, he moved to Yamhill county, Oregon, but left there after a stay of eleven months, on account of his health, and moved to Yakima county in the spring of 1877. He worked for Mr. Sanders for about three years. It was during this period that he had the misfortune to have both his feet so severely frozen that it was necessary to amputate them at the instep.

He had four brothers and one sister, all born in Hanover, as follows: Henry, born about 1842; Sina (Pansing) Bultman, born in 1833; William, born in 1835, and Herman, born in 1839; are now dead. The surviving brother, Frederick Pansing, born in 1837, is a resident of Ohio, where he is engaged in farming and raising tobacco. Mr. Pansing does not take a great deal of interest in party politics, but is an ardent admirer and supporter of President Roosevelt. He is a member of the German Lutheran church.

S. NEWELL BANISTER, a farmer residing some two and one-half miles east of Ellensburg,

CHARLES W. C. PANSING.

Washington, is of Scotch-Irish descent. He was born in Pierpont, Saint Lawrence county, New York, November 5, 1831. His father, Benjamin Banister, was born in Virginia, and enlisted in the American army in the War of 1812. The mother, Bethirah (Axtel) Banister, was born in Virginia about 1800. Mr. Banister was educated in the schools of New York and Illinois, and when about seventeen years old left school and began working on a farm. Three years later he started for California, by wagon, and arrived in the Golden state in 1852. He engaged in placer mining one year. For two years following he was engaged in freighting and then moved to the northern part of the state and bought a farm, which he cultivated for three years. He was a member of an independent company, organized to fight Indians, and had a number of narrow escapes from death at the hands of the wily savages. In 1862 he left Crescent City valley and located in Umatilla, Oregon, where he engaged in freighting for six years. In 1869 he filed on a homestead in Vancouver, Washington, and farmed there nearly seven years. He then moved to Kittitas county for the winter, the next spring went to Walla Walla and engaged in farming for another period of seven years. He then returned to Kittitas county, where he has since made his home. His brothers and sisters include the following: Mrs. Mandena Otis, of Spokane, Washington; Jason, living in Idaho; Robert, an Oregon farmer; Lindon, killed while serving in General Sherman's army during the Civil war; Mrs. Sarah Isum, a widow, who resides in Illinois; Salmira Banister, who died when six years old; William, died at the age of eight; Daniel, died at the age of three, and Nathan, who has also passed away.

Mr. Banister was married in Vancouver, Washington, May 5, 1868, to Miss Martha Dixon, who was born March 31, 1841. Her father, Elija Dixon, born in Virginia in 1806, was a farmer. Her mother, Sarah (Cadwalader) Dixon, was born in North Carolina in 1804. Both were of Dutch-Irish descent. Mrs. Banister had four brothers and five sisters, as follows: John, of Kittitas county; Mrs. Melinda Wigle, a widow, living in Yakima county, Washington; Charles, Drusella, Ruth and Isaac, all dead; Mary Hardester, wife of a retired farmer of Walla Walla, Washington; Sarah Cross, wife of a farmer of Vancouver, Washington, and Joseph Dixon, deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Banister have five children: Sarah (Banister) McEwen was born March 28, 1870, and lives in Kittitas county; Mrs. Melinda Dixon, born February 6, 1872, lives in Ellensburg; Mrs. Mamie Smith, born October 28, 1874, is dead; Mrs. Belle Lewis, born February 4, 1879, lives in Yakima county, and Lindon, born June 23, 1885, makes his home with his parents.

Mrs. Banister is a member of the Methodist church, while the husband is an active member of the Republican party. His farm place consists of one hundred and sixty acres, of which he has about sixty acres under cultivation. The farm is well equipped with all needed machinery and is stocked with thirty-five milch cows, horses and hogs.

EDD A. ERICKSON is a farmer and stock raiser who lives four miles east of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Kittitas county, June 5, 1875, and has resided there ever since. His father, Erick Erickson, and his mother, Carrie (Larson) Erickson, were natives of Norway. Edd A. acquired an education in the common schools, and when eighteen years old began to work on his father's farm, where he remained for four years. Then he rented a farm, which he worked with success for three years. During one summer following he worked for others, and then purchased one hundred and sixty acres, which he has since cultivated, and which is now his home. The place is well stocked with all necessary farming appurtenances, and supports sixty-five head of horses and some cattle. Mr. Erickson's brothers were all born in the valley, and are farmers. His sisters, also natives of Kittitas county, are all married to farmers. The names of the latter are: Mrs. Mary (Erickson) Burroughs and Mrs. Laura (Erickson) Sherrill. The brothers are: William Erickson, John Erickson and Lewis Erickson. The subject of this biography was married, June 30, 1897, to Miss Dora Dolsen, who was born in Detroit, Michigan, June 14, 1877. Her father, William Dolsen, was born in Canada, April 17, 1843, and is now living in Seattle, where he follows the carpenter trade. The mother, Bertha (Chase) Dolsen, was born in New York city, April 7, 1853. The brothers of Mrs. Erickson are: Edward A. and William R. Dolsen, both born in Michigan, and now teamsters in Seattle. Her only sister, Estella A., is deceased. To Mr. and Mrs. Erickson has been born one child, Loyal, born February 22, 1901. In politics, Mr. Erickson is a decided Republican. He is a hard worker, and one who makes his labor count. Beginning with practically nothing, he has built up a home and property interests of which he may justly be proud.

DAVID H. LYEN is engaged in blacksmithing three and a half miles east and one-half mile north of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Washington, about eighty miles from Portland, June 2, 1860. His father was Ezekiel W. Lyen, a native of Kentucky, and moved from this state to Washington, settling in the Kittitas valley, where he raised thoroughbred racing stock. At one time he owned the fastest running mare in Kittitas valley. He was treasurer of Yakima county for four years, his term of office being from 1866 to 1873. The mother of David H. was Nancy Jane (Ballard) Lyen, born in Illinois, at Whitehall Fern. Her father was a farmer.

Mr. Lyen was educated in the common schools of Yakima and Kittitas counties until he was sixteen years old, at which time he went to work on his father's farm, devoting his attention chiefly to stock raising. In 1883 he filed on a homestead in the Kittitas valley and farmed it for five years with more than ordinary success. Then his father died from a paralytic stroke, leaving an estate valued at forty thousand dollars. His mother was appointed administratrix, but she gave the management of the trust principally to Mr. Lyen. He gave a mortgage on his farm to secure money to probate the estate. Then, on account of his trusting to hired advice, practically nothing was realized from the estate, and Mr. Lyen lost his farm under a mortgage. After this reverse, beginning in 1891, Mr. Lyen engaged in sheep-shearing during the spring months, and in running threshing machines in the fall. This work he followed for several years, and at different times has owned partnership interest in three different threshing outfits. During the summer and winter months he worked in blacksmith shops till he mastered the trade. Within the last two years he has learned horseshoeing under the best experts in the state. With experience thus acquired, in March, 1902, he opened up a blacksmith shop, and, in his work, has met with the success to be expected. His increasing trade now makes necessary the building of a larger shop. The new shop will be built at a point more convenient to patrons.

In 1852, Mr. Lyen's parents crossed the Plains and came to Oregon. They came with ox teams, and suffered the well-known hardships incident to such a journey. Besides David H., the children in the family were: John F., born in 1855, now farming in Kittitas county; Margaret C. and Mattie, both now dead; Mrs. Lavina (Lyen) Fowler, born in 1857, now living at Oakland, California, and Leander J. S. A., born in 1862, now a farmer of Kittitas county. Mr. Lyen is a Democrat, and an active worker in politics, but has no desire to hold public office. Fraternally, he is a member of the T. O. T. E., and in religious matters inclines to the Christian church. He is recognized as a man worthy of public trusts, but he is not an office-seeker.

CASPER E. REED resides five miles east and three miles north of Ellensburg, Washington, where he is engaged in farming and stock raising. He was born in Norway, December 30, 1871. His father, Jacob Reed, was a native of Norway, born in 1845, and was a tailor in the old country. He is now engaged in farming near Tacoma. His mother, Ann (Flolo) Reed, was born in Norway in 1846, of a family of farmers. Mr. Reed received his education partly in Norway and in Tacoma. He was graduated from the McCaulay Business college at Tacoma in the fall of 1889 and then engaged in the transfer business for about three years. He learned the printing trade when young. He sold out his transfer business and took charge of the estate of his father in Tacoma, valued at one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, prior to the panic of 1893. He spent three years in disposing of the property and closing up the estate. Then he moved to Kittitas county, June 15, 1897, and worked that summer for P. H. and C. P. Schnebly. For the following three years he followed the stock business and then leased one hundred and sixty acres of school land. This he has since purchased in partnership with E. G. Marks and has been cultivating it successfully. His brothers and sisters are: Anna (Reed) Foss, born in Norway, now the wife of a boat builder at Tacoma; Nels Reed, born in Norway and engaged in the mining business at Portland, Oregon; Carrie (Reed) Skibnes, wife of the Northern Pacific yardmaster at Tacoma; Harold Reed, born December 25, 1873, a tailor at San Francisco; Christine (Reed) Greenlaw, wife of a farmer near Tacoma; John Reed, in the logging business at Tacoma; Eilert Reed, a shingle bolt contractor of Everett; Jennie Reed, who is dead, and Albert Reed, a Tacoma druggist. Mr. Reed is a Democrat and a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen. He has accumulated a half-interest in one hundred and thirty head of cattle, owns ten horses, seventeen milch cows, one hundred and sixty acres of land, and a good house and barn. He is a breeder of blooded Poland-China hogs, one of which cost four hundred dollars.

JOHN CROCKER is engaged in stock raising and farming three miles east and three and one-half miles north of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Mecklenburg, Germany, December 11, 1844. His father, Otto Crocker, was born in Germany in 1797. He was quite wealthy, but his fortune was consumed in trying to regain his father's estate, which was long in litigation. Mr. Crocker's mother, Mary (Pastor) Crocker, was born in 1807, and was the daughter of a noted Lutheran preacher.

Mr. Crocker was educated in Germany, and at the age of sixteen left the common schools and took a year's course in an agricultural college. At the age of eighteen he engaged as foreman on a farm, where he remained five years. He then came to the United States and learned the cabinet-making trade, which he followed one year. Afterward, for five years, he farmed in New York state, and then moved to Kansas. There drought and grasshoppers caused the loss of all he had accumulated, and in March, 1888, he moved to Kittitas county, Washington. Here he worked in sawmills and on farms one year, leased a farm for a year and then filed on a homestead twenty miles from Ellensburg. To get supplies to this place it was necessary for him to build seven miles of road. He cultivated forty acres for six years, and then leased four hundred and eighty acres, which he worked for six years, during which time he purchased his present farm. He has two brothers and three sisters, all born in Germany, as follows: Mary (Crocker) Rabe, wife of a New York blacksmith; Sophia (Crocker) Costorfi, wife of a farmer in New York; Dora (Crocker) Holz, also the wife of a farmer in New York; Henry and Frederick Crocker, farmers in Germany.

Mr. Crocker was married in New York, November 20, 1870, to Miss Minnie Willet, who was born in Germany, November 3, 1850, and who died November 10, 1902. Her father died when she was six months old. Her mother, Dora (Ilet) Willet, was born in Germany and died in New York at the age of seventy-four years. Mrs. Crocker has one sister, Hanna (Willet) Fell, the wife of a farmer in New York.

Mr. Crocker is a member of the Republican party and belongs to the German Lutheran church. On his well improved one hundred and sixty acre farm he has a splendid home and commodious barn. He owns ninety head of cattle and sufficient number of horses and machinery to operated the farm with.

JAMES A. HOLCOMB, a farmer and dairyman living seven and one-half miles northeast of Ellensburg, is a typical Westerner, born in San Benito county, California, June 7, 1874. His parents were James A. and Mary (Rader) Holcomb. Soon after the birth of James A., his parents came to the Kittitas valley, and here the boy attended school until fourteen years of age. At the age indicated, he left school and for five years following worked for divers farmers in his neighborhood, and then embarked in the creamery business, assuming charge of the first creamery operated in the Kittitas valley. He continued in this capacity for two years, then returned to his native state (California) and engaged in the mercantile business at Fort Bidwell. After spending two years at that point he sold out his interests and returned to the Kittitas valley, arriving in the fall of 1898. The return journey was made by wagon, and consumed seventeen days. He spent his first year after returning in touring the surrounding country with a photographic outfit, which venture netted him a considerable sum. At the end of the year he sold his photographic outfit and embarked once more in the creamery business, which he ran in connection with an eighty-acre farm. On this farm he still makes his home. Over one-half of his land is in the highest state of cultivation and has natural irrigation. Mr. Holcomb was married at Cedarvale, California, September 9, 1896, to Miss Elmira Richardson, born in California, April 18, 1877. She is the daughter of James and Sardinia (Himes) Richardson, both of whom are now living in California, the state of Mrs. Holcomb's nativity. Mr. Richardson, her father, was born June 15, 1830, in the state of Maine, and by trade is a carpenter. In the year 1892 he was granted a patent by the government on a hay loader, which was manufactured in Stockton, California. Mrs. Richardson was born in New York state, and is of Scotch extraction.

Mr. Holcomb, of whom we write, has one sister, Maggie (Holcomb) Coon, born in California, 1872, who is now living in Washington. Mrs. Holcomb's brothers and sisters are: Perley Richardson and Satira (Richardson) Peck, both born and now living in California. Besides these she has two half-brothers and ten half-sisters. Mr. and Mrs. Holcomb have four children: Leota, born September 20, 1898; James L., March 26, 1899; Melisie M., August 30, 1900, and Rubbie Holcomb, March 14, 1902. Leota was born in California, and the remaining three in Kittitas valley. Mr. Holcomb is a member of the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, and is a Republican in politics. Both he and Mrs. Holcomb attend the First Christian church. He has eighty acres of first quality land, a commodious dwelling and all necessary stock and implements to operate his farm. He is a man not afraid to toil, and all his efforts are characterized by a degree of enthusiasm and perseverance that makes work pay. He is a man of sterling worth and honor, a valuable man in the community, and it may be said with truth that he has as many friends as he has acquaintances.

ISAAC F. CARLTON, who for many years resided on a farm five miles northeast of Ellensburg, was born in Atkinsville, North Carolina, February 15, 1827. He was the son of Bloom Carlton, who, before the war, was a slave-holder, and the mother was a native of North Carolina. Isaac F. graduated from the Atkinsville college at the age of nineteen. Immediately after graduation he came west to the state of Missouri, where he served for a number of years as overseer on a large farm. He left Missouri in the employ of the United States government as wagon-master of an expedition bound for Salt Lake City. Upon the outbreak of the Rebellion he enlisted in Company E, Fourteenth Kansas cavalry, and fought throughout the war, receiving at the battle of Poison Springs a saber wound on the shoulder. He was mustered out at Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation. After being discharged from the army he went to Kansas, where he was employed for a time as a sawyer in a large mill. He left Kansas in 1868 and went to Arkansas, thence to Nevada by mule team about the time of the Custer massacre. From Nevada he moved to Los Angeles, California, thence to Arizona, and again to Nevada, in which state he engaged in mining. This business he followed for nearly two years, after which he leased a hay ranch, which he worked for two years. His final move was from Nevada to Oregon, thence, in 1881, to the Kittitas valley. Here he filed on one hundred and sixty acres of land and at once launched upon the business of farming and stock raising. After eleven years of this pursuit he died on his Kittitas farm at the ripe old age of seventy-five. He had three sisters, Liza, Mary and Jane, all of whom are now dead.

Deceased was married at Fort Scott, Kansas, July 10, 1863, to Miss Rose H. Rollet, the daughter of Peter and Grace (O'Conner) Rollet, the former a native of England, and the latter of Dublin, Ireland. Both are now deceased. Mrs. Carlton's brothers and sisters were: John, Richard, Thomas, Mrs. Amelia (Rollet) Earl, Elizabeth and Mrs. Mary Ann Clark. The last named, the only one of them now living, resides in Canada and is one hundred and four years old. All were born in England. Mr. Carlton was a member of the Odd Fellow and Masonic fraternities. His wife, who survives him, is a member of the Eastern Star and Rebekah orders. He was a man of indomitable energy, sterling integrity and generous impulses. Though a gallant soldier and a patient sufferer, it was in civil life that his courage and magnanimity were most manifest. The malady to which he succumbed was one of long standing and which he spent a small fortune in combating. His patient forbearance during the years of harrowing pain to which he was subjected won for him the regard and esteem of all who knew him, and set an example of heroism worthy of emulation by those who survive him.

WILLIAM H. RADER, one of the well-known farmers of Kittitas county, resides on a farm lying three miles east and five miles north of Ellensburg. He is the son of Andrew J. and Margaret (Chance) Rader, both natives of Indiana. The elder Rader at the outbreak of the Rebellion endeavored to go to the front as a cavalryman, but at the last moment was debarred from service on account of physical disability. William H., our subject, received his education in his native state and in California. When twenty years of age, he left school and returned to his father's farm, where he worked for about five years, till he came west to Oregon. After spending a year in that state, he came to Kittitas county, attracted thither by the attractive opportunities offered in the new country, such as it was then. Upon his arrival, in 1879, he at once purchased one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, which has furnished him a home and livelihood from that day to this. The farm is small, but extremely well cultivated.

On July 11, 1880, Mr. Rader was united in marriage to Miss Ellen B. Bailes, who was born in Oregon, September 26, 1864. Her father, Healthly Bailes, is well known among the pioneers of the west. He was born in the year 1828, and is a minister of the Christian faith. The greater part of his life has been devoted to religious work throughout the states of Oregon and Washington. He now lives near Tillamook, Oregon. The mother, Sarah (Marshall) Bailes, spent the greater portion of her life laboring beside her husband. Mr. and Mrs. Rader have nine children, whose names are: Blossom, Floyd W., Bessie, Virginia, Benjamin, Ruth, Lena, Larem and Jay. All were born in the Kittitas valley—Blossom, the eldest, in 1881, and Jay, the youngest, in 1902.

Mr. Rader is a staunch Republican, but never accepted office at the hands of his party, preferring to assist his friends rather than to be elected to office. Both he and his wife are members of the Christian church, and are active workers. Fraternally, Mr. Rader is associated with the Modern Woodmen. He is an enthusiast in matters of education and for sixteen years has held the office of director in his school district. It was principally through his personal efforts that his district is now able to boast one of the finest school houses and equipages of the country district in the county. As thrifty in business as in public matters, he has acquired, besides his home farm, a section of farm land in Douglas county, half of which he purchased from his father. The farm which he makes his home is well stocked in every way. Successful in business, honest and public-spirited, he has risen to an enviable position in his community.

AUGUST HABERMANN is a farmer residing three miles east and five miles north of Ellensburg. He was born in Germany, October, 1854, and is the son of Frank and Annie (Linsner) Habermann, both natives of Germany. August attended school in his native country until he was thirteen, when he went to work on his father's farm. Three years later he entered the employ of others, giving his wages to his father. In this work he continued two years, when he decided to cast his lot in America. He came direct from the old country to Minnesota, and there worked on a farm for two years, after which he went to Nebraska. As that country was not to his liking he went to Kansas, and there filed on a homestead. He cultivated his land for four years, but during the time, lost so heavily from storms and drought that he left and came to this state. He stayed for a while in the Palouse country, and then pushed on to Seattle, where he worked a short time at the carpenter's trade. His next and final move was to Kittitas valley, whither he came in July, 1883. Here he purchased one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, which he has since farmed. To this original tract he has added from time to time, till now he has four hundred and eighty acres of land all under cultivation.

Mr. Habermann was married, in 1879, in the state of Kansas, to Miss Anna Luisner. He has one sister living, Mrs. Frances (Habermann) Rolinger, a native of Germany, now residing in the Kittitas valley. Another sister, Cicily Habermann, is now deceased. Mrs. Habermann knows but little of her family, since her parents both died when she was an infant. Nine children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Habermann, as follows: Rudolph, the eldest, was born in Seattle, February 14, 1881; Othilla, in Kansas, on October 21, 1882; Frank, in Kittitas county, December 25, 1884; Rosa, May 6, 1887; William, July 3, 1891; Nicholas, August 15, 1893; Albert, October 6, 1895; John, October 16, 1900, and Martin, who is the youngest of the family. Excepting Rudolph and Othilla, all the children were born in the Kittitas valley. Mr. and Mrs. Habermann are members of the Catholic church. The former is a Republican, and a staunch supporter of President Roosevelt. He has one of the most desirable farms in the valley, on which is a modern ten-room house, and two large barns. The place is stocked with thirty-two head of cattle, and horses and farming implements sufficient to carry on all agricultural pursuits. Mr. Habermann is regarded by his neighbors as a man whose word is as good as his bond. He is energetic and enterprising, and well endowed with the qualities which go to give a man weight in his community.

WILLIAM PREWITT, a farmer living four and one-half miles northeast of Ellensburg, was born in Missouri, March 27, 1864. He is the son of Joseph and Catherine (Harris) Prewitt, the former born in Missouri, the latter in Kansas, and both now living in the first named state.

William Prewitt's life up to the time when he was sixteen years of age was spent in the common schools of Texas. After leaving school he was three years in the employ of various farmers in Texas, but the fall of 1883 found him in the Kittitas valley. He was employed on farms and in sawmills in the valley for about eight years, during which time he purchased a farm. He then went to Okanogan county and "squatted" on a piece of land. After eight years he sold his claim and returned to his Kittitas valley farm, where he has remained continually since. He was married in Kittitas county, November 4, 1885, to Miss Amanda Coon, a native of Texas, born August 11, 1866. Mr. Prewitt has one brother and one sister, Robert Prewitt, born in Missouri, May 18, 1858, who is now a farmer in the Kittitas valley; and Catherine Ross, also born in Missouri, February 12, 1861, and now living on a farm in that state. Mrs. Prewitt's father, William Coon, a native of Ohio, born May 2, 1837, was a farmer and a Civil war veteran. He is now dead. Her mother, Edna (Freeman) Coon, was a native of Indiana, born February 5, 1830, to parents of Irish lineage. Mrs. Prewitt's brothers and sister are: John, David, Thomas and Martha Coon, all natives of Texas, born January 26, 1862, February 23, 1864, January 23, 1879, and May 30, 1883, respectively. John and David are at present living in the state of Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Prewitt have six children, as follows: Rose Reynolds, born in Kittitas county, October 1, 1886; Clara, born in Kittitas county, April 28, 1888; Eunice, born in Okanogan county, May 29, 1890; Joseph, born in Okanogan county, July 29, 1892; Lee, born in Kittitas county, August 20, 1894, and Grace Prewitt, born in Kittitas county, March 11, 1900.

Mr. Prewitt is a member of the Brotherhood of America, and politically is an active Democrat. He has a good two hundred and forty acre farm, well stocked and in a high state of cultivation. He is a well-to-do farmer and a man of high honor, and occupies an exalted position among his neighbors.

W. R. THOMAS. W. R. Thomas is a carpenter by trade, though he is now an extensive land owner and stock raiser in the Kittitas valley. He was born in Transylvania county, North Carolina, January 9, 1859. His father, William A. Thomas, born in North Carolina, 1821, was a farmer and stockman. He was a successful breeder of fancy trotting horses. The mother, Anthaler V. (McCall) Thomas, was the daughter of a North Carolina merchant and ante-bellum slave-holder. She was born in North Carolina in 1839, at Albert, a famous summer resort.

Mr. Thomas, after receiving a good education in Roan college, Tennessee, at the age of eighteen learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for some fifteen years in the states of Ohio, Kentucky and Washington. He came to the Kittitas valley in 1889 and worked at his trade for three and a half years in the employ of the Northern Pacific Company, at the end of which time he purchased eighty acres of land from this company, lying seven miles east of Ellensburg. This he cultivated for four years, when he sold at a good figure and purchased his present farm. He was married in his native state in 1880, to Harriet Hart, who subsequently died, leaving two children. Mr. Thomas afterward was married to Miss Bessie Cleveland. To this marriage six children have been born. Mr. Thomas has one sister, Laura L. Rhodes, a native of Georgia, whose husband is a farmer now living in North Carolina.

Mrs. Thomas was born in Illinois, June 22, 1881, and is the daughter of Benjamin and Elizabeth (Lewis) Cleveland, both natives of Illinois. The former, now deceased, was born in 1830 and was a Baptist minister of note. The latter was born in 1842, and now lives at North Yakima.

Mrs. Thomas has one sister and one brother, Josephine Smith, born in Illinois, October 10, 1868, now living at Portland, and Charles Cleveland, native of Illinois, now living in North Yakima. She had six brothers and sisters, now deceased. Mr. Thomas' children are: Anna, born in North Carolina, now living in Tacoma; Tillie, deceased; Gertrude, born in 1806; Wilburn, born in 1897; Emma, born in 1899; Harry, born in 1900; Teddy, born in 1902, and Veta, born in 1903; the latter six natives of Kittitas county. He is a member of the Masonic order, and for twelve years was a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity. He has always been an active Republican, but has ever refused to accept office at the hands of his party. He is one of the prosperous farmers of his county, having accumulated nine hundred and twenty acres of land, three hundred and twenty-five head of horses and cattle, a good house and commodious outbuildings, a carpenter shop, and holds shares in a co-operative creamery plant.

He is truly a self-made man. When but twelve years of age, subject's father died, and a little later the mother departed this life; the care of the entire family devolving upon him, which responsibility he met faithfully. By self-sacrifice and hard work he has educated his younger sisters, and cared for all the needs of the family. He has from his earliest manhood been a public-spirited and energetic man, and has made a success of every undertaking.

E. B. WASSON lives on a farm southeast of Ellensburg. He was born in Vernon county, Missouri, April 7, 1871, the son of John and Amanda (Blackwell) Wasson. His father was born in Belfast, Ireland, and died in 1874. The mother was a native of St. Louis, Missouri, and died when E. B., our subject, was but six months old. He attended school until he was sixteen, and then was forced to go to work at whatever he could find to do in order to earn a living. He came to this state from Missouri in 1880, and found employment among various mills and mines for a period of eight years, till he purchased his present farm in Kittitas valley. His sister and two brothers are: Lillian, Richard A. and R. Lee, all three born in Missouri. Besides these, two sisters, Mrs. Nancy (Wasson) Colin and Jennie Wasson, are dead.

On April 20, 1899, Mr. Wasson married Miss Clara D. Killmore, a native of Kittitas valley, born October 20, 1878. She is the daughter of William D. and Josephine (Rego) Killmore. The mother was born in Indiana, and the father in New York state. Her brother and sisters are: John S., Mrs. Ida Bull, Lettie, Effie and Kate. Two children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Wasson, Josephine, born February 7, 1900, and Delos J., born February 20, 1903. Fraternally, Mr. Wasson is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the Woodmen of the World orders, and in religious matters, though reared in the Presbyterian faith, he at present has no church connections. In politics, he is a staunch Republican. He owns one hundred and seventy acres of land, which is in a high state of cultivation. The property is well stocked with all necessary farming implements and stock with which to carry on agricultural pursuits. Left an orphan at an early age, and thrown upon his own resources to make his way in life, he has faced all adversities with a courage that conquers, and is now counted one of the substantial citizens of the Kittitas valley.

JOHN S. KILLMORE is of the well-known pioneer family of Kittitas county headed by William D. and Josephine (Rego) Killmore. He was born in the state of Missouri, February 3, 1873, and now lives some four miles southeast of Ellensburg. His father was born in New York state, and his mother in Indiana. Mr. Killmore came to the Kittitas valley during his infancy, and he has grown up here, receiving his education in the grammar schools of the county, and in the state normal school at Ellensburg. His original intent was to fit himself for the profession of teaching, but abandoning that idea, he left school when twenty-four years of age and went to Alaska. For some four months there he operated a freighting outfit between Dyea and Sheepcamp, with headquarters at the former station. At first he was successful in this venture, but later on as business began to decrease, he sold his outfit and returned to the Kittitas valley, where he purchased one hundred and thirty acres of land, which has since furnished him a home and livelihood. He was married in the valley, April 20, 1899, to Catherine Younger, a native of Germany, born October 5, 1876. Her father, Peter Younger, is of German birth, born July 10, 1842. He is a machinist and farmer by occupation, and was a veteran of the German army. He now lives in Washington. The mother is Marie (Coleman) Younger, born in Germany, March 10, 1850, now living in this state. Mr. Killmore has five sisters, as follows: Mrs. Ida Bull, Lettie, Mrs. Clara Wasson, Katherine and Effie. Mrs. Bull and Mrs. Wasson are living in Kittitas valley, and the others with their parents. Mrs. Killmore's brother and sisters are: Marie, Jacob, Pauline and Bertha Younger, all of whom are living in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Killmore have three children, William, born May 27, 1900; Marie and Margerite, twins, born October 10, 1901. Fraternally, Mr. Killmore is connected with the Odd Fellows, the Brotherhood of American Yeomen and the Masonic orders. In politics, he is a strong Roosevelt man. His farm is well stocked and improved, and is among the best in the valley. He bears a spotless reputation among his neighbors, and socially, as well as financially, he is ranked among the foremost men of his community.

MARY S. RUGG. Mary S. Rugg, proprietress of the Moore lodging house, is one of the thriving business women of Ellensburg. She was born in Tuscombina, Miller county, Missouri, in 1846, the daughter of Thomas and Mary (McCubbin) Ellison. Her father was born in Kentucky, in 1815, and died in 1888. He was a pioneer of Missouri and Kansas, and for three years was a soldier in the latter named state. Crossing the Plains in the early fifties, he settled first in California, then in Oregon, and finally in the Kittitas valley, Washington, in the year 1880. Mary (McCubbin) Ellison was born in Greer county, Kentucky, in 1818. She crossed the Plains and with her husband endured the hardships attending pioneer life, dying in Kittitas county in 1887.

The first fifteen years of Mrs. Rugg's life were spent in the state of Missouri. In 1851 her parents emigrated to Kansas and settled in Lawrence, where, and at other points in Kansas, they lived a number of years. She was married in Kansas to Jesse Adams, in 1858. She removed to Washington in 1883, and, being at that time a widow with two small children, she experienced for a time great difficulty in supporting herself and family. She engaged in the restaurant business first of all, and later, in 1890, she opened a lodging house in her present quarters. With the lodging house she conducted a dining room, only temporarily, however, as she found the work too heavy for the good of her health, and dispensed with the boarding house feature, confining her business exclusively to keeping roomers. Her first husband, Mr. Adams, was a native of Illinois, born in 1840. His father was a farmer. When Mrs. Rugg came to Ellensburg she was completely without means for the support of her children, but by dint of hard and persistent effort she succeeded in not only raising her children in comfort, but bought and paid for the property in which she conducts her business, and has furnished her house in the most up-to-date style. Fortunately she lost nothing in the fire of 1880, although she was here at the time it occurred. In 1885 she was married to James Moore, being a widow at that time. Her brothers and sisters are: Lydia Parkinson, Indian Territory; William Ellison, Lookout Mountain, near Cle-Elum; Delaine Ellison, and Henry Ellison, Oregon; Mattie Ripley, Idaho; Lewis F. Ellison, who lives on the old homestead, near Thorp, and owns a sawmill on Tatum creek; George, California. Death robbed her of one brother and one daughter: John Ellison and Dora Green. John Ellison was once assessor of Kittitas county. Her daughter, Mrs. Icia Fullen, lives in Ellensburg.

In November, 1898, Mrs. Adams was married to Daniel D. Rugg, a printer and book-binder by trade, who was born in Vermont in 1849, and came to Ellensburg in 1890. His father was Daniel B. Rugg, a native of Vermont, and a veteran of the Civil war, being a member of the Fifty-third Massachusetts infantry, and died in the army. Amelia C. (Thompson) Rugg, mother of Daniel D., was a native of Massachusetts. Mr. Rugg grew to manhood in his native state. Learning the printer's trade, he subsequently followed it as a means of livelihood for the greater part of his life. He came west in 1878 and settled at Blue Hills, Nebraska. Later he went to Colorado, where he followed railroading for a time. He also followed railroad work to some extent after coming to Ellensburg in 1890. He tried ranching for a while, but that venture not proving a success, he again took up work in town. He was married to Mary S. Moore in 1898, and has since continued with her in the lodging house business. He has a brother, William W. Rugg, and a sister, Amelia A. Rugg. He is a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity, and in political matters gauges his standard by the man, irrespective of party. Mrs. Rugg belongs to the Christian church. She owns four lots in Ellensburg and eighty acres of timber land on Tatum creek, for which she has been offered twice the price she paid for it. She also loans money and holds some mortgages on town property. Her lodging house business has grown from comparatively nothing to one that pays one hundred and sixty dollars per month.

GEORGE DAVIS HOGUE, farmer and stock raiser, owns a fine one hundred and sixty acre farm about seven miles west of Ellensburg, where he resides. The farm can all be irrigated and is well set with fruit trees. Mr. Hogue was born in Knox county, Illinois, January 8, 1860, the son of George and Mary (Killen) Hogue. His father, a carpenter by trade, was born in Pennsylvania, June 23, 1813, and moved to Ohio in 1850. He went from Ohio to Illinois and from there to Nebraska, where he died in 1883. The mother was a native of Pennsylvania; she died in Illinois in 1860, at the age of thirty-three. They had seven children: Jennie D., wife of John A. Wilson, Oakland, California; Hester A., wife of H. A. Brown, Brock, Nebraska; Emily, wife of T. F. Jacobs, Montezuma, Iowa; Matthew, who died in Oakland, California, in 1902, and Mary and Grace, who died in infancy. Mr. Hogue received his education in the common schools of Nebraska and attended the state normal at Peru in 1878. Subsequently he engaged in farming near Peru, which pursuit he followed until the spring of 1881, when he came to Seattle, Washington, and the same fall walked over the Snoqualmie pass to the Kittitas valley. He returned to the east in 1880, but realizing that the west was preferable as a home, he came back the same year and settled on his present place.

He was married at Ellensburg, Washington, October 25, 1885, to Sina C. Maxey, a daughter of Simon W. and Minerva T. (Whitenburg) Maxey. Her father was born in Jefferson county, Illinois, August 9, 1832, and is a well-known Kittitas farmer and fruit grower. He settled in Kittitas valley in 1882. Mr. Maxey served as one of the fruit commissioners at the world's fair held in Chicago, and is now the county's fruit inspector. Mrs. Hogue's mother was born in Blount county, Tennessee, March 26, 1838, and died in Ellensburg in 1902. Mrs. Hogue was born in Jefferson county, Illinois, October 15, 1866, and was the youngest of six children, her brothers and sisters being: Brovautas A., born January 17, 1859; Franceska D., born January 18, 1862; Morton M., born July 4, 1860; William C., born April 18, 1863; Alzora M., born January 12, 1857, died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Hogue are the parents of four children: Maxey G., born December 3, 1886; Letah G., born February 6, 1889; Glenn H., born October 21, 1891; and Rhea E., born December 8, 1896, all of whom are natives of Kittitas county. Mr. Hogue and family are members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is independent in his political views, a modest and successful man, and well liked in the community in which he resides.

MRS. ANNA M. (STEVENS) PEASE, widow of the late John Merchant Pease, is engaged in farming on the homestead three and one-half miles southwest of Ellensburg, Washington, where she and her husband settled in 1878. She is a worthy woman and commands the esteem of all who know her. She was born in Miama, Ohio, March 9, 1846. Her father, James H. Stevens, was born in Virginia, in 1815, of English parentage, and died November 2, 1893. He was a contractor and builder. Her mother, Ann F. (Glass) Stevens, was born in Ohio in 1820 and is still living. Mrs. Pease crossed the Plains with her parents in an ox wagon in 1852. They left Miama in April and arrived at Santa Cruz, California, the following September. Later the family moved to Ione, Amador county, California, where Mrs. Pease received her early education.

Mrs. Pease was married April 6, 1864. J. M. Pease, her husband, was born in Maine, September 20, 1830, and learned the cooper trade. When he was twenty-two years old he left home for the west and came to California by the water route, around the Horn. He was engaged in the butchering business at Ione at the time of his marriage. In 1865, he moved to Gold Run, California, and engaged in mining there until 1878, when he moved to the present family home in Washington. Mrs. Pease has the following brothers and sisters: James B. Stevens, now engaged at the United States custom house at San Francisco; Mrs. J. B. Leach, of Los Angeles, who died August 12, 1903; Mrs. C. H. Willard, of Santa Paula, California; Mrs. Hellen McPhail, of Reno, Nevada; Mrs. Lizzie Doulton, of Santa Barbara, California, and Thomas C. Stevens, also of Santa Barbara. She is the mother of six children. The eldest, Edgar B., born January 4, 1865, is a native of Ione, California. The others were born in Gold Run, California. They are: Henry W., born October 28, 1868; William M., born January 28, 1871; Carmi R., born February 24, 1873; Sherwood O., born June 6, 1875, and Helen B., born January 20, 1878.

Mr. Pease, deceased, was a member of Ione lodge, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, in California. He was a staunch Republican, but was not active in matters of politics. Both he and his wife were members of the Methodist Episcopal church. He passed away May 31, 1899, and is interred in the Independent Order of Odd Fellows cemetery at Ellensburg. Since his death Mrs. Pease, our subject, has continued to reside on the farm, and has manifested her ability as a manager and business woman. The place has been greatly improved and enhanced in value by her energy and business tact.

CLARENCE WILLIAM PEASE is a farmer, residing six miles and a half northwest of Ellensburg, Washington. Farming has been his vocation since he attained his majority, and he makes a specialty of wheat and small grain. He was born in Parker Prairie, Ottertail county, Minnesota, June 2, 1876. His father, Edgar Pease, was born in Iowa in 1853. The mother, Rebecca L. (Logan) Pease, was born in Wisconsin in 1855. Clarence W. attended the common schools of his native county until 1883, when his father moved to Kittitas county, Washington. There he was permitted to complete his education in the public schools. When he was twenty years old he left home, bought one hundred and sixty acres of land, and engaged in farming. He now lives on this place and has about ninety acres of it under plow. His two brothers are Ernest B. and Hugh L. Pease. He has one sister, Louisa L.

On March 11, 1903, Mr. Pease married Miss Mabel Barker. Miss Barker's father died when she was an infant and she called her step-father, John Taylor, her father. Her mother, Hatty (Bridgman) Taylor, was a native of Minnesota. Mrs. Pease was born June 2, 1883, and has one brother, Frederick, born in 1888. Mr. Pease was a member of the Washington state militia from 1895 until he received an honorable discharge in 1898. He has been prosperous and now has three hundred and sixty acres of land. He is well thought of wherever known, and is of that type of men who make many friends and few enemies.

JAMES ANDERSON, engaged in the dairy business one mile south of Ellensburg, Washington, is a native of Denmark. His father and mother were both natives of that country. Andrew Anderson, the father, was a farmer. Carrie (Olson) Anderson, the mother, was born in 1804. Mr. Anderson has been in the United States since 1879. He landed in New York and thence proceeded to Webster City, Iowa, where he secured farm work. This vocation he followed for nine years, but on April 5, 1888, started west and located on his present home. He owns seventeen acres of excellent land near Ellensburg and a herd of good dairy cows. His brothers and sisters are Matthew, Olie, Annie, Lena and Mary Anderson. Such education as is his he obtained in his native land before he came to this country. He took out his naturalization papers at Webster City, Iowa, in 1880. Mr. Anderson was married in Denmark, November 1, 1877, to Bertha M. Swanson, who was born in Helmstadt, September 21, 1847. Her father, Swenuhan J. Swanson, was a farmer and a native of Sweden. The mother, Ellen (Croft) Swanson, also a native of Sweden, was born in 1819, and is now living at Webster City, Iowa. She has two brothers, Charlie and Albert, and a sister named Anna. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson have three children. The eldest, Andros Edward Anderson, was born in Denmark, March 10, 1879, and is a locomotive fireman. The eldest daughter, Carlyn Sylvie, was born in Webster City, Iowa, December 29, 1880, and is teaching school in Okanogan county, Washington. The youngest child, Lillian Elfreda Anderson, was born near Ellensburg, Washington, October 11, 1890. All of the family are members of the Lutheran church. The children are attentive to the well-regulated standards under which they have been reared and now make complete a family circle of which their parents are justly proud. Wherever known Mr. and Mrs. Anderson are highly esteemed.

ERNEST THEODORE SANDMEYER is a successful farmer, living three miles and a half southeast of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Basel, Switzerland, March 5, 1874, and is the son of John H. Sandmeyer, also a native of that country, and a descendant of a family compelled to flee from Germany to Switzerland at the beginning of last century, for the sake of liberty and freedom of thought. The elder Sandmeyer invented the machine which is used for stamping out watch cases, for which he has a patent in the United States. He was a watchmaker and patented a number of other inventions, which the family now own. The mother of Ernest T. was Mary (Tschudy) Sandmeyer, a native of Switzerland.

Mr. Sandmeyer received his education in the public schools of Switzerland, which included a two years' course in a high school. He sailed from Havre, France, in August, 1887, and landed at New York, proceeding thence to Columbus, Nebraska, where he joined his uncle. There he engaged in farming until 1893, when he moved to The Dalles, Oregon, and made investments in the sheep business. Two years later he moved to his present home, the "Lowden" place.

Mr. Sandmeyer's brothers and sisters are: Mary, now Mrs. Graber, of Basel, Switzerland;

Matilda, now Mrs. J. O'Neil, of Chicago; Max, an electrical engineer in Chicago; Henry, a student at the Chicago university; Arthur, a machinist, and Olga, a student, both residents of Chicago. He was married in Princeville, Oregon, July 16, 1899, to Miss Emma Yaisli, who was born near Columbus, Nebraska, September 11, 1878. Her father, John Yaisli, was born in Switzerland, of aristocratic parentage, and moved to Nebraska, there to engage in farming. The mother, Mary (Rickli) Yaisli, was also a native of Switzerland. Mrs. Sandmeyer's brothers and sisters are Ida, now Mrs. F. Souers, of Akron, Ohio; John, Otto, and Lena, now Mrs. Jacob Kesser; Peter and Benjamin, both sheep raisers. All of them reside in Oregon. Mrs. Kesser lives at Antelope, and the others at Cross Keys. Mr. and Mrs. Sandmeyer have two daughters and one son: Nellie Mary, born August 21, 1900; Isabella, born December 1, 1901, and Theodore Otto, born August 20, 1903. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sandmeyer are members of the Dutch Reformed church. They have a neat home, and a well tilled farm, which comprises one hundred and sixty acres of fertile land which is all under irrigation. The place is peculiarly well adapted to the growing of hay. The farm buildings are commodious and convenient. Property interests, good character, and industry have given to Mr. and Mrs. Sandmeyer a standing creditable in any community.

JOHN BULL, engaged in farming and the raising of stock on a fine two hundred and forty acre farm seven miles southeast of Ellensburg, Washington, has been a resident of Kittitas county all his life, having been born in that county May 12, 1873, of pioneer parents. His father, Walter A. Bull, was born in Albany, New York, July 20, 1838, and was in the commissary department and Freedman bureau during the war. He later engaged in the construction of the Union Pacific, and subsequently was a pioneer resident and prominent citizen of Kittitas county up to the time of his death. Mr. Bull's mother was Jenny Olmstead, daughter of J. D. Olmstead, who came to Washington from Ottawa, Illinois, in 1871, and at one time was in the mercantile business.

Mr. Bull received his education in the common schools of Kittitas county and remained with his father until the latter's death. He was one of a family of five children. His brothers and sisters are: Cora, now the wife of Charles S. Wright of Woodmeare, Long Island; Lewis, Charles and Grant Bull, the last two named being residents of Kittitas county. He was married November 1, 1890, to Miss Ida Killmore, daughter of William D. and Josephine (Rego) Killmore. Her brothers and sisters are: John S., Lettie V., Clara D., now Mrs. E. B. Wasson; Katie M. and Effie R. Mrs. Killmore, mother of the above named, was born in Kittitas county, November 8, 1874. Mr. and Mrs. Bull have two children. M. J. Jessie, the eldest, was born February 2, 1901, and M. Lorine was born November 11, 1902.

MICHAEL T. SIMMONS is one of the most successful farmers of eastern Washington and lives about five and one-half miles southeast of Ellensburg, Washington. He was born in Mason county, Washington, October 8, 1862, and it was in that county he did his first farming. Thereby hangs a tale, which Mr. Simmons relates with considerable amusement. In planting his first vegetable garden he devoted some of the space to beans. Shortly after they had been planted Mr. Simmons was surprised to see the seed beans coming out of the ground on top of the stalk, and naturally decided they were growing upside down, and he promptly proceeded to put them in the ground again. But he has since learned more of the science of farming, in which calling he has been so successful that today he is considered one of the best agriculturists in the county. Within the past five years he has brought his present farm from a badly run-down condition to a high state of cultivation, well equipped with a fine house, barn and other buildings.

Mr. Simmons is the son of Michael T. and Elizabeth (Kindred) Simmons. The father was born in Kentucky, August 14, 1814. He crossed the Plains by ox team in 1844 and was one of the first settlers in Oregon. At Deschutes falls he erected the first mill in the Northwest, and also established the town of Newmarket, now known as Tumwater. He took a prominent part in engagements against the Indians in pioneer days. His death occurred in 1866, and that of his wife, on March 23, 1891. She was born in Indiana, February 15, 1820.

Michael T. was educated in the pioneer schools of Mason county, and when nine years old began work in a logging camp. When seventeen he learned the shoemaking trade. Afterward he was employed on the preliminary survey of the Northern Pacific and from 1881 to 1884 was engaged at various labors in Kittitas county. Then he engaged in logging on Puget Sound, until 1891, when he began farming on Oyster bay, Mason county. He moved to Kittitas county in 1896 and rented land until 1898, when he bought his present farm. His brother, Christopher C., was the first white child born in the western part of Washington. The other brothers and sisters are: George W., David K., Enos F., a physician; McDonald, Benjamin F., Charlotte E., Douglass W., Mary, Catherine and Charles Mason. Mr. Simmons was married in Lewis county, Washington, October 11, 1885, to Miss Louise F. Gavitt, daughter of Peter and Eliza (Rosecrans) Gavitt. Her father and mother were natives of Susquehanna county, Pennsylvania. The father was born in 1827, and was of French descent, but his mother was a lineal descendant of Roger Williams. His wife was born in 1836, and was the mother of six children, Polly, Ruby Annabell, Eliza Jane, Richmond Lee, Peter M. and Louise F., wife of Mr. Simmons. Mr. and Mrs. Simmons have two children, Lee Gavitt, born in Mason county, August 13, 1886, and Ruby Elizabeth, born in the same county, May 8, 1891. Mr. Simmons is a staunch Republican, and is one of the leading farmers and most active citizens of the county.

JAMES WATSON is one of the first citizens of the county and owns and farms three hundred and twenty acres of level valley land, all under irrigation, three and one-half miles southeast of Ellensburg, Washington. The place is well stocked with cattle, horses, etc., and Mr. Watson is considered one of the most substantial and prosperous citizens of the valley. He was born near Glasgow, Scotland, in 1849, the son of James Watson, a machinist, and Jennette (Walker) Watson, both of whom were born and died in Scotland. He has two brothers and an uncle living in San Francisco. Peter Watson, one brother, is in the wool business there. The other, Benjamin Watson, and the uncle, William Watson, are machinists. Mr. Watson received his early education in Scotland. At the age of fifteen he began his apprenticeship as a machinist and served five years and one-half at the forge and lathe; then, in 1869, he moved to Canada, where for a time he was employed by a brewery at Lachene. In the spring of 1870 he went to Chicago, where he remained two years. Later he traveled considerably throughout the Northwest, visiting San Francisco and points in Arizona and British Columbia. He finally settled, in June, 1877, upon his present farm. At that time his nearest neighbors were George W. Carver, R. P. Tjossem, and the "Robbers' Roost," where John A. Shoudy and John Stewart conducted a store. This store was the only source of supplies at that time, but later J. D. Olmstead established another store about seven miles southeast at a place now known as the Nolan farm. In 1877 Mr. Watson acted as courier for the settlers during the time when Chief Joseph and the other Indians were on the warpath. Mr. Watson went to the mouth of the Wenatche and had a meeting with Chief Moses, the purpose of which was to urge Moses to remain friendly to the whites and not to join the Joseph band of marauders, and in accomplishing this object he was entirely successful. Mr. Watson took out his first citizenship papers in Arizona in 1875 and the second papers in Yakima county. He cast his first vote for Glover Cleveland for president. He has always been a Democrat in politics, and in religion is an adherent of the Presbyterian church.

JOHN WILLIAM GERMAN is a farmer and stockman, living eleven miles northeast of Ellensburg; was born in McClennan county, Texas, November 7, 1864, and is the son of Granderson F. and Maranda (Davis) German, born in Chatham, North Carolina, March 20, 1819, and Anderson county, Tennessee, August 13, 1823, respectively. The father died in Kittitas county, May 20, 1902; the mother is still living with the son. Granderson F. German was a physician, widely known throughout Kittitas county, and a veteran of the Seminole and Mexican wars. In the latter named war he served under Col. Thomas Jessup and General Scott. His service was principally on the Pacific coast. Mr. German received his early education in the common schools of Wise county, Texas. He came to Kittitas county October 20, 1884, in company with his father. Settling near his present home, he embarked upon his career as a stockman and farmer. He went to Okanogan county later, and remained in the stock raising business there for five years, when he returned to the Kittitas valley and purchased the old Tillman Houser homestead, 1892, consisting of one hundred and sixty acres, and this tract has furnished him a home since that time. His principal crop is hay. The sisters and brothers of Mr. German are: Elizabeth Pendegast, Atoka, Indian Territory; Rachel Johnson, Bridgeport, Douglas county, Washington; Frances F. Prigmore, Kittitas valley; Maranda Gage, Kittitas county; Robert D., M. D., Kennedy, Indian Territory; and Malisie Bushon, Childress county, Texas. Mr. German was married in the Kittitas valley, November 15, 1888, to Miss Pernina Houser, born in Kittitas county, near Ellensburg, December 27, 1859. She enjoys the distinction of having been the first white child born in the Kittitas valley. Her father was Tillman Houser, the oldest settler in the valley, and Louisa (Workiser) Houser, a native of Pennsylvania, a sketch of whose lives appears elsewhere in this history. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. German are: Sarah Messerly, Wenatchee; Harrison, who lives on the old Fulton ranch; Clarence J., Kittitas county; Alvy, North Yakima, and Amelia Churchill, Kittitas county. Mr. and Mrs. German have one son, Grover Cleveland, born April 15, 1892, near Ellensburg. The former holds membership in the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, Fairview Lodge, 959. He has always voted the Democratic ticket, and was brought up under the influence of the Baptist church. Mr. German has large stock interests throughout the Kittitas valley, and extensive tracts of grazing land leased, upon which he pastures his stock.

He is rated in financial circles, and is among the most prominent and highly respected citizens of his county.

AUGUST NESSELHOUS was born in Germany in April, 1838, and is now a farmer residing eleven miles northeast of Ellensburg. His father was Xaver F. Nesselhaus, born in 1806, of German parents, and during the greater part of his life was a grape grower on the Rhine. Elizabeth (Echer) Nesselhaus, the mother, was born of German parents, in 1808. Mr. Nesselhaus came to the United States with his father in 1847, settling at St. Louis, Missouri. What education he has he acquired in Germany, not having had an opportunity to attend school in this country. By the time he had reached the age of twenty he had become master of the cooper's trade, and in that capacity worked steadily until the outbreak of the Civil war, when he enlisted in the First volunteer infantry of Iowa, Company D, under Captain Mathius. He was in the battle of Wilson Creek, and saw General Lyon fall mortally wounded. Besides this fight, he was a participant in many other skirmishes. He was mustered out of service in September, 1861, at St. Louis, having received a severe wound in the hip which disqualified him for further duty. Returning home, he engaged in farming until in 1862, when he crossed the Plains with an ox outfit and settled at Baker City, Oregon. After a brief sojourn there and in Boise he went to Portland and resumed the work of cooper. There he followed his trade until 1866, when he returned east, via the Panama route, going direct to Burlington, Iowa, where his father then lived. In July, 1870, he came west to the Kittitas valley and took a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, which he at once began to improve, leading the life of a bachelor for over twenty years. In 1890 he returned east again, and was united in marriage to Miss Anna Weidemeier, October 15, 1890. Mr. Nesselhaus' brothers and sisters are: Robert, Sophie, now Mrs. Frank Cooz, Davenport, Iowa; Mathias and Mrs. Amie St. Croix, Moline, Illinois. The parents of Mrs. Nesselhaus were Ferdinand and Gertrude (Stienkule) Weidemeier, both natives of Prussia, the former born in 1824 and the latter in 1826. They were married in 1852, and came to the United States in 1856, and settled at St. Louis. Mrs. Nesselhaus was born in Burlington, Iowa, July 20, 1863. She has four brothers—John E., George H., Adolph and Joseph, all residing in Burlington, Iowa, except George H., who lives at Ellensburg. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Nesselhaus are: Gertrude M., born October 24, 1891; Ida E., born February 7, 1893; Robert F., born October 3, 1895; Matilda A., born May 12, 1898; and Clara E., born October 5, 1900. Both Mr. and Mrs. Nesselhous are members of the Roman Catholic church. Mr. Nesselhous is a member of David Ford Post, No. 11, G. A. R., and in national politics is a Republican, but in local matters places the man before the party. He is an extremely active, public spirited citizen, and generous to a fault; is a good neighbor and staunch friend.

WILLIAM DENNIS is by trade a turner, but is now engaged in farming and stock raising in the Kittitas valley, twelve and one-half miles northeast of Ellensburg. He was born November 26, 1849, in New York City, and is the son of George and Mary (Eurbert) Dennis, both natives of Germany. George Dennis was a tailor, and came to the United States when a young man.

The early life of Mr. Dennis was spent in Newark, New Jersey, and there he received his education. At the age of seventeen he ran away from home in order to take part in the Civil war. He served first in the Sixth West Virginia cavalry, being a member of Company A. After six months with this command he enlisted in Company B of the same regiment under Captain Clark. He was stationed at Clarksburg, West Virginia, the regiment being divided among other regiments. Next he was attached to the Eighth Ohio in 1863, when he saw service at the battle of Antietam. He also fought in the battles of Martinsburg, Cedar Swamp, and others of minor importance. At Martinsburg he was captured by the enemy under General Mosby. In company with a negro, Private Dennis had wandered away from his command on a foraging expedition, and was surprised by the enemy, with the result that both he and his colored companion were taken prisoners of war. However, they escaped while passing through a wooded country, and made their way to the army of General Sheridan, who saw them safely back to their regiment. Mr. Dennis was discharged from the army at Wheeling, West Virginia, and returned to his home in Newark. From Newark he went to Texas and located in Dallas. Afterward he engaged in driving cattle up the James Chris-holm trail in the employ of Colonel Anley. After six years of this life he went to Nebraska and farmed for three years. With a team and wagon he then started on the long journey across the Plains to Baker City, Oregon, arriving at his destination just six weeks later, having made the quickest trip on record. He came to Kittitas county in 1882, and settled on the place where the slaughter house now stands. He lived there one year, when he located on his present place of residence at the mouth of the Coleman canon.

In the state of Nebraska, 1873, Mr. Dennis married Miss Matilda Bartelt, a native of Wausau, Wisconsin, born January 1, 1854. She was the daughter of John and Matilda (Lust) Bartelt, both of Germany. The father was born in Hamburg, and was a farmer and wagon maker. He came to the United States in 1844, bringing with him his family, among whom was Matilda, then a child, and afterwards the wife of Mr. Dennis. The two were married in Madison, Wisconsin, in 1851. Mrs. Dennis' brothers and sisters are: William, living at Waverly, and station agent at Fairfield; Charles, Fairfield; John, Waverly, a merchant; Herman, a farmer near Fairfield; Lenna, now Mrs. Walter Swan, Kennewick, and Tennie, now the widow of Charles Morris, near Fairfield. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis are: Edward William, born in Harland county, Nebraska, May 2, 1875; Laura Mes-serly, born in Walla Walla county, October 9, 1878, now of Wenatchee; Mary Shelton, born June 2, 1880, in Walla Walla county; Ollie Joyce, born March 10, 1883, Ellensburg; Jesse, born January 5, 1886, at home; Harry, born February 20, 1888, at home; Jennie, born November 13, 1892; and Lena, born April 13, 1894, now living at home. For three years Mr. Dennis served as United States deputy marshal in Harland county, Nebraska. He was raised in the Catholic faith, but has no marked religious connections at present. In 1901 he was so unfortunate as to lose his house and contents by fire; his total loss being about $2,000, partially covered by insurance. His present land holdings amount to eight hundred acres, most of which is in a high state of cultivation. He is living a peaceful and prosperous life; his children have the advantage of a first-class school, and, taken altogether, the family is comfortably and happily situated. Mr. Dennis is an active worker, and is highly esteemed by his neighbors.

FRANK C. BARNHART. Twelve miles northeast of Ellensburg lies the farm of Frank C. Barnhart, farmer and stockman. His birth-place and date of birth are Webster county, Missouri, May 28, 1858. He is the son of Thomas H. and Mary (Letterman) Barnhart. His father was born in Tennessee, July 15, 1835, of German parentage, and the mother was born of English parents, in Indiana, June 14, 1835. She died August 5, 1902. Mr. Barnhart was educated in the common schools of his native state. He came to Yakima in 1876 and went into the dairy business. In 1877 he came to the Kittitas valley, took up the homestead in which he still lives, and engaged in farming and the raising of stock. In 1883 he went into the sheep business, continuing in it for three years, when he sold out, but later was forced to take his sheep back.

He continued to farm and run sheep until 1899, when he found the work too heavy for his health and again parted with the sheep, and has since confined himself to farming. During his career as a stockman, he made a specialty of Spanish Merino sheep and Durham cattle, and his flocks and herds were among the finest in the valley. Mr. Barnhart's brothers and sisters are: William Frederick, a commercial traveler, California; George W., a farmer in the Methow valley; Mrs. Hily Ann Rader, Methow valley; Addie (Mrs. J. P. Rader) Methow; Mrs. Sarah Jane Witheral, Yakima valley; and Ivy Johnson, whose husband is a farmer and stockman of the Methow valley. Mr. Barnhart was married in the Kittitas valley, June 29, 1879, to Miss Matilda L. Bailes, born in Umatilla county, Oregon, August 26, 1862. She is the daughter of Keathley and Sarah Ann (Marshall) Bailes, the former a native of Indiana, born in 1825, of English-Dutch descent; and the latter born in Missouri, about 1832, of Dutch extraction. The parents are now living at Tillamook, Oregon. The fathers of Mr. and Mrs. Barnhart crossed the Plains together from Missouri to Oregon in 1861. They started with a herd of cattle, which was stolen by thieves en route. The sisters and brothers of Mrs. Barnhart are: Mrs. Mary Ann Pedigo, Cowlitz county; Mrs. Elizabeth Jane Brown, Ellensburg; Mrs. Emmaline Royse, Oregon; Andy Bailes, a farmer of the Kittitas valley; Mrs. Parthina C. Grissom, Ellensburg; James W. Bailes, Ellensburg; George W. Bailes, Tillamook, Oregon, and Mrs. Mattie I. Jackson, Cowlitz county, Washington. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Barnhart are: Pleasant Frederick, born October 7, 1881, now a farmer and dairyman; Sarah Estella, born July 9, 1885; Lizzie May, born October 18, 1887; Walter T., born February 10, 1889; Ernest, born November 7, 1890; Albert B., born August 18, 1892; Jesse W., born October 4, 1894; Theresie Frances, born February 10, 1899; and Mildred Ann, born October 29, 1900. All were born in the Kittitas valley, and all, with the exception of the first named, are living with their parents. Mr. Barnhart was reared under the Christian faith, but is not a member of any particular denomination at present. He has membership in the Brotherhood of American Yeomen, Fairview lodge, No. 969. He has one of the choice alfalfa farms of the valley, and is in easy circumstances. As a citizen and neighbor he is well and favorably known throughout his county.

WILLIS F. ZETZSCHE is a contractor and builder of Ellensburg. His father, Frederick Zetsche, was born in Saxony, Germany, in 1830, and came to the United States in 1847, and settled in Washington county, Illinois. Here he followed farming and carpentering. The mother, Margaret J. (Beckham) Zetsche, was a native of Tennessee. Besides Willis there were four children in the family. Of these Julius F. is now a merchant of St. Louis; Thomas C. is superintendent of the iron works at the union depot, St. Louis; Mae J., now Mrs. H. Davenport, is a minister; and William L. is a paper hanger of Ellensburg.

Mr. Zetsche received his early education in the state of his parents' adoption. He then learned the carpenter trade under his father and also mastered the trade of tinsmith. His first venture in a business way was in the opening of a hardware store in Okawville, which he conducted for a period of two years. He afterward went into a general merchandise business and continued in that line for nine years; when he sold out his interests and came to the Kittitas valley, September 11, 1888. He first settled on the Maxey ranch, south of Ellensburg, and remained there for one year, during which time he lost his house by fire. His next move was to Ellensburg, and there he began his career as a carpenter and builder. He had the distinction of completing the first store building erected in the city after the memorable fire of 1889. He was married at Okawville, Illinois, January 26, 1882, to Miss Mary A. Downes, who was born in Washington county, Illinois. Her father was born in Illinois, of English parentage, and at different periods of his life, was a farmer, a teacher and a veteran of the Civil war. The mother was Angelina (Owens) Downes, a native of Washington county, Illinois, and was of English parentage.

Mr. Downes served as a private with distinction throughout the entire Civil war. Upon the outbreak of hostilities he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Tenth Illinois, under the command of Colonel Thomas Casey, and Captain Charles Maxey. He was mustered into state service August 14, 1862, and later, on September 23d of the same year, was mustered into the United States service. He was discharged February 13, 1863, on account of sickness. On the 10th of September, 1864, he was drafted to serve one year or longer. On this occasion he entered Company K, Second Illinois, Second brigade, Third division, Fourth corps of the Army of the Cumberland. At Victoria, Texas, he was discharged, October 20, 1865, at which time he was serving under Colonel Swain and Lieutenant James McClellan.

Mr. Zetsche is a member of the carpenters' union in Ellensburg. Both he and his wife were raised under the influence of the Methodist Episcopal church. He is said to be an expert workman, and sustains an enviable reputation for industry and honesty. Socially and in business circles, he is one of the most popular tradesmen of his city.

LEANDER F. LYEN was born in Cowlitz county, Washington, May 19, 1862, and is now a prosperous farmer and stockman residing ten miles northeast of Ellensburg. His father, also a farmer and stockman, was a native of Kentucky, born in that state about 1823; and his mother was Nancy J. (Ballard) Lyen, born in Whitehall, Tennessee, in 1819. With his father Mr. Lyen came to Yakima county in 1866, and settled in the Moxee valley. Later they moved to what is now North Yakima, and remained there about a year; the next move was to Kittitas county. Leander F. received his education in the public schools, which were conducted in the primitive log cabins of that day. His father crossed the Plains in an ox-wagon in 1852, and thus became one of the pioneers of the West. Mr. Lyen, of this biography, came to the Kittitas valley in 1870, and engaged in the cattle and sheep business, which he has since followed. On December 15, 1889, he married Miss Mollie E. (Reed) Prigmore at Ellensburg. Miss Prigmore was born in McClellan county, Texas, March 20, 1866. She was the daughter of Ezekiel I. and Frances (German) Prigmore, the father a native of Texas, born in 1847, and the mother born in Missouri, in 1851. Mr. Prigmore was a farmer and came to this county in 1887. His wife is still living here. The other children of the family besides Mrs. Lyen are: Mrs. S. E. Mullin, of Whatcom, Washington; John R. Prigmore, of Seattle; Mrs. A. B. Jewett, of Whatcom; Samuel Prigmore, of Kittitas county; Gertrude Prigmore, now resident in Kittitas county. Two others—D. Y. Prigmore and LeRoy Prigmore—are deceased. The latter died in Alaska.

Mr. Lyen was reared under the influence of the Baptist church. In politics he is a Democrat, although he is now a staunch supporter of President Roosevelt. Being raised in the west, he is very conversant with the early traditions of the Indians, as well as the pioneer history of the state in general. He is comfortably situated in his home, and is one of the well-to-do farmers of the Kittitas valley. He is everywhere regarded as being public spirited, and an honorable, law-abiding citizen, and counts his friends by the score.

ALBERT TJSOSSEM. Albert Tjossem, a miller residing three miles southeast of Ellensburg, was born in LeGrand, Iowa, July 16, 1867. He is the son of Rasmus P. Tjossem and Rachel (Heggem) Tjossem, both natives of Norway. Mr. Tjossem received his early education in the district schools of his native state, and came to Kittitas county with his father in September, 1877, settling in the southeastern part of Kittitas valley. He at once began working with his father, and together they built a flour-mill, which they jointly operated. In 1889 the second mill built by them was burned to the ground, but was rebuilt in 1900, and equipped as few rural mills are with the most modern of machinery. Its daily capacity is about one hundred barrels; its machinery is driven by a ten-foot head of water conducted to the mill by a ditch having its head just below the south bridge. A spur has been built by the railroad at the mill, and the place is known as Holmes Station. The proprietors of the mill are in partnership under the firm name of R. P. Tjossem & Son. A ready market is found for all the mill products, principally along the Japan coast, while a portion finds sale in the local markets. The grain is for the most part imported from outside the county, only about one-third being locally grown. The mill of R. P. Tjossem & Son is well known throughout the interior of Washington, and bears the reputation of turning out some of the best grades of flour milled in the Northwest. Mr. Tjossem's brothers and sisters are: Rebecca Donald, Torena Moe, Lena Ruthven, Anna and Peter R. Tjossem. The last named is a draughtsman living in Spokane; the remaining four are residents of Kittitas county.

Mr. Tjossem was married in Ellensburg, June, 1899, to Olive Rutledge. Mrs. Tjossem died in June, 1901, and in Sept. 17, 1902, Mr. Tjossem was married a second time to Laura E. Cooper, daughter of John A. and Mary L. (Prose) Cooper. Mrs. Tjossem was born in Pesotum, Champaign county, Illinois, April 15, 1872. Her father was born in 1839, of Virginia stock, was a soldier in the rebellion, and is now a farmer living near Tuscola, Illinois. Mary L. Cooper is a native of the state of Ohio, born May 17, 1837. Mr. Tjossem is a member in good standing of the Masonic lodge of Ellensburg, and is an adherent to the Presbyterian church. He is liberal and public spirited. Few men have done more for the advancement and upbuilding of his county, and few enjoy the esteem and good will of a wider circle of social and business friends.

FREDERICK SCHORMANN, one of the substantial farmers of Kittitas valley, resides on his farm seven and one-half miles southeast of Ellensburg, where he devotes his time to farming and the breeding of fine horses. Mr. Schormann is a native of Denmark and was born in the prosperous little city of Aarhus, January 3, 1860. His father, Carl Schormann, was a native of Germany, born in 1838. At the age of sixteen he moved to Denmark, where he met and married Anna Fredericksen, who was a native of Denmark, born in the year 1843. They still make Denmark their home. Mr. Schormann has filled a number of important offices in the community where he lives, and is held in high esteem as a citizen. The son Frederick grew up and was educated in the land of his birth, but, upon reaching his majority, began to cast about him for a field of labor that promised more than a simple livelihood. Letters at this time coming from his brother Frank, who had immigrated to the United States in 1889, telling of this land of liberal laws and wealth of resources, determined him to try the new land of promise and, in 1890, he crossed the sea and shortly afterwards located in Ellensburg. He engaged at general work for a time but, in 1894, settled down on his present farm, where he has since resided, and where he has continued to prosper. He is the third child in a family of five. Frank, the oldest, is a resident of Ellensburg. Michael and Johanna Jacobson live in the Kittitas valley, and Mary resides in Spokane.

Mr. Schormann was married in Ellensburg, November 16, 1894, to Mary P. Miller. Her father, Peter Jensen, was born in Denmark, where he still resides. He was a soldier in the war of 1864. The mother, Christina Jensen, was also a native of Denmark. Mrs. Schormann has one brother, Jensen Petersen, living in Denmark. Mr. and Mrs. Schormann have one child, Olga S., born Aug. 20, 1899. Mr. Schormann is affiliated with the Modern Woodmen of America, with membership in the Ellensburg camp. He and wife are members of the Lutheran church. He is a thrifty, prosperous farmer and a breeder of fine French Percheron horses, of which he makes a specialty. He has a well improved farm and, with his demonstrated business ability, it is not presuming too much to predict a prosperous future for him.

MARGARET E. CLYMER was born in Crawford county, Ohio, December 6, 1848. She is the daughter of Andrew P. and Hanna (Shoemaker) Smith, both natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. Smith was born about the year 1825, coming of old Quaker stock. Early in life he was a builder and contractor, but later turned his energies to farming. He moved to Crawford county, Ohio, when a child, and spent the major portion of his life there. He is of German ancestry. Mrs. Clymer received her early education in the district schools of her native state, and on March 31, 1864, was married to Joseph C. Clymer. Mr. Clymer served his country during the Rebellion, principally in the regimental band of the Sixty-fourth Ohio volunteer infantry, in which he enlisted in 1862, and in the hospital corps. It was his desire to serve as a regular soldier, but he was incapacitated on account of defective eyesight. His war record was replete with deeds of kindness, patience and daring, and in every particular was a credit to himself and to his country.

Following his discharge he settled and remained for seven years at Galion, Ohio, where he had charge of a nursery belonging to his father. Subsequently he removed to Lima, Ohio, where he conducted a nursery of his own. After four years in this business he abandoned it that he might take up work on the railway. He began his railroad career as a fireman on the B. & O. railroad, which station he filled three years, then to engage with the Erie & Western as engineer, remaining in this position for about five years. He came west as far as Fargo, North Dakota, to attend the convention of locomotive engineers held in that city. Being favorably impressed with the country, he decided to remain, at once securing a position with the Northern Pacific railroad, in the construction department. He remained so occupied until the line was completed, his last construction work being done on the bridges spanning the Columbia at Pasco. He left the Northern Pacific in 1894, and three years later died near Ellensburg. Mr. Clymer was born in Ohio, 1840, and was a descendant of the Clymer family of Revolutionary fame. This family included the Hon. George Clymer, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, one of the first to settle in the colony of Pennsylvania, and afterwards closely identified with the history of that commonwealth. At the time of his death, Mr. Clymer was a member of David Ford Post No. 11, G. A. R., at Ellensburg. He was survived by Mrs. Clymer and two sons—John P., born in Galion, Ohio, 1868, and who is now a conductor on the Northern Pacific railroad, and Albert B., also a native of Galion, born in 1870, and now inspector for a transcontinental railroad. Mrs. Clymer is a member of the Woman's Relief Corps, David Ford Post No. 19, of Ellensburg, which post she has served several times as president. She also holds membership in the Rebekah Lodge, No. 25, and in the Women of Woodcraft. Her church home is with the Presbyterians. She is an ardent lover of flowers, of which she has probably the finest collection in the valley. She is a lady exceptionally well informed on all leading topics, is energetic and public spirited, and as a consequence is respected and loved by all who know her.

HENRY M. BRYANT, the subject of this biography, is a native of South Bend, Indiana, where he was born September 13, 1841. His father, Alfred Bryant, was one of the early missionaries of the Presbyterian church to northern Indiana and southern Michigan. The father was a man noted for his piety and for his effective preaching as well as for his literary ability, the fifth edition of some of his books being now in circulation. His ancestors settled in Springfield, New Jersey, about the middle of the seventeenth century. His father was a captain in the War of the Revolution. He was born in New Jersey in 1808. During his missionary life he built thirteen churches in southern Michigan and northern Indiana. He spent many years in that section, and was esteemed both by Indians and whites for his sterling qualities as man and minister. He died in 1882. The mother of our subject was Adrianna (Greene) Bryant, a native of Hanover, New Jersey. Her ancestors went from England to Holland on account of religious persecution, and eventually came to America that they might enjoy religious freedom. She died in 1854 at the age of forty-four. The early life of Henry M. Bryant was spent in southern Michigan, where his education was received. At the age of twenty-one he enlisted, in 1861, in Company F, Twelfth Michigan infantry, under Captain Reeves, as third sergeant, his company serving with the Army of the Cumberland, in Tennessee. At the battle of Pittsburg Landing he was taken sick and was sent to St. Louis, where he was reported dead; when his father went for the body, however, he was found still living and was taken home. His physical condition was such that he could not return to the army, and until 1864 his time was spent in various efforts to recover his health. For a while he conducted a store for a lumber company near Fillmore, New York. In the year named, after visiting home, he crossed the Plains to Salt Lake City, leaving Atchison, Kansas, in the spring with a freight outfit and an ox team, which he drove through without serious loss, occupying ninety days on the journey. Here for a time he was associated with Bernard Gray, a son of Captain Thomas Gray, of the quartermaster's department, Washington, District of Columbia, in the newspaper business. Disposing of his interests in this business he went to East Bannock, Montana, in April, 1865; from there to Virginia City, and thence to Helena. At Virginia City he was connected for a while with the Montana Post as collector and solicitor. In October, 1865, he entered the mercantile business in Helena, becoming one of the firm of Gilpatrick & Bryant, dealers in books and notions, and, at the same time, writing for the local papers. At this time flour sold in Montana for one dollar and twenty cents per pound and newspapers at from one dollar to three dollars per copy. In 1867 the building and stock of merchandise were destroyed by fire; the business was re-established but, a few months later, was closed out. December 4, 1870, he took up a homestead in the Kittitas valley which he commuted in 1872. During this period he was variously engaged as hotel clerk, assistant postmaster and proprietor of a notion store; acting also as agent for the Lewiston and N. W. Stage Company at Walla Walla. Mr. Bryant came to Kittitas county in 1874, where he had previously become interested in stock; from here going to Seattle and, while en route, casting a vote at Vancouver for Hayes for president. Until 1879 he acted as Wells, Fargo & Company's agent at Seattle; returning at this time to Ellensburg, where he formed a partnership in the merchandise business with Austin A. Bell of Seattle. He put up the second trading post in Ellensburg, selling out to Thomas Johnson in 1882 and going to his ranch.

In the fall of 1883 Mr. Bryant was married to Miss Lillie May Peterson, a daughter of W. H. Peterson, county auditor. Mr. Peterson and daughter are natives of West Virginia, where the latter was born in 1863. The father is a pioneer of the county and has held several county offices. Mrs. Bryant died in 1885. Mr. Bryant has been prominent in business circles; was county auditor one term; is a member of the K. P. lodge and of the G. A. R.; is an active and influential Republican, and one of the most successful and respected citizens of Kittitas county.

GEORGE E. SAYLES, police judge and city clerk of Ellensburg, was born and reared in the west, and has seen a great country develop in the past thirty years. Educated for the profession of a teacher, he turned to law and politics, which he finds more congenial. He was elected city clerk of Ellensburg in 1900 and has twice been re-elected to the office. He is also justice of the peace and police judge, the latter appointment coming from the city council. Mr. Sayles was born in Olympia, Washington, December 20, 1872. His father, Oscar Sayles, was an Illinois farmer, and crossed the Plains into Oregon at an early day, settling in the Grande Ronde valley. Later he moved near the capital city of Washington. He was exempt from duty as a soldier on account of disability. His ancestors fought for America in the Mexican war and were Scotchmen of sturdy stock. Mr. Sayles' mother, Sarah (Mills) Sayles, is of Irish descent and a native of Illinois. Her father, George Mills, lives in Olympia. Her brother, Jesse T. Mills, was appointed a member of the state board of control under Governor McBride, and also served as sheriff of Thurston county. Her father held a captain's commission in the federal army during the Civil war. George Sayles grew to manhood at Olympia. He received a thorough education in the common schools and high school, finishing with a course at the state normal in Ellensburg after a preparatory course in the Ellensburg high school, which he entered at the age of sixteen years. After completing his education he went to Montana and tried his hand at mining, traveling over much of the state during his stay there. A severe attack of sickness made him an invalid for eighteen months. After recovering he returned to Ellensburg and, finding the genial Washington climate much more conducive to good health, he has since made Ellensburg his home. Mr. Sayles is a Republican and a most active worker in the party. He is a well known figure in primary work, also in conventions. He holds membership in the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks and the Eagles. He has two brothers and two sisters: Anna Sayles Poland resides at Ellensburg; Alta and the brothers, Roy and Chester, live in Seattle. Mr. Sayles' uncle, George G. Mills, is a prominent business man and politician of Olympia. He recently married a daughter of Judge J. M. Gordon, supreme court justice, retired. Mr. Mills was in the government land office at Seattle for a number of years, afterwards engaging in business. Two other uncles of Mr. Sayles—James Mills and John Mills—are prominent farmers of Thurston county, which is also the home of his three aunts—Fannie, Mary and Laura Mills. In political, fraternal and social life Mr. Sayles is a representative citizen of Ellensburg, and it is not presuming greatly to predict that the future holds for him a successful career.

JOHN H. CAROTHERS, born in Shelby county, Missouri, in 1859, the son of John C. and Louisa M. (Henninger) Carothers, is a leading stock raiser and mining man of Ellensburg. His father, a native of the state of Pennsylvania, was born in 1820 and was a pioneer of Shelby county, Missouri, where he settled with his family as early as 1828. Here he lived and labored quietly on his farm until the outbreak of the Mexican war, when he joined the army, with which he remained until peace had been declared between the two warring nations. Again, in 1860, he enlisted in the army as a private and went forth to do battle with the Confederate forces. He was a good soldier, and his valor was rewarded by his being commissioned a captain before the end of the war. During the latter part of his service Captain Carothers served under the command of General McNeil. In 1874 he removed to the far west and took a stock ranch in eastern Oregon, where he with his sons engaged in the cattle and sheep business, making his home the while in the Willamette valley. He also acquired land in the Kittitas valley, where he brought his family to live in 1888, and where in 1902 he passed away. Louisa M. (Henninger) Carothers was born in Gordon City, Virginia, in 1827. She numbers among her direct ancestors some of the earliest pathfinders and history makers of that state. She now is living with her sons in Ellensburg.

At the time of his advent in Oregon, John H. Carothers was a youth of sixteen years, having spent his boyhood in the state of his birth, where he had acquired a grammar and high school education. Having been raised to the stock business he took to it naturally upon coming west, continuing in it with his father and brothers, William and Andrew. They turned their attention to sheep principally, though they kept a large herd of cattle. The brothers still own the old farm in eastern Oregon, which is being operated by Andrew. It was upon this farm that was grown the fruit thirteen varieties of which took prizes at the Omaha Exposition. The brothers exhibit with warranted pride a $200 gold medal as the prize awarded them upon this occasion. For years after coming to Kittitas county the Carothers were the most extensive raisers and shippers of sheep in that section of the country, during which time they held almost the exclusive trade in mutton of the entire coast line of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia. Their shipments of mutton at times amounted to eight and ten train loads in a single consignment. About the year 1900 the Carothers brothers began to close out their sheep business, since which time they have confined themselves to buying and selling sheep and of late years turned their attention largely to mining. Their mining interests consist of gold, copper and coal mines in the vicinity of Cle-Elum, Washington. Here they are developing what promises to be one of the most valuable semi-anthracite coal mines in the Northwest, for from this deposit has been taken some of the highest grade coal ever found in the state. Mr. Carothers has two brothers and two sisters—William H., of Ellensburg; Andrew, of Olex, Oregon; Anna M. Knight, living in the Willamette valley, and Ella Kocker, of Canby, Oregon. He was for a number of years a member and an officer of the Sons of Veterans order, but is now out of that society altogether. He is a staunch Republican, and takes an active part in the caucuses and conventions of that party.

LEANDER W. BELDIN, member of the firm of Beldin & Beldin, painters and paper hangers, was born in Rockford, Illinois, in 1872. His father, Leander W. Beldin, also a painter, was born in 1846. He was an early pioneer of Comanche county, Kansas, and was in the woolen mill business for thirteen years in Iowa, Wisconsin and Illinois. Mr. Beldin Senior's grandfather was a Frenchman, his mother a German, his father a Yankee. The mother of L. W. Beldin, Junior, Harriet (Varona) Beldin, was born in New York state, in 1850, and was of Yankee parentage, her ancestors being originally English. When Leander W. Beldin was two years of age his parents began a series of migrations, first to Wichita, Kansas, then to Colorado, and thence to Comanche county, Kansas, establishing themselves, in 1884, at Harper, Kansas, where Mr. Beldin grew up and received his education. In the year 1890, when he was eighteen years of age, his parents removed to Tacoma, Washington, where Mr. Beldin learned the painter's trade, which he followed there for seven years. He then went to Portland, Oregon, where he remained for two years, and in 1901 came to Ellensburg. Here he has established a good business and bought a home. Subject was married in May, 1902, to Charlotte Belle Wright, a native of Nebraska. Her father, Archibald Wright, died in 1892. Her mother, Ida (Randall) Wright, was born in Iowa, and still survives. Her uncle, Amasa Randall, is the editor of The Localizer, published at Ellensburg. Mr. Beldin has one brother, Fred Grant Beldin, of Portland, Oregon.

He is a member of the Woodmen of the World, this being the only organization he is connected with. He belongs to no political party, preferring rather at elections to be free to vote for the man irrespective of the candidate's party.

CYRENUS E. STEVENS is a farmer and stockman living seven miles northeast of Ellensburg. Illinois is his native state, where he was born in Kane county, August 25, 1866. His father, D. W. Stevens, a farmer, was born in Onondaga county, New York, in March, 1843. D. W. Stevens was an early settler in Illinois. He served three years and nine months in the Civil war in a New York regiment. At the second battle of The Wilderness he was severely wounded by being shot in the arm, on account of which he receives a heavy pension from the government. He is originally of English descent. One of his ancestors was a member of the historic "Boston Tea Party," and for his services in behalf of the cause of freedom received a large grant of land in the state of New York. Amelia (Hayden) Stevens, mother of Cyrenus E., is a native of New York, born in 1843, of Holland Dutch parentage. Both D. W. and Mrs. Stevens are still living in the state of New York. Subject was reared in Illinois, working on the farm and attending the common schools. At the age of twenty-two he decided to "go West," and the spring of 1889 found him located in the Kittitas valley. Here he bought and cultivated a farm in partnership with his brother-in-law, H. Ames. This partnership continued until the fall of ninety-two, when he bought his partner's interest in the farm, since which time he has conducted it alone. He was at Ellensburg at the time of the great fire, but was not a loser. In 1894 he assumed the management of the county poor farm, and for six years he conducted that in connection with his own place, giving it up only in 1900. In the year 1887 Mr. Stevens was married to Katie Ames, daughter of Avery A. and Esther (Davis) Ames, born in Illinois in the year 1870. Her father, a Civil war veteran, was born in Vermont, in January, 1828. He is now living in the state of Illinois. Mrs. Stevens' mother was born in Vermont, 1837, and died in 1890. Mrs. Stevens has one sister, Annis McDiarmid, and four brothers: H. Ames, a farmer of Kittitas county; Edwin, of South Dakota; Charles and Fred, both of whom are living in Illinois. Mr. Stevens' brothers and sisters are: John and Perry, of Illinois; Fred, of Wisconsin, and Mabel, Edith, Lottie and Clara, living in Illinois. To Mr. and Mrs. Stevens have been born six children, only three of whom, Amy, Avery and Margaret, are living. He is a member of the Modern Woodmen of America and of the Odd Fellows fraternities; of the latter he was a charter member of the lodge at Thorp. Both Mr. and Mrs. Stevens are members of the Baptist faith. In politics he votes for the man of his choice, not confining himself to any party's candidates. However, he is an ardent admirer and supporter of Theodore Roosevelt. His holdings in real estate consist of eighty acres of improved and cultivated land all under irrigation, upon which he has a valuable orchard, and has filed a claim to a tract adjacent to his home place.

SAMUEL W. FARRIS, a farmer, stock raiser and dairyman of the famous Kittitas valley, is located two and one-half miles northeast of Ellensburg. He was born in San Jacinto county, California, in 1863, the son of Franklin and Sarah M. (Hall) Farris. The father, a veteran of the Mexican war, farmer and teamster in early days, was born in the state of Missouri in 1829, and died in Kittitas county, Washington, December 24, 1902. Subject's grandfather played an important role in the reclaiming of the vast wilderness out of which have grown the populous central states, and the subduing of the hostile tribes of aborigines that then inhabited it. With no less a personage than Daniel Boone he helped blaze a trail through the wilds of what is now Missouri, and together they, with other pioneers, built the town of Boonesboro, Kentucky. Later in his career he, with a brother and one other companion, a young boy, was captured by Indians on the Plains between Leavenworth and Santa Fe. For fifteen days they were held prisoners, when he and the boy companion managed to escape and found refuge in an Indian mission. Franklin Farris crossed the Plains to California in 1850, where he followed farming and teaming. In 1898 he came to the Kittitas valley to join his son, Samuel. The mother of Samuel Farris was born in Missouri and still lives in Kittitas county. Mr. Farris, of this article, spent his younger days in California, where he worked on the farm and attended school as a boy, and later worked some at the blacksmith's trade, though in the main he followed farming and stock raising. At the age of twenty-one he formed a business partnership with his father, in which relation they continued until the son was twenty-eight. In the fall of 1892 he came to the Kittitas valley, where he farmed for five years on the west side of the river. In 1897 he removed to the southeastern section of the valley, where he again conducted a farm for four years, then located on his present farm, which is known as Poplar Grove. In 1901 he was married in Kittitas county to Frankie Neona Fuller, born in Illinois, in 1872. Being a woman of education, she, for a number of years, taught in the public schools of the state of her nativity, and in Douglas and Kittitas counties, Washington. She is the daughter of A. A. and Frankie (Ballard) Fuller, both natives of Illinois, in which state her father followed the vocation of blacksmith. She has two brothers, Alonzo and Milo P. Fuller, and one sister, Sarah Bittinger. Mr. Farris has one brother, George W., and two sisters, Mrs. Clara J. Noel and Mary E. Prater, all of whom reside on farms in Kittitas county. Mr. and Mrs. Farris have but one child, Lavina Ruth, one year old.

Mr. Farris holds membership in the Modern Woodmen of America, and the family belongs to the Methodist Episcopal church. A Republican in politics, he has been in times gone by an active party worker, but in recent years he has devoted but little time to the affairs of his party. He owns forty acres of choice irrigated land, which yields large quantities of excellent fruit. He also conducts a dairy of a dozen well-bred Holstein and Jersey cows. He finds a ready market for the products of his orchard and dairy, from which each year he derives a substantial income.

THOMAS B. GOODWIN, living one and one-half miles west of Thorp, is among the most successful farmers and stockmen in the Kittitas valley. As a pioneer of the county and of other portions of the west, he has experienced all the hardships incident to the development of a new country and has lived to triumph over all difficulties and force from his surroundings a degree of success that comes only to the courageous and determined few who found the country in its primitive state and braved its dangers and crude conditions, with unchanging faith in its future. Mr. Goodwin has realized his expectations and now has one of the most valuable ranches in the county. Born in Putnam county, Indiana, July 24, 1846, he was taken by his parents to Iowa when he was six years old and there, until he was seventeen, he attended school and worked on his father's farm. In 1864 he joined a brother and a neighbor in a trip with ox teams across the Plains. Reaching Omaha, the party continued up the Missouri river through Nebraska and Montana, mining for a short time in the latter state. Mr. Goodwin also herding cattle for a few weeks in the Galiton valley. He then joined a return party for the states and, after a long and toilsome journey, during which they suffered many privations, he succeeded in reaching the homestead farm in Iowa. After two years on his father's farm he bought a home in Wayne county, sold it later and invested in cattle, losing eventually all that he had. Returning again to his father's place he remained until 1873, when he went to California, arriving there with a family of four children and with eight dollars in cash. He afterwards spent some time in Portland, going thence to the Washington side of the Columbia, and engaging in the dairy business, but eventually settling in the Willamette valley, where he remained until 1877, coming then to Kittitas county. With his cousin, Thomas Goodwin, he brought from The Dalles the first header used north of the Columbia river. From W. D. Killmore he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land, paying $16 an acre for the quarter section, erected a house in 1877 and the following year had eighty acres fenced and twelve acres in wheat. He paid Charles Freeman one hundred and twenty dollars for a team of mules, giving his note at twenty-four per cent interest; bought water rights of Herman Page and at once went to work improving his farm. Later he bought two hundred and forty acres of George O'Hair, going in debt for the full value, ten thousand dollars, besides borrowing three thousand dollars to pay on the first farm purchased, and following this by a purchase of two additional farms, one of two hundred and eighty acres, partially under a ditch, and another of three hundred and twenty acres, the latter pasture land. In twelve years all his obligations were canceled and he had quite a sum of money in the bank.

Mr. Goodwin is the son of Rolley and Hanna (Gardner) Goodwin, both natives of Kentucky, the former born in 1805 and the latter in 1806. The elder Goodwin was a pioneer both of Indiana and Iowa, moving to the last named state in 1852. He was of English-Irish descent and was a farmer and stockman. The mother and father died in Iowa. Thomas B. Goodwin was married in Iowa in 1865 to Sarah Cumberlin, who was born in Indiana in 1841. She was the daughter of Moses and Manda (McClung) Cumberlin, natives of Indiana. The wife has been dead for a number of years. Mr. Goodwin's children are: Elmer E. Goodwin, Laura I. Burns, Jennie B. Osborn, Norman L. Goodwin, all born in Iowa; Oee V. Goodwin, born in Oregon; Lillian M., Olive O., Stanley E., and Aubrey C. Goodwin, born in Washington. As an active Democrat Mr. Goodwin has always been prominent in local politics, and in 1901 was chosen representative to the state legislature. The fact that he has accumulated one of the most extensive and valuable estates in the valley is evidence of the possession of those sterling qualities which have brought success to so many of the pioneers of the West. He is recognized as a man of superior judgment, of sterling integrity and correct principles; he is esteemed and respected by all with whom he comes in contact.

ELMER E. GOODWIN has been a landholder since he was twenty-two years old, and is now engaged in farming, about three-quarters of a mile southwest of Thorp, Washington. He was born in Iowa, March 25, 1866, being the eldest son of Thomas B. and Sarah E. (Cumberlin) Goodwin. His father was born in Indiana, July 24, 1846, and has resided in Washington since 1887. In 1901 he was representative from Kittitas county in the state legislature. His mother was born in Indiana in 1841. She is a graduate of a Iowa high school, and taught school several years before her marriage. She was the mother of the following other children: Laura I. Burns, Jennie B. Osborn, Norman L., Lillian M., Oce V., Olive O., Stanley E. and Aubrey C. Goodwin, all living near Thorp, Washington. Elmer E. Goodwin was educated in the schools of Kittitas county, and worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-three years old. When twenty-two he took up a claim in Douglas county, and a year afterward he rented his father's farm for a period of two years. Since his marriage, January 20, 1897, to Miss Nancy L. White, he has been farming his present holdings. His wife was born in Texas, April 17, 1877, and was there educated. Her father, James F. White, was born in Tennessee and now lives in Texas. Her mother, Matilda (Hatfield) White, was also born in Tennessee. Mrs. Goodwin has ten brothers and sisters: Walton W., Mrs. Fannie King, John, Perry, Amy, Ava, Ollie, Luther, and Clint C. White, all born, and still living, in Texas, and Mrs. Etta Garlinton, born in Texas and now residing in Oklahoma. Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin have two children: Thomas F., born November 9, 1897, and Lantie L., born February 25, 1899.

Mr. Goodwin is a prosperous young farmer; his holdings consist of eighty acres of farm land, of which he has more than half in orchard, and seven hundred acres of timber land. He has numerous horses and cattle and all the necessary farming implements. He is a loving husband and father and good neighbor, and is well respected in the community. Politically, he affiliates with the Democratic party.

JOHN C. GOODWIN, living on his farm one mile south and one-quarter of a mile east of Thorp, Washington, was born in Illinois, June 22, 1848. He was there educated in the common schools and worked on his father's farm until sixteen years old, when he enlisted in the army. His father was David Goodwin, born in New York, of English parentage, in 1818, and died at the advanced age of eighty-two years. His mother, Kathren (McArthy) Goodwin, was born in York state in 1828, and is now living in Ellensburg, Washington. Mr. Goodwin entered the army as a member of Company F, Fifty-seventh Illinois volunteers. He saw service under Generals Sherman, Logan, McPherson and Howard; also under General Oscherhouse, of the department of Tennessee. He was in the battles of Chattanooga and Resaca, and was with Sherman on his famous march to the sea. After the fall of Savannah his company went to Columbia, South Carolina. After the surrender of Lee the company was sent to Washington for general review, and was later mustered out in Louisville, Kentucky. Mr. Goodwin then went to Chicago, and returned home, where he remained three years, attending school part of this time. In 1868 he went to Missouri, where he resided three years. The succeeding seven years he worked in the mines near Denver, Colorado, and later visited the Big Hole country, Wyoming; Butte, Montana; Corinne, Utah; San Francisco; and Portland, Oregon. Later he came to Yakima (now Kittitas) county, Washington, where he bought one hundred and sixty acres of land from the railroad, which he has since placed in excellent cultivation. His brother David lives in Iowa; a married sister, Anna Simmons, lives in Montana; another sister, Mary J. Smithson, is the wife of the mayor of Ellensburg, and the youngest sister, Ella (Goodwin) Park, is a resident of Texas, and his youngest brother, William H., resides in Chicago.

Mr. Goodwin was married December 24, 1882, to Miss Josephine Stevens, who was born in Ohio, February 19, 1855. Her father, Benjamin Stevens, was born in Pennsylvania, December 4, 1804, and died in Illinois, where the family had located when Mrs. Goodwin was four years old. Her mother, Elizabeth (Hecker) Stevens, was born in the Quaker state, January 30, 1810, and came to Washington with her daughter in 1881. She passed away in the Evergreen state, and she was the mother of seven children: Elizabeth Green, living in Illinois; John H. Stevens, residing in Washington; Benjamin F., living in Oklahoma; Adam M. and James H., living in Washington; Myra Richards, living in Tacoma, and Emily, in Kittitas county. Mr. Goodwin has one hundred and sixty acres of well improved land, stocked with forty-five head of cattle and numerous horses, and is one of the substantial farmers of the valley. He is past-grand of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, an active member of the Congregational church, and one of the leaders of the Republican party in his county. When Yakima county was divided and the officers for Kittitas county were elected, Mr. Goodwin was chosen sheriff, and served with great success. He has been actively connected with county affairs ever since, and has served two terms as county commissioner.

CHARLES T. HATFIELD, one of the successful farmers of Kittitas county, resides a short distance west of Thorp. He is a native of Texas, born January 8, 1873, but, since he was ten years old, has lived the greater portion of the time in Kittitas county, Washington. He is the son of Ephraim and Katie (Smith) Hatfield. Ephraim Hatfield was born in Tennessee in 1847; moved to Texas when a young man, and from that state came to Washington by wagon in 1873. He afterwards returned to Texas, where he is still living. His wife, the mother of our subject, died when the son was a small boy.

Charles T. Hatfield was educated in Kittitas county. When he left school he engaged in farming with his father, on the home place, until his twenty-first year. At this time he rented the place of his father, and has ever since continued in charge, excepting a period of six years, from 1894 to 1900, during which he was engaged in mining and stock raising in Idaho. Mr. Hatfield is one of a family of two boys and two girls. His brother, John Hatfield, lives near Thorp. His sister, Mrs. Gertrude Bennett, lives on Thorp prairie, and the second sister, Mrs. Hattie Hanlin, resides near Ellensburg.

Charles T. Hatfield and Miss Minnie Meadows were married in Ellensburg in 1892. Mrs. Hatfield is the daughter of Perry Meadows, now deceased. She is a native of Missouri, born May 16, 1863. When a child, her parents moved to Texas, and there she received her education in the public schools. In 1884 the family moved to Washington. She has two brothers, John and Elijah Meadows, natives of Missouri, now living in Kittitas county. A sister, Mrs. Jane (Meadows) Jones, died some years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Hatfield have four children living; their names follow: Lolo, born in Kittitas county, December 22, 1892; Katie, born in Idaho, July 16, 1896; Sylvanus, born in Idaho, November 21, 1898, and Charles R., born in Kittitas county, March 2, 1901. Two children have passed away: Iva M., born September 22, 1894, and Hazel M., born September 24, 1902. In politics, Mr. Hatfield supports the Democratic party. He and Mrs. Hatfield are members of the Methodist church. In general farming and in stock raising, Mr. Hatfield has met with good success, and now has on his place twenty head of Hereford cattle and six head of Percheron horses. He is a man of influence in the community in which he lives and commands the respect and confidence of all who know him.

QUINTON E. CROSS, living on his farm, six miles west and two north of Thorp, Washington, was born in Kentucky, July 2, 1874. His father, Joseph C. Cross, was also born in Kentucky, May 28, 1849; in which state his mother, Sarah A. (Slater) Cross, was also born, March 28, 1850. Both are residents of Kittitas county.

Mr. Cross was married in Kittitas county, November 9, 1902, to Callie Mattox, who was born in Missouri, September 27, 1886. Her father, William Mattox, was a native of Indiana and a farmer, with an honorable Civil war record to his credit. He is now living in Kittitas county. Her mother was Martha (Maynard) Mattox. They came to Washington when their daughter Callie was very young, and she was educated in the common schools of Kittitas county. Her brothers and sisters are Clifford Mattox, Mary Mornser, Elmer Mattox, Eva Hatfield and William Mattox, all residents of Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Cross have one child, Lelle Cross, who was born in Kittitas county, August 18, 1903. Mr. Cross is a Republican and is much interested in politics. In fraternal connections, he is a member of the Woodmen of the World. He is a hard-working, ambitious and successful young man, and is building a comfortable home on his hundred and twenty acre farm.

CHARLES A. SPLAWN, who is engaged in farming and stock raising three miles west of Thorp, Washington, was born in Missouri, September 13, 1831; is a pioneer and the son of a pioneer. His father, John Splawn, was born in Kentucky, in 1810, and was a farmer and school teacher. He was a pioneer of Missouri, and was in the Black Hawk war. He died in 1848. Mr. Splawn's mother, Nancy (McHaney) Splawn, was born in Virginia, and was married when fifteen years old. She resides in Ellensburg at the ripe age of ninety. Mr. Splawn was educated and lived in Missouri, working on his father's farm until he was twenty. Then he crossed the Plains to Oregon by ox team in 1851. He was at Brownsville and in the Willamette valley for a while, and went thence to the Gallice creek mines, where Indians ran him out. He ran a pack-train from Winchester, Oregon, during 1852 and 1853, and for thirty days served under Captain Martin in the war against the Rogue River Indians. Later he was at Coos Bay, Williams creek and Grave creek, mining. He struck a good property, but Indians drove him away. He ran a pack-train for a time for himself, and later for the government, and at times had fights with Indians. Then engaged in logging and cattle selling. In February, 1861, he located in Yakima county and ran cattle until 1878, when he moved to Kittitas valley and engaged in stock raising and mining, which he has since continued. His brothers, George, Mose, Williams and Andrew J. Splawn, were all born in Missouri, and live in central Washington. Mr. Splawn was married at Fort Simcoe in 1863 to Dulcina H. Thorp, who was born in Missouri in 1844, and started across the Plains with her parents when she was only nine days old. She was eighteen years old when married, and died in 1860. Her parents were Fielding M. and Margaret (Bounds) Thorp. The lives of these respected pioneers will be found in the biography of L. L. Thorp. In 1873 Mr. Splawn married a sister of his first wife, who was born in Oregon in 1851, and was twenty-two years old at the time of the wedding. Her brothers and sisters were Mary, now dead; Adelia E. Crockett, of Northwest Territory; Julia, Olive O'Hare, of Seattle; Leonard L., of North Yakima; Willis W., of Seattle; Bales B., deceased, and Milton A. Mr. Splawn was the father of two children. That by the first marriage, Viola V. (Shadle) is dead; by the second marriage, Flora H. Splawn, living with her parents. She was born in Yakima county, March 14, 1875. Mr. Splawn is a Democrat and has filled a number of offices with marked ability. He was appointed auditor of Yakima county, but resigned and was appointed sheriff by the county commissioners. The next term he was elected sheriff, and served two terms. He was also elected probate judge, and served two years. Later he was elected county commissioner, and served two years, and for seven years he occupied the office of justice of the peace. He is one of the leading land owners of the county, owning 1,640 acres of farm and grazing lands. He has two hundred head of cattle and forty head of horses. He is a thorough business man, of unquestioned character, and is highly respected throughout the county.

MILFORD A. THORP, the original founder of the town of Thorp, Washington, where he now resides, was born in Independence, Oregon, in 1857. His father, Alvin A. Thorp, was born in Missouri, in 1820, crossed the Plains in 1844, and took up a donation claim of three hundred and twenty acres in Oregon. He next went to California, and was there during the first gold excitement in 1848. He now resides in Baker City, Oregon, and is eighty-three years old. The mother, Esther (Eddy) Thorp, was born in New York, and crossed the Plains to Oregon with her parents when she was a small girl. Milford was nine years old when his parents moved to Moxee valley, Washington. After four years they moved to the Henry Schnebly ranch in Kittitas valley. His mother's health declining, the family returned to the old home in Oregon, where the mother died the following year, 1872. For the next five years our subject divided his time between his stock interests in Washington and the family home in Oregon. In 1879 he moved to the Kittitas valley, and for six years rode the range for different parties. In 1885 he bought James McMurray's claim, which he pre-empted and has since made his home. He platted the town of Thorp, the first postoffice being established in 1890. His brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Eva Butler; Emma C. (deceased); Rosa L. Hale; Ida, Andrew and Harvey (deceased), and Ezra. The three living reside in Oregon.

He was married in 1877 to Miss Ella Russell, who died in 1878. By this union there was one child, Winfred E., born November 25, 1878. In 1886 he was married to Miss Maggie Grant, who was born in Missouri, June 18, 1864. Her parents, Benton and Elizabeth (Lindsay) Grant, were also natives of Missouri, and crossed the Plains in 1866. Mrs. Thorp's brother, Walter, and sister, Jessie, are dead. She has one child, Zola Ouida Thorp, born February 3, 1887. Mr. Thorp is a prominent Odd Fellow, having occupied all the official chairs. He also belongs to the Woodmen of the World. Mrs. Thorp is a member of the Rebekahs and of the Women of Woodcraft, in both of which she is prominent. Mr. Thorp is a Democrat and one of the leaders of the party in his section of the state. He is one of the most progressive and successful farmers in Washington. He owns nine hundred and eighty acres, of which two hundred acres are in tame grass and the balance in timber and grazing lands. He has fifty head of good cattle, and his farm is thoroughly equipped with all necessary implements.

JAMES L. MILLS, a lumber manufacturer in Thorp, Washington, has been engaged in the milling business since a boy. He was born in Canada, August 11, 1845. His father, Barnabas Mills, was born in Nova Scotia, and was a pioneer of western Canada, where he engaged in farming. He died in Michigan in 1893. Mr. Mills' mother was also born in Nova Scotia; she died in Canada in 1853. She was the mother of twelve children, as follows: Nelson, Hamilton, Barnabas, Reuben, Mrs. Jane E. Griffith, Mrs. Elizabeth Edwards, all living in Michigan; Mrs. Mary Arnold and Mrs. Margaret A. Arnold, of Canada; Mrs. Sarah Conger, of New York; George K., native of Canada, now of Michigan; Mrs. Alice E. Smith, of Canada, and James L., the subject of this biography. Mr. Mills was educated in Canada and Michigan and is graduated from a commercial school in Detroit. When a boy he started to work in the lumber mills, and in 1868 he took charge of a lumber yard in Toledo, Ohio, for his brother. In 1874 the business was moved to Cleveland, and he continued in charge until 1878, when he went to Colorado for his health. In 1879 he came to Thorp, bought out a homestead and pre-empted the land, and that fall started work on a water ditch for his mill. He commenced to operate the mill in 1880. He bought the J. E. Bates farm in 1884, and later secured one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land, all of which he has under cultivation.

Mr. Mills was married in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1877, to Miss Marie L. Cannon, who was born in Ohio, June 15, 1850. She is highly educated, and taught school previous to her marriage. Her father, James H. Cannon, was born in Massachusetts in 1821, and died in Washington. Her mother, Lydia G. (Babcock) Cannon, born in Massachusetts in 1827, and now lives with her son-in-law in Thorp. She is the mother of four children: Herbert J., of Cleveland, Ohio; Page (deceased); James H., of Cleveland, and Mrs. Mills. Mr. and Mrs. Mills have four children: Nelson, born April 27, 1881; James H., born July 25, 1882, and died when five years old; Ada V., May 27, 1885, and Paul L., January 26, 1890. The husband and wife are Good Templars and members of the Methodist church. Mr. Mills is a leader in the church work, is one of the trustees, and has been superintendent of the Sunday school for a number of years. He is an honest, upright and industrious man. His property holdings include three hundred and twenty acres of land, besides the sawmill and site.

JOHN M. NEWMAN, farmer and blacksmith, in Thorp, Washington, was born in Missouri, August 10, 1851. His father, Michael P. Newman, was born in Virginia, in 1821, of Irish parentage. He was a blacksmith and a pioneer in Missouri; crossed the Plains to Oregon in 1864, and died there later. Mr. Newman's mother was Olive (Thurlow) Newman, a native of Missouri, who passed away when her son John was but five years old. She was the mother of six children as follows: Mrs. Laura Prescott, of Oregon; James W., of Palouse City, Washington; Richard, of Asotin, Washington; Mrs. Viola Alexander, of Yakima; Charles M., of Cle-Elum, Washington, and John M., the subject of this biography. All but Laura are half brothers and sisters. Mr. Newman crossed the Plains, with his father, when thirteen years old, was educated in Silverton, Oregon, and lived at his father's home until he was twenty-one. He then opened his own blacksmith shop in Kings valley, Oregon, and remained there until the fall of 1878, when he moved to the Kittitas valley. He bought thirty acres of land near Thorp, which he later sold. He also purchased one hundred and sixty acres near the present town site, which is still his home. He has conducted a blacksmith shop part of the time during his residence in this place.

He was married in Oregon, in 1873, to Miss Isabella Forgy, who died in 1896, leaving eight children. He was again married, in 1901, to Mrs. Edna Hurlbut, daughter of John and Lucinda (Clawson) Hay. Her father was born in Ohio in 1829, and is now a retired farmer living in Arkansas. Her mother was born in Illinois in 1830, and was educated as a school teacher. Mrs. Newman was born in Wisconsin, January 11, 1857, and taught school previous to her marriage to W. F. Hurlbut in 1880. Her brothers, Milton and Frank, and her sister, Daretta Hay, are now deceased. The surviving sisters and brother are: Mrs. Ida Crow, of Iowa; Eugene, of Chicago, and Mrs. Lulu Buseler, of Arkansas. Mr. Newman's children are: Mrs. Olive Wilcox; Mrs. Lillie V. Simpson; James O., Mrs. Minnie M. Shull, Fred P., Jacob M., John A., Lena and Ada (both dead); Jessie R. and Esther Hay Newman; the last named by the second marriage. Mr. Newman is a leading member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a prominent Democrat, and was commissioner of Kittitas county four years. Mrs. Newman is a member of the Christian church. Mr. Newman owns one hundred and thirty acres of land adjoining Thorp, and one hundred and twenty acres on Thorp prairie. He has eight head of cattle and fifteen head of horses and has the only livery stable in the town. He is both prosperous and popular.

LORENZO KELLICUT was born in Pennsylvania, April 8, 1852, and is now engaged in farming some two miles west of Thorp, Washington. When he was two years old his parents moved to Wisconsin, where he secured his education in the common schools. He worked on his father's farm until he was twenty years old, and for the succeeding ten years was employed by other farmers. In the spring of 1883 he started for Washington, and on June 11th of that year arrived in the Kittitas valley. For two years he worked at day labor, and then bought a tract of railroad land. He later sold that property and took up his present farm under the homestead act, where he has since made his home. His father, David Kellicut, born in New York, was a farmer and blacksmith. He was one of the early settlers of Wisconsin, locating there in 1854, and died in Missouri in 1868. Lorenzo's mother, Juda (Kelley) Kellicut, was also born in York state, and died some twenty years ago. The children, besides Lorenzo, are: Edward, Ansel, Erastus, Filander, Adelia (Hutchinson), Alice (Young), Viola (Widmer), Lancel and David. Mrs. Hutchinson lives in Thorp; Mrs. Young resides in the Big Bend country, and David is a resident of Kittitas county. Erastus resides in Missouri, and the others all live in Wisconsin.

Mr. Kellicut was married in the Kittitas valley, October 18, 1884, to Miss Ida E. Hutchinson, who was born in Monroe county, Wisconsin, September 17, 1860. She was educated in her native state and in Minnesota, and came to Washington with her parents in 1873. Her father, Oren Hutchinson, born in Massachusetts, August 25, 1819, was a farmer. He died December 2, 1886. Her mother, Ann J. (Marlet) Hutchinson, was born February 4, 1822, and was married at the age of twenty. She was the mother of nine children, including Mrs. Kellicut. They are: Mrs. Adeline Bacon (deceased); Morris Hutchinson, of Thorp; Clara, Eliza A., Jerome and Albert, all of whom have passed away; Mrs. Eldora L. Briggs, of North Yakima, and Oscar E., of Thorp. Mr. and Mrs. Kellicut have four children, as follows: Hallie E., born in Kittitas county, June 17, 1887, and died June 18, 1897; Carrie V., October 22, 1892; Raymond L., September 2, 1894, and Ivel O., March 4, 1900. Mr. Kellicut is a Mason, an Odd Fellow, and a member of the Woodmen of the World. His wife is a member of the Rebekahs. Both attend the Methodist church. Mr. Kellicott is a Democrat and takes considerable interest in politics. He is one of the most industrious and successful farmers of the valley. His farm is all under a high state of cultivation, about one hundred acres being in tame grass. He has thirty-six head of cattle and all the needed horses, as well as a complete outfit of farming implements. His home is a modern ten-room house, and he has a commodious barn and outbuildings.

MARTIN A. GORDON, is engaged in farming, one mile west of Thorp, Washington. He was born in Indiana, April 27, 1839, and received his education in Minnesota, to which state his parents moved when he was a small boy. He remained at home until he was twenty-one, then engaged in farming. For thirty years he lived in Minnesota, and part of this time he was engaged in running a sawmill. He then moved to Dakota, and again took up farming for a period of nine years. In 1889 he came west to Washington and purchased one hundred and eighty acres of Northern Pacific railroad land, which he has been since cultivating. His father, Wheeler Gordon, was born in North Carolina, but went to Wisconsin in pioneer days, when the present state was a territory. He was a carpenter by trade, and died in Wisconsin. Mr. Gordon's mother was Mary (Draper) Gordon, a native of New York state. She died in Washington. Mr. Gordon was one of a family of five children. His brothers were: James Madison Gordon, born in Indiana, and died in Minnesota, in 1877; Francis, born in Indiana, now living near Thorp; George, born in Wisconsin, residing with Martin, and Thomas, born in Indiana, now deceased. Mr. Gordon has sold forty acres of his original holdings, but has the remaining one hundred and forty acres in an excellent state of cultivation. He is a first-class farmer and is meeting with great success.

ROBERT BARNETT received his early education in the common schools of Ohio, in which state he was born May 12, 1839. Since 1892 his home has been on his farm of forty acres located one mile west of Thorp, Washington. His parents, David and Mary A. (Stewart) Barnett, were both born in Ohio, and also died in that state, the mother at the age of eighty-one years. His father was a farmer. Robert was one of four children, all born in Ohio. His brother, Marcellus, is living in Everett, Washington, and his sisters, Nancy J. Wolf and Margaret Bowers, live in Ohio. From the time he was thirteen years old until he was twenty-three, Mr. Barnett engaged in logging, and worked in various sawmills. In 1864 he crossed the Plains to Virginia City, Montana, where he spent two years in the mines, and then went home, going down the Yellowstone river on a flatboat. He was sick one year, and in 1868 went to West Virginia and sold books for three months. The succeeding three years he engaged in farming in Illinois, and subsequently farmed in Iowa for fifteen years. He then moved to Thorp, Washington, and resided there three years before going to his present farm, which he bought in 1892.

He was married in Illinois, in 1870, to Miss Henrietta Aurand, daughter of Joel and Susan (Getgen) Aurand, both of whom are now dead. Mr. and Mrs. Barnett have seven children, as follows: Marvin E., born October 9, 1870; Oren U., August 11, 1873; Ernest G., December 9, 1875; Myrtle M. Lord, January 7, 1878; David J., March 9, 1880; Myra L., May 22, 1883, and Eliza R., April 5, 1885. Mr. Barnett is a man of first-class character, industrious and well liked. His forty-acre place is well cultivated and the surroundings homelike and comfortable. The place is productive and yields a liberal competency.

BRAXTON DUNCAN SOUTHERN, a pioneer of 1877 in the Yakima valley, is now residing in Thorp, having retired from active labors as an agriculturist. Mr. Southern was born in Giles county, Virginia, May 3, 1833. He is the son of John and Elizabeth Southern, both born in North Carolina, the former in 1817. They were the parents of eighteen children, of whom B. D. Southern is the youngest; his only surviving brother, Charles W. Southern, is an Illinois farmer. Besides the eighteen children, the aged parents of the subject of this article possessed before their deaths, eighty-eight grandchildren, three hundred and eighty-seven great-grandchildren, one hundred and seventy-six great-great-grandchildren, and eleven great-great-great-grandchildren. It is told of the mother that she at one time remarked to her daughters, who were gathered about her: "You may each of you well be proud, for your daughter's daughter has a daughter." She died at the age of eighty-seven, and her father lived to be ninety-two. The family settled on the "Black Hawk purchase" in Iowa in 1839. The father died in 1840, and at a very early age our subject was forced to assume the burdens of life, his early education depending entirely upon his own efforts; and, there being no free schools, it was necessary for him to earn money with which to pay tuition fees. At the age of fifteen he quit school, and for a year clerked in a wood yard on the Mississippi river, following this with a period of two years as clerk on the river steamer, Kate Kearney. In 1851 the cholera became epidemic in the Mississippi valley, and Mr. Southern moved to Lagrange, Illinois, remaining about two years, a portion of the time in a cooper shop, one summer on a farm, and then moved to Iowa, where he rigged up a five-yoke team of oxen and for a time engaged in breaking prairie at three dollars per acre. He followed farming until 1870, moving then to Solano county, California, whence he removed in one year, on account of his wife's health, to Linn county, Oregon, where he purchased land and farmed until 1877, when he moved to Yakima county, Washington, locating four and one-half miles west of Old Yakima. On account of the Indian troubles, nothing was accomplished the first year on the farm. The family spent some time in the sod fort on Ahtanum creek during the crisis of excitement, Mr. Southern being chosen a captain of the gathered forces. Full details regarding this fort and the Indian troubles will be found in the chronological chapter of the history. In 1880 Mr. Southern sold a portion of his Yakima farm and purchased land in the Kittitas valley, where, until 1900, he engaged in farming and stock raising. At this time he sold out, and for two years farmed in Klickitat county, in turn selling out here and retiring to his present home in 1902.

Mr. Southern was married October 6, 1853, in Michigan, to Nancy J. Veach, daughter of Eli W. and Lucretia (Robinson) Veach. The father was born in New Jersey in 1803 and died in 1855. He was a talented and an educated man; taught school for many years, and for fully half his life was in public office. The mother was a native of Kentucky, born in 1806. Mrs. Southern was born in Cass county, Michigan, July 3, 1835. David Veach, of Thorp, and William W. Veach, of Buckley, are brothers of Mrs. Southern. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Southern are: Anna Rosa, born July 31, 1854 (deceased); L. Roy, born April 6, 1856, living in Goldendale; Eli C., born February 24, 1858 (deceased); Seward, born July 10, 1862, living in Kittitas county; Corinne Beck, born August 4, 1864, living in North Yakima; Selena M. Richards, born December 28, 1866, living in Kittitas county; Earnest, born July 29, 1870, living in North Yakima; Clara J., born July 21, 1872 (deceased); Edward E., born April 27, 1875, now a merchant of Thorp. Edward went to the Philippines as lieutenant of Company H, First Washington Volunteers, and led his company through the first battle. Mr. Southern is a prominent Mason, having organized the Ellensburg lodge, of which he is now past grand master. He and Mrs. Southern are members of the Methodist church. Politically, Mr. Southern is a Republican. He is prominent and influential in all circles, and is honored and esteemed as one of the most substantial and successful pioneers in the valley.

THOMAS L. GAMBLE, the mayor of Cle-Elum, Washington, and a heavy property owner, was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, March 27, 1827. His father, William Gamble, was born in Dublin, Ireland, in 1774, and came to the United States in 1795, when twenty-one years old, locating in Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. He died July 13, 1865. In 1813 he was sent out by Colonel Craig, United States Army, of Pittsburg, with $10,000 to pay the soldiers in the west, who were about to mutiny because they had not been paid. Mr. Gamble made the perilous journey alone and successfully, being guided part of the time by friendly Indians. Mr. Gamble's mother was Mary (Sherrard) Gamble, who was born in Washington county, Pennsylvania, in 1797, and died February 21, 1870. Mr. Gamble's parents lived on a farm in Washington county, Pennsylvania, where the subject of this sketch grew up to manhood. He attended subscription school three months in the winter and the rest of the time he worked on the farm. He remained at home until the death of both his parents, then took charge of the place himself. In 1878 he left Pennsylvania with barely money enough to get west and pay for filing on his present farm at Cle-Elum, where he arrived April 13, 1883. He was the first settler on the township. Across the river, on the old Walla Walla and Seattle wagon road, was another settler, and there were a few below him on the Teanaway river. Roslyn was not known then, but soon afterwards prospectors found indications of coal, and the Northern Pacific sent in others, and three or four years later began to develop the property. This coal discovery had probably much to do with bringing the railroad over its present route, as the intention had been to follow the survey up the Naches river and across the Cascade mountains at Cowlitz pass.

Walter Reed, a former Pennsylvania acquaintance, through correspondence, was induced to locate a claim adjoining that of Mr. Gamble. Mr. Reed, May 17, 1888, filed the plat of the townsite of Cle-Elum, and a few weeks later Mr. Gamble filed his plat of Hazelwood. He laid out one hundred acres at first, but afterwards thirty acres were withdrawn from the town for the use of the coal company's outside works. He has recently made several additions, amounting to some thirty-three acres, since the town began to grow, three years ago.

As soon as twelve families located in the district, Mr. Gamble and Mr. Reed formed a school district, of which Mr. Gamble was the first clerk. In 1894 he entered into a contract with men who wanted to prospect for coal on his farm. Coal was discovered in 1894, and shipments began the following year. The Northwestern Improvement Company now operates the property, and pays Mr. Gamble a royalty on the output.

Mr. Gamble has occupied public office on a number of occasions, with much credit. He was elected county commissioner in 1889 on the Republican ticket. He was road supervisor for his district, and served as clerk of the school district from the time of its organization continuously up to 1897. In February, 1902, he was elected mayor of Cle-Elum, which office he now holds. Under his administration the city has been bonded and a fine waterworks system is being put in. Sewerage plans are being made and other civic improvements are under way. He was United States commissioner for four years' term, and was justice of the peace for a number of years.

Mr. Gamble is a bachelor. He has one sister, Mary Gamble, who is now a resident of Allegheny county, Pennsylvania. He is a man of discernment and business tact, with a high sense of justice and fairness, which is carried into his business transactions, making him both respected and trusted by the public.

ROBERT E. KERMEN is the fire boss at the coal mines in Cle-Elum, Washington, and is a miner of long experience. He was born on the Isle of Man, October 15, 1867. His parents, Robert and Annie J. (Logan) Kermen, were natives of the Isle of Man, and came to the United States in 1886. They now reside in Cle-Elum. His father was born in 1845, and his mother five years later. Robert was one of four children. The others are: Fred, of Cle-Elum; Mrs. Lydia Dwyer, of Chicago, and Edward. Robert E. was educated in the extreme northwestern part of England, where he lived until he was sixteen years old. He then worked three years in the iron mines before coming to the United States, in 1886, with his parents. On his arrival in this country he worked two years in the coal mines in Rich Hill, Missouri, and also worked in other coal mines in various parts of the same state and in Arkansas and Kansas. He worked on a salt property in the latter state, and for the Rock Island railroad. After visiting New Mexico, Arizona and California, and putting in considerable time in the mines of those states, he came to Washington and began work on the Great Northern switchback. In 1892 he moved to Roslyn and became shift foreman in the mines, where he was employed two years. He then went to the Peshastin district, engaged in quartz mining, and later prospected in Idaho. For the past three years he has been in the Cle-Elum mines as fire boss.

Mr. Kermen was married in Roslyn, August 9, 1895, to Mrs. McClennan, who was born in Springfield, Illinois, March 27, 1864. She is the daughter of David and Elizabeth (Simpson) Smith, both deceased. Her brothers and sisters are: James (deceased); Kittie Herring; Jenett Hare; Mary A. and Isabella Littlejohn, and David Smith. Mrs. Kermen has three children as a result of her first marriage. They are: Pearl, born November 3, 1886; Nina, July 15, 1887, and Kelso McClennan, born March 4, 1890. Her children by her present husband are: Ernest, born May 7, 1890, and Edward Kermen, born February 6, 1901. The father is a member of the Knights of Pythias and has been through all the chairs of the order. He and his wife are members of the Rathbone Sisters. Mr. Kermen is an active Republican; in 1891 was elected a member of the city council. He is a member of the Wesleyan Methodist Episcopal church. He has been very successful in his business undertakings and has accumulated considerable property, including two city blocks and his residence. He is an active, energetic business man, of ability and judgment, and is highly respected.

OSCAR JAMES, of Cle-Elum, Washington, is a practical geologist, and has had years of experience in nearly every character of mining. He was born in Logan county, Ohio, December 28, 1863. His father, Eli James, born in Ohio, in 1832, was killed during the Civil war. His mother, Anna (Elliott) James, was born in Ohio, March 18, 1833, and now lives at Seattle, Washington, as does also his brother, Eli E. James. Mr. James was educated in Iowa, to which state his parents moved when he was five years old. When thirteen he started to work in the mines as a driver. From 1878, when he went to work in the coal mines in Missouri, he has mined in many states for many different metals. At various times he has been in the Scranton coal mines in Kansas, the Trinidad coal mines in Colorado, quartz mines in Old Mexico and Arizona, quicksilver and coal mines in California, and gold mines in Nevada. He opened the first coal mine in Gallatin county, Montana, which was later sold to the Northern Pacific Railway Company for $20,000. In 1887 he came to Roslyn, then almost unknown, and prospected extensively. With some friends he secured a property, which they later sold to the Honolulu Coal Company for $90,000 cash. In 1894 he leased Thomas Gamble's land, and with three partners began development work, sinking the first coal shaft in this state. This lease was later sold to the Northern Pacific Company. He then operated the Hauser property in Montana for two years, and later acted for the manager of the Portland Development Company a similar period. Of late years he has been living in Cle-Elum, locating timber and mining claims.

Mr. James was married in Ellensburg, November 5, 1894, to Miss L. E. Lewis, who was born in Illinois, September 5, 1873. She graduated from the Baptist university, Indian Territory, when sixteen, and a year later moved to Whatcom, Washington, where she engaged in the millinery business four years immediately prior to her marriage. Her father, William Lewis, born June 3, 1830, was a Welsh miner, who was superintendent of the Birmingham coal mines in Alabama at the time of his death. Melvina (Smith) Lewis, her mother, was born in Prussia, March 28, 1831, and is now residing in Minneapolis. Mrs. James has two brothers and one sister: Henry, of Whatcom, Washington; John, of Montana, and Anna (Lewis) McGregor, living near Minneapolis. Mr. and Mrs. James have one son, Cecil, who was born in North Yakima, April 12, 1896. Mr. James is a member of the Blue Lodge of Masons, and both he and his wife are members of the Order of the Eastern Star, and the husband is an active member of the Republican party. He owns a home at Cle-Elum, and is interested in coal lands and mining properties. Mr. James is considered to be better posted on the geological formation of the Cle-Elum district than almost any other person in the state.

WILLIAM W. TUTTLE, the wide-awake transfer man of Cle-Elum, Washington, was born in Newport, Ohio, September 2, 1850. His father, Hiram C. Tuttle, born in 1818, was a soldier during the Civil war, and died in Nebraska. His mother, Sarah (Terrel) Tuttle, is a native of Ohio, and is now living in Iowa. Mr. Tuttle went to Indiana with his parents when a child, and was there educated. He later lived in Iowa two years, and in 1867 moved to Missouri, where he worked on a farm a like period, and was also employed in a mill for five years. He then moved to Illinois and engaged in railroad work some six years and a half. He was next employed five years in the manufacture of farming implements, at the expiration of which period he moved to Wichita, Kansas, and worked in the railroad shops until 1888; then he moved to Tacoma, Washington. He remained in that city three years, working as a carpenter and also as an employee in the Northern Pacific shops. In the fall of 1892 he began to work for the railroad at Cle-Elum, running the pump station, and at the end of four years engaged in his present transfer business. His brothers and sisters are: Sidney, of Illinois; Hiram C. and Theron, of Oklahoma; George W., of Almira, Kansas (deceased); Mrs. Helen Doney, of Tacoma, and Romaine, Estella, Ellenora and Emma, all deceased.

Mr. Tuttle was married in Sterling, Illinois, June 16, 1872, to Miss Jennie Moores, daughter of John and Rebecca (Shier) Moores, both now dead. His wife was born in Illinois, February 22, 1853, and was educated in her native state. Her brothers and sisters are: George, of Iowa; Wright (deceased); Mrs. Elizabeth Stafford, of California, and Mrs. Maribah Reece, of Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle have five children, as follows: William W., born in Illinois, as was Leroy L.; Lyle D., a native of Kansas; Mrs. Maud E. (Tuttle) Simpson, born in Illinois, and Mrs. Mabel (Tuttle) Williamson, born in Kansas. The children all live in Cle-Elum. Mr. Tuttle and his family belong to the Presbyterian church. He is an active member of the Democratic party, and has been road supervisor for two years. He has a comfortable five-room home, has built up a lucrative business, and is prosperous and progressive.

RALPH HARRISON resides in Cle-Elum, Washington, and is a mining man, as was his father before him. He is the son of Ralph and Mary (Cartridge) Harrison, both natives of England. His father died in 1893, and his mother passed away ten years later. Mr. Harrison was born in Pennsylvania, January 21, 1864. He was educated in that state, where he learned the carpenter trade, and also mined with his father. In 1877 the family moved to Illinois and he there followed mining. In 1882 he went to North Dakota and engaged in coal mining and prospecting for two years. The following two years were spent in Montana and in 1885 he came to Roslyn. In 1900 he opened up the properties of the Summit Coal Mining Company, and during his seventeen years' residence in Kittitas county he has been engaged in prospecting and mining. His brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Anna Graham, of Whatcom, Washington; Edgar and Robert, of Cle-Elum, and Mrs. Mary Jorgeson, of Washington.

Mr. Harrison was married in Roslyn, to Miss Carrie Welch, who was born in Ohio, August 30, 1874. Her parents, Jacob and Mary E. (Davson) Welch, were natives of Ohio and moved to Kansas when she was a small girl. She was there educated and came to Washington with her parents in 1880. Her sister, Agnes (Welch) Piper, lives in Cle-Elum, and her brother, John, is a resident of Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Harrison have three daughters: Jessie M., born May 22, 1891; Blanch A., born September 20, 1893, and Verna V., born November 16, 1896. Mr. Harrison is a fraternal member of the Knights of Pythias. He is an active member of the Republican party and he and his family are members of the Episcopal church. He is a thorough prospector and miner, has large interests in coal deposits in the Cle-Elum district, and is now pushing development work on the Summit property.

WILLIAM B. SIDES, of Cle-Elum, Washington, is engaged in the butchering and packing-house business. He was born at Bainbridge, Pennsylvania, June 24, 1864, and is the son of Jacob Sides, who was born in the same county, March 20, 1838. His mother, Mary E. (McAllister) Sides, was born in 1848, and died, October 27, 1875. Mr. Sides has three brothers and two sisters. They are Mamie (Sides) Koller, of Pennsylvania; Lizzie (Sides) Bell, of Pennsylvania; Alfred C., a shoe salesman in Pennsylvania, and John H., of Roslyn, Washington. William B. was educated in his native state and when twelve years old began to learn the butcher trade. After spending six years in a shop he moved to Illinois and for two and a half years engaged in farming. Later he took up his trade in Kansas for a short time; at Walla Walla for a year; at Ellensburg another year, and at Waterville, Washington, for four years. He sold out at Waterville and moved to Roslyn, where, in partnership with Mr. Hartman, he opened a market in which he is now interested. The firm has its own shop and slaughter-house and packing-house at Roslyn and its own buildings at Cle-Elum. Of the Cle-Elum interests Mr. Sides is manager.

Mr. Sides was married at Waterville, Washington, July 7, 1891, to Miss Alice May Whaley, who was born in Sioux City, Iowa, July, 15, 1871. Her father, Joseph Whaley, was born in Virginia in 1839, and served in the Union army during the war. The mother, Nancy (Harvey) Whaley, was born in Illinois in 1843. Mrs. Sides has three brothers and two sisters. The brothers are Henry E. Whaley, a locomotive engineer; Otis J. Whaley, a machinist and Mervin E., an express messenger at Seattle. One sister, Miss Myrtle V., of Kalispell, is a stenographer, and the other, Mrs. Frankie (Whaley) Knemeyer, resides at Waterville. The three children of Mr. and Mrs. Sides are Cecil M., born in 1892; Mervin H., born in 1894; and Alfred C., born in 1896. Mr. Sides is an Odd Fellow, fraternally, and in politics is a staunch Democrat. He was elected mayor of Roslyn on the Democratic ticket in 1900, but after serving one term he declined renomination. In business affairs he has been creditably successful, and from the part he has taken in public affairs and his manner of serving he has come deservedly to be one of the highly prominent citizens of his community.

ARTHUR JARRED, a farmer living three miles southeast of Cle-Elum, Washington, was born in Fountain county, Indiana, July 18, 1837, the fourth child in a family of seven. His father, Arthur Jarred, a native of Virginia, and his mother, Galila (Nugent) Jarred, a native of North Carolina, are deceased. George W. Jarred is the only brother of our subject that is now living. Those deceased are Mrs. Synthia Ann (Jarred) Justus, Alma, Mack, Lucretia (Jarred) Darouch and Henry. Mr. Jarred attended school in Indiana and Illinois until he was twenty years old, and then engaged in farming in partnership with his father. This occupation he followed for thirteen years. In 1865 he moved to Kansas and remained a year, and then, after a few months in Iowa, he located on a farm in Missouri, where he engaged in stock raising for four years. On account of ill health he went to Utah and afterwards located near Bozeman, Montana, where he took up one hundred and sixty acres of land. He followed stock raising with success for twelve years and then sold out. He spent a year in Klickitat county, and then in 1884 moved to Yakima county, where he again took up stock raising. After a residence of thirteen years there he took an overland trip by wagon to California. Returning after a brief stay, he made his home at North Yakima for four years. He went to Alaska in 1889 and on his return moved to Kittitas county and bought his present farm of eighty acres, of which he has made a most desirable home. He also owns forty acres in Thurston county. Mr. Jarred was married in Paris, Illinois, December 29, 1859, to Miss Sarah Jane Wallace, who was born in Indiana, March 25, 1841. She was the daughter of Edward and Sarah J. (Carson) Wallace. Mrs. Jarred has two brothers, James and Clark, and five sisters, Mary, Margaret, Rebecca, Lavina and Mrs. Caroline Wallace. Mr. and Mrs. Jarred have had six children, of whom but two survive. These are Capitola (Jarred) Stoner, of Walla Walla, and Henry M. Jarred, of Kittitas county. In politics Mr. Jarred is a Democrat, and as a citizen is a credit to his community, having the confidence and respect of all.

W. F. HENSELEIT is engaged in farming three and one-half miles southwest of Liberty, Kittitas county, Washington. His postoffice address is Cle-Elum. Mr. Henseleit is a native of Russia, born September 6, 1870. He is the son of August and Frederica (Winkler) Henseleit, natives of Prussia, of German extraction; the father was born September 30, 1834, and the mother, July 26, 1840. The subject of this biography is one of a family of eight children, five of whom are still living; their names follow: Louis, a machinist living in Seattle, born in Russia September 2, 1863; Mrs. Julia (Henseleit) Hartman, living in Kittitas county, born in Russia April 15, 1865; Mrs. Alidia (Henseleit) Duerwaechter, wife of a Seattle brewer, born in Russia April 18, 1875; Martha Henseleit, born in Russia June 30, 1883. One brother and two sisters, John, Emma and Ella, are dead.

Mr. Henseleit spent his early life in the country of his birth and there received his education. In 1888, at the age of eighteen, he came to the United States with his parents, who settled in Roslyn. Here for six years he worked in the coal mines. In 1891 his parents moved from Roslyn to a farm and in 1894 he followed their example, settling in his present location, where he has since farmed and made his home. Both have been very successful in agricultural pursuits and their farms are among the best in the county. The father has two hundred and forty acres and the son five hundred and sixty acres, two hundred and seventy-five acres of the son's ranch having been brought under a high state of cultivation. From its primitive state it has been transformed into an ideal home and a valuable property. Besides a good dwelling house and a large barn, the farm is equipped with all necessary machinery and stocked with fifty horses and cattle. Fraternally Mr. Henseleit is connected with the Knights of Pythias and politically with the Socialists. His parents are members of the German Lutheran church. He is one of the successful farmers of Kittitas county, respected by friends and neighbors as a man of industry, honor and integrity.

JOHN ROSEBURG, deceased, who for a number of years was one of the successful farmers in the Cle-Elum district, passed away in 1896, after three years of suffering from a cancer of the stomach. Deceased was born in Sweden, February 27, 1854, and was the son of Andreas H. Roseburg, born in 1802, and Katherina (Anderson) Roseburg, born on March 18, 1818. Both parents are now dead. He was educated in his native land and worked on his father's farm until he was twenty-seven years of age. Then he came to the United States. Here he railroaded for five years, and then, after a trip through British Columbia and the Sound country, settled on a farm three miles southwest of Cle-Elum, at which place the family now resides. He had started to cultivate the place, and had built a nice home when death overtook him.

Mr. Roseburg was married in Sweden, April 6, 1880, to Miss Brita Justine Asmundson, who was born in Sweden, March 1, 1860. Her father, Christian Asmundson, was born on March 18, 1823, and the mother, Christina (Johnson) Asmundson, was born April 24, 1824. Her brothers and sisters were Anna, born in Sweden; Edward, in Norway. Josephina, Hedda, Tiekla and Otto. Of these, all but Anna and Edward are now dead. Carl, another brother, is now residing in Sweden. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Roseburg are Andrew E., August and Magnus, all farmers, who reside in Kittitas county, six miles southwest of Cle-Elum; Gustaf, now in Seattle, Jonas A. and Carolina M (Roseburg) Modh, both now dead; Hedda S. (Roseburg) Johnson, now in Sweden. Mr. Roseburg was the father of the following children: Hartvig, born in Sweden, July 13, 1881; Charlie, born in Washington, February 1, 1889; Henry, born November 19, 1891; Herrman W., born August 19, 1893; and Clara Matilda, born October 4, 1894. Deceased was a member of the Lutheran church, and a Republican. Since his death his widow and eldest son, Hartvig, have been running the farm of one hundred and sixty acres with more than ordinary success. They have also bought and paid for fifty-one acres of cultivated land adjoining the old place. She has all necessary farming implements, live stock, and substantial farm buildings. Like her husband she is a member of the Lutheran church, and is notably a woman of much executive ability.

WILLIAM MORRISON, engaged in farming three and one-half miles southwest of Cle-Elum, Washington, comes of good old Scottish ancestry. He was born in Scotland, December 31, 1855. His father, Norman Morrison, was born in Scotland in 1825 and was a farmer. His mother, Jennette (Graham) Morrison, now deceased, was also a native of Scotland. Mr. Morrison left school in his native land when twelve years old to engage in coal mining, which he followed twenty-six years, both in Scotland and America. He came to the United States in 1870, and worked in Iowa, Colorado and Illinois before coming to Roslyn, Washington, in 1887. He mined there four years and for the following seven years was in the furniture and hardware business, during which time he purchased his present farm. He sold out his stock after moving it to Cle-Elum and in 1901 located on the farm.

Mr. Morrison was married in Kittitas county, July 19, 1902, to Miss Mary Bostock Weightman, who was born in England, November 22, 1870. Her parents, George and Martha (Fletcher) Weightman, were natives of England and are dead. Her brothers and sisters are: Elizabeth, Eliza, Emily, Robert, Phoeba, George and Jasper. Mr. Morrison's brothers and sisters are: Norman, of this state; Jennette (Morrison) Dilley of Seattle; Alexander, deceased; Mrs. Mary (Morrison) Jones, of Ohio, and a half brother, John Davidson, of Idaho. Mr. Morrison is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He does not affiliate with any particular political party. He has two hundred and fifty-eight acres of fine land, a nice farm-house and three good barns. He is well-to-do and industrious and he and family are respected and well liked in the community. The Morrisons have large estates in chancery in England, but owing to the loss of papers are having difficulty in proving the validity of their claims.

FELIX PAYS is a farmer residing one and one-half miles south of Cle-Elum, Washington. He was born in Belgium, September 28, 1843, and after a meager education began working, when ten years old, in the coal mines of his native land. In 1883 he immigrated to Illinois, where he spent three years in the coal mines. He worked four years in mines in Iowa, and in Nebraska for ten years. Then, on May 1, 1897, he started from Nebraska to Washington, his objective point being Cle-Elum, with a wagon and team. Upon arriving he at once bought his present lands from the railroad.

Mr. Pays was married in Belgium, January 2, 1867, to Miss Leona Rolland, who was born December 4, 1846. She was the daughter of Andrew Rolland, born in 1816 and Catherine (Carney) Rolland, born in 1817, both natives of Belgium. Mr. Pays has two sisters. One of them, Mrs. Matilda (Pays) Delhart, now resides in Belgium, and the other, Mrs. Orilla (Pays) Burgman, is living in Kansas. The two sisters of Mrs. Pays are Mrs. Pauline (Rolland) Cocher, of Belgium, and Mrs. Alexander (Rolland) Gilland, also in Belgium. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Pays are: Mrs. Felicie (Pays) McDonald, born in Belgium, December, 1868, now living at Thorp; Benjamin Pays, born November 1, 1871, now residing in Cle-Elum; Leopold Pays, born September 4, 1878; Polly Pays, born October, 1879; Johnny Pays, born September 9, 1884, and Emma Pays, born May 17, 1886. Both are members of the Catholic church. Fraternally,

Mr. Pays is associated with the Knights of Pythias and the United Workmen. In matters of politics he favors the Democratic platform. By industry and frugality he has acquired a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres with a good house and barn, and all necessary farming implements. He also has property interests in Cle-Elum. His rating among acquaintances is that of a strong character.

ELEAZAR B. MASON, familiarly known as "Colonel Mason," is a farmer residing ten miles east of Cle-Elum. He was born in New York state, September 3, 1838. His father and mother, Sampson and Polly (Hamilton) Mason, were likewise born in the state of New York. Sampson Mason was a farmer. The mother died March 20, 1842, and the father September 25, 1878. Sampson Mason was twice married, the second wife and the step-mother of Eleazar B. Mason being Maria (Yaw) Mason; she passed away September 13, 1889. The public schools of Hamilton county, New York, furnished Mr. Mason his education. He attended school till he was fourteen years old, and then came west and settled in Kent county, Michigan. Here he followed lumbering until 1861, when he enlisted in Company E, Second Michigan cavalry, and went to the war. His war record is one of bravery and daring. At Jackson, Michigan, he was mustered out of service, in 1865, having participated in eighty-five battles, among which were the hard fought engagements at Nashville, Franklin and Perryville. Remarkable as it may seem, in all these struggles Mr. Mason received no wound, barring a saber cut across the hand, although on different occasions his uniform was perforated with balls. His career as a soldier ended when he received an honorable discharge, as above mentioned. In 1862 he was granted a pension on the grounds of disability. Upon leaving Michigan, Colonel Mason went to California, where he followed farming for five years, after which time he spent two years on Puget Sound. He left Washington, again to make his home in California, and after six years, in 1880, he came to the Kittitas valley and took a homestead, where he is now living. He has his farm in a good state of cultivation, and equipped with all modern conveniences.

In Kent county, Michigan, September, 1861, he married Miss Cordelia I. Maxim, daughter of Alfred and Lucretia (Colm) Maxim, the former a native of Pennsylvania, and the latter of New York; the parents are dead. Mrs. Mason was born in Michigan, in 1844. Mr. Mason has five brothers, John H., born April 27, 1828; Albert C., born December 2, 1831; William H., born November 27, 1833; Sampson, born December 23, 1835; and Loren A., born October 27, 1847. His sisters, four in number, are Amanda P. Lawton, born December 20, 1826; Margaret R. Wright, born December 7, 1829; Charlotte E. Stanton, born September 23, 1841; and Mrs. Polly M. Creevey, born June 15, 1850. Of these, all are deceased save John H., William H. and Mrs. Creevey. To Mrs. Creevey, and to Loren (deceased), Mr. Mason is but a half-brother. All were born in the state of New York. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Mason were Elmora E., born in New York state, June 20, 1862, now living in Seattle; Lucretia, born in Michigan; and Albert, born in California; the two last named passed away in infancy.

Politically, Mr. Mason is a Jeffersonian Democrat, and is decided, as well as logical, in his views. He tills his farm sufficiently to bring him a comfortable living in connection with his pension, and is passing the declining years of his life in easy enjoyment, of which his life's work has made him deserving. Colonel Mason is widely known and is universally respected as an honest, upright man.

OTTO GASSMAN is a blacksmith and farmer living seven miles east of Cle-Elum. He was born in Germany, September 13, 1860, and is the son of John and Hermina (Banke) Gassman. The father was born in Germany in 1828, and came to the United States in 1871. He located in this country in 1881, and has maintained a continuous residence here since that date. The mother was born in Germany in 1824, and is still living in her native country. Mr. Gassman received his education and learned the blacksmith's trade in Germany. He came to the Cle-Elum country in 1888, and engaged in the blacksmithing business for the Northern Pacific company at Roslyn, at which place he remained for a brief time. From there he went to Ellensburg, where he opened a shop. He worked here for a year at his trade, and then went to Tacoma, and for a time ran an engine for a brewery company. From Tacoma he went to Ellensburg, and there remained the following year, after which time he came to his present location and purchased forty acres of land from the railroad company. Of this land he has but nine acres cleared, but is doing well at the blacksmithing business, which he carries on in connection with his farm work.

Mr. Gassman was married in Germany, March 17, 1885, to Miss Anna Ziman, a native of Germany, born November 2, 1852. Both her parents, John and Francisca (Kuns) Ziman, were natives of Germany, and are now deceased. Mrs. Gassman has one sister, Rosa Ziman, now living in Germany, the land of her nativity. Mr. Gassman has a sister, Mrs. Emma (Gassman) Reimer, who was born in Germany, September 20, 1862, and is still living in her native country, where she has a position as a mail clerk. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Gassman are: Mrs. Ella (Gassman) Deroux, born in Germany, August 27, 1886, living in Kittitas county, her husband being a miner; and Emel Gassman, born in Ellensburg, September 17, 1889. His personal property consists of a small herd of cattle, and several head of horses, besides his blacksmithing outfit, and farming implements. His reputation is that of a man of honor, and he is respected by all who know him.

MILES H. STOREY. Miles H. Storey, a farmer and stockman, living nine miles northeast of Cle-Elum, was born in Cass county, Michigan, August 10, 1851. His father, Chauncey Storey, was born in New York state, in 1811, and was a farmer. The mother, Louisa (Williams) Storey, was born in Richmond county, Indiana, in 1837. Both parents are now dead. During the first eighteen years of Mr. Storey's life he attended the common schools of his native state. After leaving school he engaged in farming and lumbering, which he followed for eight years in Michigan, when he went to Illinois and leased a farm. He remained there for three years, and, while he was successful, he disliked the heavy storms prevalent in that section. On this account he left Illinois and came to Washington, settling near Vancouver, where he farmed for about two years. Meeting with poor success at this location, he came to Kittitas county in May, 1885, and lived two years on the Teanaway, after which time he filed claim to a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land where he now lives. He has about one-fourth of his land under cultivation, raising principally hay to feed his herd of cattle. During the summer of 1885-86 he followed freighting from Teanaway to Ellensburg and North Yakima. August 6, 1886, he hauled lumber across the present site of Cle-Elum before a foundation had been laid. September 10th of the same year he hauled to Ellensburg one of the first five loads of coal mined at Roslyn, before a building had been completed in that town.

Mr. Storey has one sister, Viola (Storey) Wager, the wife of a farmer living in Michigan; and one brother, Charles, living in Kansas. Both were born in Michigan, the sister in 1855, and the brother, August 1, 1867. He was for a number of years a member of the Odd Fellows fraternity, but recently withdrew from the order. In politics he is a Republican. He has his farm well improved, and is rated as being well-to-do. He was an early pioneer, as is noted above, and has played an important part in the history and development of his county. He is a man of sound judgment, good reputation, and is a worthy citizen.

MICHAEL C. MILLER, a prominent sawmill owner of the Cle-Elum and Ellensburg countries, was born in Port Arthur, Canada, January 17, 1864. He was the son of Samuel and Mary (Frost) Miller, both natives of France, who came to Canada in the early days. Mr. Miller's life has been one of such activity that he has had very little time in which to acquire an education. However, by hard experience with the world, and by his wide-awake nature, he has gained sufficient knowledge of affairs and men to enable him to successfully carry on his business, and render him an intelligent and interesting conversationalist. When twelve years of age he came to the United States, stopping at Duluth, Michigan, and there launched upon a career of independence. He began by herding cattle, and doing any other work he could find to do. At seventeen he went to Louisiana, where he worked on a rice plantation near Lake Charles for two years. Then he moved to Texas and there worked for eighteen months at odd jobs which came in his way. After leaving Texas he worked at various callings in the territories of New Mexico and Arizona. Next he went to California and engaged in the wood business. In this venture he was comparatively successful and remained so occupied for about eight years, till, upon the opening of the Oklahoma strip, he sold out and turned his steps eastward in search of land. Joining one thousand other land-seekers at Caldwell, Kansas, he made a rush for the coveted strip, but was too late for success, as all the land had been taken. From Oklahoma he made his way to Washington, stopping at Farmington, Whitman county, and working there the following summer for the railroad company. His next move was to Spokane, and finally he came to this county and secured employment in and about Ellensburg. Upon the opening of the big irrigating ditch he took a position with the ditch company and remained with it until its dissolution. Upon the failure of the company Mr. Miller was left with but forty-five cents in money, and no home. Undaunted, he again started out to work up from the bottom. Eventually he obtained a start in the lumber milling business, and after a year he began work for William Thompson, of Roslyn, in a sawmill. In 1894 the Cooley mill burned, whereupon Mr. Miller purchased a half interest in the business, and at once began to rebuild the plant. He operated the mill for two years, and then bought his partner's interest and moved the mill to its present site at Cle-Elum. The plant now turns out between twelve and fifteen thousand feet of lumber per day, and is well equipped for manufacturing all kinds of lumber for building purposes. It is operated under the firm name of Wright Bros. & Miller, and a ready local market is found for all its products.

Mr. Miller was married at Cle-Elum, September 9, 1899, by Justice of the Peace T. M. Jones, to Miss Lillie Davis, daughter of Thomas and Margaret (Reese) Davis. Both of Mrs. Miller's parents were born in Wales, and came to America about thirteen years ago. The father was killed in the memorable explosion in the Roslyn mines in 1892, where forty-seven miners met a similar death. Mrs. Miller was born in Ballaclava, Wales, July 17, 1882, and came to Washington with her parents. Mr. and Mrs. Miller have one child, Ethel Taimor, born at Cle-Elum, August 8, 1900. Mr. Miller was reared under Catholic and Baptist influence, though he has no direct church connections at the present time. He is a member of the Knights of Pythias and the Royal Neighbors fraternities, and is highly esteemed by all his acquaintances.

LOUIS CASS KENNEDY, a merchant of Cle-Elum, was born in Streator, Illinois, March 28, 1870. William P. Kennedy, his father, was born in Pennsylvania in 1832, of Irish parentage. The elder Kennedy served in the army for four years during the Civil war, and is now a member of the G. A. R. The mother, Sarah M. (Thatcher) Kennedy, is of German stock, born in Ohio, in 1834. When a boy, Louis Cass attended the common schools of his birthplace, and in later years mastered the machinist's trade. This vocation he followed in Illinois until he became nineteen years of age, when, in 1890, he came to Washington. He settled at Roslyn and engaged in coal mining, which he followed for about ten years. After leaving this occupation he spent four years in the employ of the firm of Carollo & Genasci. Next he went into business with his brother under the firm name of Kennedy Bros., at his present place in Cle-Elum. The firm carries a $15,000 stock of groceries and miners' supplies, and is doing a prosperous business. Mr. Kennedy has five brothers: Francis M., a city employee; William P., miner; Martin L., miner; Edward H., miner, all of Streator, Illinois, and Richard E., junior partner of the firm of Kennedy Bros., of Roslyn.

Before coming to Washington, at Streator, Illinois, Mr. Kennedy was married to Miss Matilda Frame, daughter of John and Matilda (Dunlope) Frame, both of whom were born near Glasgow, Scotland. John Frame was a miner, and came to the United States in 1871, settling in the state of Illinois. Mrs. Kennedy's brothers and sisters are: Ruth H. Paton, whose husband is a miner at Roslyn; Margaret Maxwell, whose husband is a miner at Roslyn, and Robert Frame, a teamster living in Roslyn. Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy are parents of two children, Matilda Mae, born July 15, 1890, in Streator, Illinois, and Ruth, born in Roslyn, February 22, 1900. Mr. Kennedy was reared under the influence of the Presbyterian church. He is a member of Welcome lodge, No. 30, Roslyn Knights of Pythias. During the years 1901 and 1902 he was a member of the Roslyn city council under Mayor Morgan, and resigned his office in order to take up business at Cle-Elum. He is now one of the substantial and trusted citizens of his town, public spirited and enterprising, and awake to every opportunity for the advancement of his community.

JOSEPH SCHOBER, of the firm of Giacomine & Schober, a leading grocery and bakery firm of Cle-Elum, is an Austrian by birth, born in October, 1869, and came to the United States in 1890. He is the son of Jacob and Margaret Schober, both born in Austria, where they are still living, engaged in agricultural pursuits. Mr. Schober acquired a good common school education in his native land during his youth. Upon coming to this country he settled at Blocton, Alabama, and engaged in mining coal. This business he followed at Blocton for nine years, during which time he mastered the English language. Leaving Alabama he went to California, where he followed gold mining one year; thence to British Columbia, again to engage in coal mining. Here he remained for two years, then came to his present location, formed a partnership with John Giacomine and entered the field of mercantile pursuits. From its inception the business of Giacomine & Schober has been one of profit and growth. Mr. Schober began with a capital of about $1,200, which sum he has since more than doubled. The Hazelwood bakery, which is owned and operated by the firm, turns out daily four hundred loaves of bread, exclusive of the other products of the bakery, and runs a wagon to all the surrounding towns and through adjacent rural districts. Mr. Schober has three brothers; Jacob, John and Veronika, the latter of Brooklyn, New York, the others, miners, of Blocton, Alabama.

In 1895, in the state of Alabama, Mr. Schober was married to Miss Augusta Lusher, whose parents are living in Austria. Mrs. Schober was born in Austria, and came to the United States in 1893. Mr. and Mrs. Schober are parents of three children: Joseph, Albert and Frank, all of whom were born in Alabama. Both Mr. and Mrs. Schober are members of the Roman Catholic church, and are social leaders in their town. Mr. Schober has ever been an industrious and energetic man, honest in all his dealings, and public spirited. He is now reaping the rewards of his busy and straightforward life in the confidence and patronage of the public which he serves.

CHARLES SMALLWOOD is a prosperous miner of Cle-Elum, Washington. He was born in Whitehaven, Cumberland, county, England, June 7, 1856, and is the son of Charles Smallwood, a farmer, and Elizabeth (Dockery) Smallwood, both natives of England. Mr. Smallwood attended the common schools until twelve years of age, and then began working on a farm. When sixteen years old he went into the mines. In 1886 he came to the United States and settled in Rich Hill, Missouri, where he remained for five years. From there he moved to Roslyn and began his work for the coal company, and has since continued in that employment. His home, since 1901, has been at Cle-Elum. He was married in the town of his birth, March 14, 1879, to Margaret Nicholson, who was born in the same place, May 1, 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Smallwood now have two children: William R., now a miner, born in Rich Hill, Missouri, June 22, 1886, and Mary Jane, born in Roslyn, March 20, 1892. Mr. Smallwood is a member of Welcome lodge, Knights of Pythias, of Roslyn. He has passed through all the chairs of that order. He is also a member of the Episcopal church. He takes much interest in educational matters, and has served as a school director. He has considerable property holdings, including several houses and lots in Cle-Elum, one hundred and sixty acres of farming land in the Ellensburg valley, and one hundred and sixty acres of coal land just west of Cle-Elum. On March 28, 1888, three years prior to his coming to Roslyn, he was badly burned in an explosion in the mines at Rich Hill, Missouri, where forty-two miners lost their lives. In Roslyn, February, 1892, he suffered a similar accident, again being badly burned. Since the last accident Mr. Smallwood has been more fortunate, and now, from the property his labor and good judgment have and are accumulating, he expects to derive values that will safely assure the well-being of himself and his family.

PETER YOUNGER, engaged in farming three miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington, was born in Germany, July 28, 1843, being the son of Zilvesta and Gertrude (Spindle) Younger, both natives of the Fatherland and both now dead. Mr. Younger was educated in Germany and when fifteen years old began work in the quartz mines. After eight years he entered a machine shop, where he labored about twenty years. In 1880 he came to the United States, located in Pittsburg, and worked in machine shops four years. He then came to Cle-Elum and bought seventy-two acres of land, on which he has since resided. He had two brothers, Jacob and Nicholas, the last named being deceased.

Mr. Younger was married in Germany, November 9, 1872, to Miss Marie Kloumann, daughter of John and Mari (Bur) Kloumann. She was born in Germany, March 10, 1848. Her sister, Gertrude Bloome, and brother, Joseph, still live in the old country. Mr. and Mrs. Younger have the following children: Maria, born October 6, 1873; Mrs. Cathrena Killmore, born October 5, 1874, of Ellensburg; Jacob, December 6, 1876; Pauline, August 15, 1881, and Bettie, February 2, 1890. Mr. Younger is a Democrat and belongs to the Catholic church. He is industrious and saving and besides his seventy-two acre farm, owns a good home and thirteen head of cattle.

JAMES S. DYSART, living five miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington, on his farm, was born March 22, 1839, in New York state, where he received his early education and worked on a farm until he was eighteen years old. In 1855 he came to the coast and spent the next six years in California, being engaged in the sawmill business. He spent about five years in Nevada, and in 1860 came to Washington. After prospecting a year he took up a pre-emption claim of one hundred and sixty acres in Yakima county, near Ellensburg, and later bought an adjoining tract, of similar size, from the railroad. He sold the railroad land in 1901. In 1876 he put in the first sawmill on Yakima river, which he ran four years. He has devoted much time to raising cattle and horses. Mr. Dysart is the son of Duncan and Elizabeth Dysart. His mother's maiden name was Shaw. Both parents were natives of Scotland, and died in New York state. Their other children were Euphemia, of Nebraska, and Elizabeth, now deceased. Mr. Dysart is a member of the Blue lodge of Masons, and belongs to the Presbyterian church. Politically he is a Republican and is active in all matters of importance. He served four years as county commissioner of Kittitas county and was the only Republican elected at that time. His present home is on his well-improved farm of eighty acres.

JAMES M. McDONALD, who is farming five miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington, was born in Missouri, Franklin county, December 31, 1843. His father, William McDonald, was a farmer in Missouri and started across the Plains in 1852 and died on the trip. The family came on and located in Willamette valley, Oregon. His mother, Jane (Callowell) McDonald, died at the age of eighty-four years. Mr. McDonald was nine years old when the family reached Oregon. He went to school there and worked on his mother's farm until he was twenty-two years old. In June, 1874, he moved to Washington and engaged in farming. In 1882 he spent some time in the mines and then took up a homestead on Swauk prairie, where he lived seventeen years. He sold out and in 1890 bought the Seaton place, on the Teanaway river, where he now lives. His brothers and sister are: Jess W., of Ellensburg; F. S. McDonald, of California; O. R. McDonald, of Spokane; Fenton R. McDonald, of Spokane Indian reservation, and Mary Hanna, of Ellensburg. Mr. McDonald was married in Oregon in 1870 to Sarah Davis, who was born in Silverton, Oregon, July 14, 1851. She was the daughter of Leander and Mary (Cox) Davis, who had the following other children: Albert, Emma Montgomery, Clinton, Lucinda McClure, Florinda Ames, Forrest, Grant, Lincoln, Valina and Albin Davis, all living in Oregon, and Armilda Philbrick, who is dead. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald have two children, Jessie Wright, born October 26, 1872, and Lavilla Hoxie, born January 18, 1881. Mr. McDonald is a Democrat. He has a fine ranch of one hundred and sixty acres under a high state of cultivation, much of which is devoted to grass. He is a prominent and prosperous farmer, well liked and highly respected.

GEORGE S. PRIEST, who was born in Littleton, Massachusetts, in 1833, is now engaged in farming two miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington. He is the son of Nathan and Mercy (Robbins) Priest, natives of the Bay state, both of whom passed away at the age of ninety-three years. His three sisters are: Lucy Johnston, of Troy, New York; Mrs. Sarah Gilson and Ellen Priest, of Massachusetts. Mr. Priest was educated in his native state and worked with his father until sixteen years old. He spent four years in the shoe business and then began to learn the trade of a machinist. After three years in the car shops of Troy, he went to California in 1858, by way of Panama. He spent six years mining in the Golden state and in Nevada, and in 1864 went to Montana with a pack-train. He then returned to California to look after the estate of his brother and next year went home by the steamer route. He later moved to Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, and bought a half-interest in a planing mill. He sold out after nine years, moved to Texas and engaged in the sheep business. He then came west to California once more, bought a schooner and went to Cocos Island in search of buried treasure, but without success. He returned to California, made some mining investments and lost his money. He then mined for three years in Arizona before moving to Grays Harbor, Washington, where he engaged in the sawmill business. He next moved to Ellensburg and ran a planer for the mills and in 1886 located the place that has been his home for over seventeen years.

He was married in 1867 to Miss Harriet Beers, who died nine years later. He was again married, in 1884, to Mrs. Ella Benjamin, a native of York state and daughter of Charles and Sarah (Groat) Perkins. His wife was a school teacher, and was the widow of L. J. Benjamin. She has two sisters, Jennie and Mary, both married. She has one child by her first marriage, Estella Harvey, born August 16, 1871. His child by his first marriage is Willie H. Priest, born November 5, 1871. Mr. Priest is a Mason, and politically, a Republican. Mrs. Priest belonged to the Presbyterian church. She died August 11, 1903. Mr. Priest has eighty acres of land in alfalfa, a modern home in Roslyn, and is highly spoken of by all.

J. C. O'CONNOR, a farmer, near Cle-Elum, Washington, is a native of New York, born October 18, 1846. His father, Chester O'Conner, came of Irish parents, but was himself a New Yorker by birth. He was a farmer and miller and lived and died in his native state. The mother, Laura (Parsons) O'Conner, died in New York when her son was but three years of age. Mr. O'Conner was reared in New York until he was seventeen, when he struck out for himself, going to Wisconsin, where he engaged in farming for a year. He then enlisted and served in the Civil war until its close;

then returned to Wisconsin and the same year went to Minnesota, where he engaged in farming. He remained in the state seven years, then started for the west, landing in Seattle in 1872. He rented a farm on Lake Washington, and the next year pre-empted a tract of land on the same lake, where he also farmed for a brief period. He worked for the New Castle Coal Mining Company for a time, and then bought another farm on the lake, where he made his home for sixteen years. In the meantime, in 1884, he bought a steamer, which plied on the lake for a number of years. In 1893 he removed to Snohomish, where he continued steambotting until 1897. He then sold the steamer and built a shingle-mill, which was later destroyed by fire. After this disaster he returned once more to Lake Washington and three years later traded his farm for his present place near Cle-Elum, on which he settled in June, 1902.

He was married in Minnesota, September 19, 1869, to Miss Eva K. Tannehill, a native of Ohio, born February 8, 1850, and a resident of the state until seventeen years of age. Her father, William Tannehill, was a Virginian by birth, born in 1809. The mother, Sarah (Harner) Tannehill, was born in Ohio in 1816. Both parents are now dead. Mr. and Mrs. O'Conner have had eight children, five of whom are still living: George L., in Seattle, and Henry, Maude, Clarence and Catherine at home. Fraternally, Mr. O'Conner is affiliated with the G. A. R., I. O. O. F., A. O. U. W. and Knights of Maccabees. Religiously, he is a Spiritualist, and politically, a staunch Republican. His diversified business pursuits have given him an extensive experimental education, and a wider conception of men and things than most men enjoy.

EDMUND TAYLOR, an Englishman by birth, but an American by choice, both in spirit and principle, is one of the well-to-do and respected farmers residing in the Cle-Elum country. He was born November 4, 1845. His father, Charles Taylor, who departed this life when our subject was but a small boy, was a farmer in England, which was also his birthplace. The mother, Sarah (Holt) Taylor, was likewise of English birth, and died in that country. Edmund resided in England until twenty-seven years of age. His education was acquired in his native country while he worked upon the home farm, where he continued until eighteen. At that time he engaged in railroading, which line of occupation he followed continuously for ten years, when he decided upon a change of scenes and occupation. In 1872 he took passage for the United States, located in Pennsylvania and engaged in farming, which he followed with success for some fifteen years. He then became possessed with the desire to try the much talked of Pacific coast country, and disposing of his holdings, he, in 1880, settled in the Puyallup valley, Washington, where he resided for three years. In 1892 he came to Kittitas county, and after looking about for a time, purchased of the railroad company his present farm of two hundred and forty acres, located five miles east of Cle-Elum, on the Teanaway. Mr. Taylor has one brother, James, living in Pennsylvania.

He was married in England, January 2, 1868, to Miss Alice Woods, a native of England, in which country she was brought up. Her father, Charles Woods, was also of English birth, and died in his native land at the goodly age of seventy-seven. He was in the employ of one firm for fifty-two years. The mother, Ann (Pierpoint) Woods, was born and died in England, where she lived to see eighty-four summers come and go. Their other children are: Joseph, John, James, Elizabeth and Samuel, all residing in England. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor have three children: Sadie A. Robar, born in England, November 2, 1871, now a resident of Colorado. She has two bright, winsome children, of whom their grandparents are justly proud: Alice, born in Cripple Creek, Colorado, February 28, 1897, and Grace I., born in same place, October 5, 1901. Charles W., the eldest of the children, was born in England, January 6, 1890, and now lives on the farm, and Kate H. Hall, the youngest, was born in Massachusetts, and is now a resident of Cle-Elum. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor are connected with the Episcopal communion. The husband is an avowed Republican, and is at present serving his community as road supervisor. He is recognized as a public-spirited citizen, and an enterprising business man.

RICHARD WALSH, one of the prosperous farmers of Kittitas county, resides on his farm six miles east of Cle-Elum, where he owns six hundred and forty acres in a body. His father, Richard Walsh, Sr., was a native of Ireland, born in 1820. In early life he went to Liverpool, where he learned the trade of shipwright, and had the distinction of having assisted in building the first iron ship constructed in that place. He is now a resident of Philadelphia. Mary A. (Bovard) Walsh, his wife, was born in Scotland, and died when her son Richard, Jr., was but an infant. He was born in Liverpool, England, August 13, 1849, and after attending school, he, at the age of fourteen, engaged as solicitor on a newspaper, which position he held for two years. He then started to learn the trade of shipwright, at which he served four years. In 1869 he took passage for the United States. He landed at New York, and after working for a brief time in the shipyards of that city, went to Philadelphia, where he and his father engaged in the business for themselves, in which Richard, Jr., continued for three years. He then entered the employ of the great ship-building firm of Cramps, and continued with them for seven years. In 1889 he went to Texas, there built a cotton mill and gin, which he continued to operate for several years with success. In 1889 he came to Washington, settling first in the town of Roslyn, where he remained for one year, and then purchased his present place. He has made this place his home continuously for thirteen years, improving and developing it, and, incidentally, prospering. He makes a specialty of alfalfa, of which he has some two hundred acres. His brothers and sisters are: William, Francis, Mary E. O'Brien, and Alice Walsh, all of whom make their homes in Philadelphia.

He was married in Philadelphia, May 20, 1879, to Miss Elizabeth Gibbs, a native of Chester, England, born June 17, 1839. She learned the dress-makers' trade at the age of fourteen and followed it for sixteen years. Her father, Thos. Gibbs, was a railroad man, and was in the employ of the London & Northwestern Railroad Company for thirty-six years. He died in 1901, at the age of seventy-three. Her mother, Fannie (Davis) Gibbs, was a native of England, where she died in 1877 at the age of fifty. Mrs. Walsh has one sister, Alice Hartley, living in Roslyn. Their living children are: Joseph E., Thomas A. and Richard J. The father of the family is fraternally affiliated with the Knights of Pythias, and his wife with the Rathbone Sisters. Politically, he is a Democrat; religiously, a Catholic. He is interested in educational matters and has held the office of school director for thirteen years continuously.

AUGUST HASSE is one of the pioneers of the Cle-Elum country, where he filed upon his present farm May 24, 1883, and has since made it his home. He is a native of Germany, born February 3, 1843. His father, Charles Hasse, was also a native of Germany, and a soldier in the German army, serving forty years and making a record unsurpassed for faithfulness and soldierly qualities. He died in that country at the age of sixty-five. The mother died when her son was quite young and he has a very indistinct remembrance of his maternal parent. Mr. Hasse started out for himself very early in life, and has continued to make his own living ever since, taking the ups and downs of life in a philosophical manner. At the age of fourteen he engaged to learn the harness maker's trade, at which he served four years' apprenticeship, and then started out on a three years' tour over the country, traveling almost constantly. At the end of this time he settled down and worked at his trade for seventeen years in his native land. The spirit of roving once more possessed him, and he this time crossed the ocean to the United States, landing in Buffalo, New York, in 1878. He here worked one year and then moved west to Denver, Colorado, where he worked at his trade for two years. In 1882 he went to Ellensburg, and one year later pre-empted his present farm. Mr. Hasse has one sister, Lena Hadden, who lives in Germany.

He was married in Germany in 1872, to Miss

Eliza Schultz, born in 1847, and a native of that country, where she was reared and educated. Her parents were John and Areka (Able) Schultz, her father being a German farmer. They were the parents of four children: Ernest, in Whitman county, Washington; Johanna Carstan, in Germany; Mary Cali, Germany, and Mrs. Hasse. His first wife died in 1877, and he was again married, in June, 1885, to Miss Louise Schlomann, a native of Germany. This wife passed away on December 20, 1902. To this second marriage were born the following children: Augusta Rosner, in Germany; Karl; Johanna; Ernest, and Mary (deceased). Mr. Hasse politically, is an ardent Republican, and he and his wife are connected with the Lutheran church.

EMERY L. TUBBS, owner and operator of a sawmill five miles east of Cle-Elum, was born in Pennsylvania, October 3, 1853. His parents, Hiram and Altheda (Segears) Tubbs, were also natives of the Quaker state. In 1862 the husband enlisted in the service of his country, and was killed at Petersburg, in the early part of the war. The widow and family moved to Minnesota, and here Emery grew to man's estate, receiving his education at the district school house. When he was eighteen his mother also passed away and he was left an orphan in the world. He continued to follow farming in the state until he was twenty-three. He then cut loose from the old moorings and started out to see the country, going first to Texas for one year, where he worked at carpentering; then to Kansas, and a year later he returned to Minnesota. Here he located and remained for ten years, working at the carpenter's trade and also operating a shingle-mill. He finally came west to Spokane and went to work in a sash and door factory, and later became foreman in the construction of various buildings in the city, at which he was employed two years. Seeing an opportunity to buy a sawmill in Mead, he took advantage of it and moved to that place, where he operated the mill for two years, then moved it to Cle-Elum, Washington, selling it shortly after getting it well established. He bought his present mill in 1894, has continued to run it ever since, and has built up a good business. Mr. Tubbs has one sister, Mrs. Nellie Cheesman, who resides in Pennsylvania, her native state.

He was married in Minnesota, December 19, 1876, to Miss Evaline Pace, who was born in Minnesota in 1861, and there grew to womanhood. Her father, William Pace, was a native of Ohio and a farmer by occupation. He served through the Civil war with credit, and at its close again took up his residence in Minnesota, where he continued to reside until his death in 1901. Mrs. Tubbs has two brothers, Charles and Newton, living in Minnesota, and two sisters, Elizabeth Nichols and Alice Skinner, living in Nebraska. Mr. and Mrs. Tubbs have the following children: Elma Taylor and Nellie Davidson, living near Cle-Elum; Hazel and Bertha, the latter deceased. Their father is an active Republican, and deeply interested in the success of the principles of his party, for which end he is ever ready to exert his influence. Fraternaly, he is affiliated with the I. O. O. F., and his people are members of the Methodist church.

WILLIAM H. H. KNIGHT, born in Harrison county, Ohio, March 8, 1841, is now a farmer residing nine miles east of Cle-Elum. His father, Immur L. Knight, born in Virginia in 1815, was by trade a farmer and miller. He was a pioneer in the state of Ohio, and from there removed to Missouri. From the latter named state he removed to Nebraska, where he was a frontiersman. In 1857 he made his home in Kansas, where he later died. He was of French descent, and his wife, Rachel (Ross) Knight, was also a native of Virginia, born in 1820, and married at the age of sixteen. Mr. Knight removed to Nebraska with his father while in his fourteenth year, and there received his education in the common schools. Until arriving at the age of twenty he worked on the parental farm, then enlisted November 20, 1861, in Company G, Kansas volunteer cavalry, under Captain A. W. Mathews. He fought with this company all through the Civil war, and was mustered out of service in Fort Leavenworth, January 13, 1866. He then returned to his Nebraska home and again followed farming until 1877, when he emigrated to Washington. After a year in the Evergreen state, he removed to Umatilla county, Oregon, where he took up land and remained four years. After selling his interests there, he came to Kittitas county, August 5, 1880, and located on the farm he now owns. He has his ranch in a high state of cultivation, has one hundred and twenty acres in grass, and his land is watered by six miles of irrigation ditch. In all, he has three hundred and twenty acres in one body. Mr. Knight has three brothers and one sister: Thomas P. of Kansas, born in Ohio, 1843; James, of Nebraska, born in Missouri; George, now of Oregon, born in Nebraska, 1851, and Milisa A., now living in Kansas, born in Nebraska. Besides these named, he had five brothers and two sisters who are now deceased. They were: Albert, born in Ohio, 1839; John, also in Ohio; Amos I., in Missouri; Amos, Martha J., Mary K., and Benjamin F., all born in Nebraska.

He was married in Nebraska, 1867, to Miss Mary B. Skeen, and to this union four children were born: Dora, March 24, 1868; Nellie J., June 2, 1870; Alexander L., January 5, 1873, and Lulu E. Vanwinkle, born in 1876, and now living in California. They were born in Nebraska, and only the latter two are now living. On Swauk Prairie, September 18, 1884, Mr. Knight was again married, his bride being Miss E. E. Kessler, daughter of William and Diantha (Sharp) Kessler. Her father was an architect, native of Virginia, and died in 1870. Her mother was born in Indiana and died in Tacoma, Washington. Mrs. Knight was born in Wabash county, Indiana, May 17, 1867, and received her education in various localities, owing to the roving nature of her step-father, by whom she was raised. Her parents came to Washington in 1883, and settled on Swauk Prairie, where she taught the first school to be held on the prairie. She was married at the age of seventeen. Mrs. Knight had one sister, Luella, born in Indiana, now deceased. The children born to Mr. and Mrs. Knight, with dates of birth, are: Dora M., July 13, 1885; Edna, August 19, 1887; Edith, May 17, 1889; Bessie, February 22, 1891; Vesta Z., May 27, 1893; Glenn, July 25, 1895; Nellie K., January 3, 1898; Gertie, July 21, 1900, and Rachel D., February 27, 1903. All were born on Swauk Prairie, and are now living at home, with the exception of Vesta Z., who passed away January 6, 1900, of typhoid fever. The family are members of the Christian church, and Mr. Knight belongs to the Republican party. He is a prosperous farmer, and universally respected for his many sterling qualities.

JOHN HANSON. John Hanson is a prosperous farmer living ten miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington. He was born in Sweden, November 18, 1850, the son of Hans Peter and Johan (Stevens) Hanson, both natives of Sweden. His father was born in 1813, and died in the land of his birth. Until reaching his majority the son worked on his father's farm and attended common school. He came to the United States in 1872, locating in San Jose, California, where he worked in a tannery one year and in a paper-mill a year and one-half. He also farmed in the state for nearly eight years. In 1883 he came to Yakima county, took a pre-emption claim, upon which he resided for a year, and then came to the Teanaway district, in Kittitas county. He remained here four years, after which he purchased the farm upon which he still lives. When he became the owner of this farm but four acres were under cultivation, but he now has every acre in crop, and his land improved with the most modern and convenient buildings. Mr. Hanson has one brother, Nelson, living in Sweden, and two sisters: Ellna Jenson and Tilda Hanson, also living in the same country. Besides these, a sister, Christena Jenson, is dead. All were born in Sweden.

Mr. Hanson was married in Ellensburg, October 12, 1888, to Miss Sarah Piland, who was born in Missouri, March 20, 1867. She was educated in the common schools of her native state, came to Washington in 1888 with her brother, and located on Swauk Prairie. She is the daughter of Joseph and Nancie (Peden) Piland; the former born in North Carolina, 1828, and the latter in South Carolina, in the same year. Her father was a farmer, and a veteran of the Civil War, dying in Missouri in 1884. Mrs. Piland preceded her husband to the grave in 1881. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Hanson are: Martha E. (deceased); Elisha T., of Missouri; James A., Yakima county; Samuel R., living in Missouri; Mary J. Clark (deceased); Perneccia B. Blankenship (deceased); Joseph P. and William H., twins, living in Missouri; John S. and Nancy A. (both deceased, the latter dying in infancy). All were born in Missouri. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Hanson are: Lillie C., born October 28, 1889; Walter C., September 29, 1891; Alfred J., January 28, 1884, and Beulah, March 31, 1896, all born in Kittitas county. Their father, politically, is a Republican. He is greatly interested in matters pertaining to education, and has held the office of school director almost continuously since coming to the county. He is a member of the Lutheran church, while Mrs. Hanson is a Baptist. He is one of the substantial and prominent citizens of his locality.

MARTHA A. PILAND. Mrs. Martha A. Piland, who lives on a farm ten miles east of Cle-Elum, was born in Virginia in 1844. She is a daughter of William and Elizabeth (Stiner) Rutherford. Mr. Rutherford, a native of Virginia, was a blacksmith by trade, and a veteran of the Indian wars of 1835 and of the Civil war. After the former struggle he assisted in putting the Indians in Indian territory. He was of English stock, his father having come from England, as a boy of seventeen, in company with General Howe, during the Revolutionary war. His father died in 1850. Mrs. Rutherford was born in Germany in 1822 and received her education in Berlin, marrying soon after completing her course, or to be more specific, in the year 1840. She passed away in 1864.

Mrs. Piland, whose life record forms the subject of this review, received her school training in Athens, Tennessee, whither her parents had taken her when she was one year old, and where she lived for thirteen years, going then to Missouri. In this state she lived for thirty-five years, and here she was married to Mr. Piland.

In 1890, Mrs. Piland came to Seattle, and the next year found her in Kittitas county, where she soon purchased her present home, consisting of a one hundred and sixty acre farm, one hundred and five acres of which are under cultivation. Besides this farm she has a house and lot in Springfield, Missouri.

Mrs. Piland's husband was born in Hopkins county, Kentucky, January 30, 1845. His father's family were from Windsor, North Carolina, whence they had moved to the Blue Grass state. Soon after his birth they again moved, going to Missouri, and here he gained his education, working betimes on the parental farm. When eighteen years old he enlisted for service in the Civil war, and from that time until the close of hostilities he lived the life of a soldier in active conflict. He was mustered out of service May 12, 1865, and immediately returned home, where he died in 1871.

The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Piland are: John O. Rutherford, born in Tennessee, now living in Indian territory; William T. Rutherford, born in Missouri, now in Wyoming; Mrs. Malinda McCouhah, born in Tennessee, now in Missouri; Mrs. Sarah Bowls, born in Missouri, now in Texas; Mrs. Celia Pattie, born in Missouri, now a resident of Indian territory. The children of Mrs. Piland are Mrs. Mary Walker, born in Missouri, February 17, 1867, now living in Springfield, that state, and Mrs. Millie Manning, born in Missouri, April 18, 1869, and now in Seattle.

An active member of the Presbyterian church and a leader in the social life of her community, Mrs. Piland is well and favorably known in the neighborhood where her lot has been cast.

MARION J. EVENS is a farmer residing ten miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington. He was born in Arkansas, April 9, 1857, the son of William and Jane (Gray) Evens. His father is of English extraction, born in Tennessee, July 24, 1827. He is a farmer, now living in Ozark county, Missouri, and is a veteran of the Civil war. Jane (Gray) Evens was likewise born in Tennessee, 1834, and was married at the age of seventeen. Mr. and Mrs. Evens moved to Missouri in 1852, and there Marion was born and received his education in the common schools. He worked on his father's farm until he became twenty-two years of age; then commenced farming on his own account. He followed agriculture in his native state for three years; in 1882 came to Washington and settled in Kittitas county, taking a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres, which farm is still his home. He now has the entire homestead under cultivation, and well improved. Besides his home place, Mr. Evens has six hundred and forty acres of grazing land, stocked with 800 head of sheep. He also has a sufficient number of horses to carry on the work about the farm. Mr. Evens has brothers and sisters as follows: Levi (deceased); William J., Martha Stone, Jamima, Mifford, Cynthia Scott, Wayne, Joby (deceased), Nancy E. Prim, and Everette (deceased), all living in Missouri; Edward and Silas, of Seattle, and Matilda George, living on Lookout mountain. The four first named were born in Arkansas; the others in Missouri.

Mr. Evens was married in Ozark county, Missouri, February 2, 1879, to Miss Nancy A. Evens, daughter of Jesse, a farmer of English extraction, born in North Carolina, 1815, and died in Washington; and Bartema (Welch) Evans, a native of Indiana, who was married when quite young and died in Missouri. Mrs. M. J. Evens was born in Ozark county, where she grew to womanhood, receiving her education in the common schools. Mrs. Evens had four brothers and one sister, all born in the state of Missouri. Their names, and present residences are: Robert, Missouri; Peter (deceased); Jane Piland, Washington; Simeon and James M., Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Evens have brought up seven children, all of whom are living at home. Their names, with state and date of birth in each instance, are: William J., Missouri, December 30, 1879; Thomas, Washington, October 3, 1882; Matilda J., Washington, September 9, 1885; Clara, Washington, August 8, 1887; Benjamin H., Washington, September 11, 1890; Mamie B., Washington, May 15, 1894, and Marion A., Washington, February 2, 1896. Politically, Mr. Evens is a Roosevelt Republican, and in religion he is a member of the Seventh Day Adventist denomination. He is regarded as being a man of sound financial standing, liberal hearted and of sterling integrity.

HARRY S. FIELDING, now deceased, was a progressive farmer residing twelve miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington. He was born in Ontario, January 9, 1859, and passed away September 3, 1903. His father was Thomas Fielding, also a native of Ontario, in turn a farmer and a hotel man, who crossed the Plains in the early days, and was a frontiersman all his life. Margaret (McCutcheon) Fielding, mother of Harry S., was born in Ontario, and is now living in British Columbia. Until arriving at the age of twelve, Mr. Fielding attended the common schools of his native country. At the age mentioned he began making his own way in the world, and one year later went to Manitoba. He remained but a short time, however, then returned to Ontario. He removed to Dakota later on, and there engaged in agriculture for a period of six years, when, in 1887, he pushed on to Seattle, where he engaged in teaming. After three years in that city he went to Westminster, British Columbia, and remained there twelve months, engaged in the same business he followed while in Seattle. He spent the four years following on a ranch near Blaine, Washington, at the expiration of which time he came to Swauk Prairie, Kittitas county, and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of railroad land. On this farm he lived until his death; and succeeded in placing seventy-five acres of his land under cultivation. His ranch is well improved, and equipped with ample buildings. Mr. Fielding had three brothers and one sister, all born in Canada, whose names and present residences are: Thomas, British Columbia; Hugh and Stewart, Canada, and Mary Culbert, Dakota.

In Dakota, June 22, 1884, Mr. Fielding was married to Miss Laura Ryckman, daughter of Elija and Elizabeth (Wardell) Ryckman, both of whom were born and died in Canada. Her father was a carpenter by trade, and died in 1891. Mrs. Fielding was born in Canada, August 16, 1858. She received her education, and also learned the trade of dress making, in her native country. She has one sister and two brothers, all born and still living in Canada; Frances Little, John and Thomas Ryckman. Mrs. Fielding is the mother of seven children, whose names and dates of birth are: Henry E., born in Dakota, May 3, 1885; Maud, in Dakota, October 9, 1886; Melvin F., in British Columbia, July 5, 1889; Edna, in British Columbia, April 14, 1891; Chester B., also in British Columbia, September 29, 1892; Claud L., in Washington, September 22, 1896; and Clarence, likewise in Washington, May 4, 1898. Mr. Fielding, during his life, was a member in good standing of the Odd Fellows fraternity, and politically, was a Democrat. The only office he ever held was that of road overseer, which position he filled for four years. Mrs. Fielding has a small herd of choice cattle, and a number of horses. Her husband was considered one of the substantial and prosperous farmers of his community, and was regarded as a man of honesty and integrity, which estimable qualities made him a man of prominence and prestige among his fellow citizens, and his loss is greatly to be regretted.

DAVID W. GRAVES, living on his farm, nine miles east of Cle-Elum, was born in Lincoln county, Missouri, January 21, 1845, the son of John P. and Maria (Glover) Graves, the former a native of Virginia and the latter of Missouri. John P. Graves was born in 1824, and has been a farmer during his entire life. He crossed the Plains in 1849 by ox team conveyance, and took a donation claim of six hundred and forty acres in Marion county, Oregon, where he is still living. Mrs. Graves, the mother of David W., was born in 1826, and was married at the age of sixteen. By a comparison of dates it will be seen that David was a lad of four years when his parents removed to Oregon. In this state he received his education in the common schools. At the age of eighteen he went into the mines near Baker City, where he worked for a period of seven years, and then removed to the Willamette valley. He there engaged in agriculture as a means of livelihood, and continued to reside in the Willamette valley for a period of seventeen years, at the end of which time he came to Kittitas county and purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land from the railroad company. He later sold this tract, and took an equally large tract as a homestead. This he also sold, and then purchased forty acres in the Teanaway valley, where he still makes his home. Mr. Graves' brothers and sisters are: Philip M., born in Missouri; Sarah J. Daily, born while crossing the Plains, en route to Oregon; Franklin T.; Edward; John M.; Flora Hobart; Wilbur, and Dolie Johnson, all born in Oregon, except the two first named. The brothers and sisters are all living in Oregon with the exceptions of John M., Wilbur and Mrs. Johnson, who reside in Montana, Spokane, Washington, and Idaho, respectively. Besides these whose names are given, one brother, Lorenzo, born in Oregon, is deceased.

Mr. Graves was married in Salem, Oregon, 1870, to Amanda E. Shepherd, who was born in Nodaway county, Missouri, November 22, 1850, and as an infant crossed the Plains to Oregon with her parents. She was educated in the common schools of Oregon, and learned the dressmaker's trade, at which she worked five years, previous to her marriage, which event took place in her twentieth year. Her father was Andrew Shepherd, born in Illinois in 1815; a farmer by occupation. He was a veteran of the Indian war of 1855, having crossed the Plains in an ox wagon in 1852, and settled in Marion county, Oregon. He was of Scotch-German ancestry, and is now deceased. Clara (Lanham) Shepherd was her mother, and was born in Missouri in 1817, and married when seventeen years of age. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Graves are: Francis M. and Martha J. Dent, born in Illinois, and now residents of Oregon and Walla Walla, Washington, respectively; James B. and DeCalb, born in Missouri and residing in Oregon; Jasper and Newton, both born and now living in Oregon, and Mary L. Cooper, born in Oregon, 1860, now living in Kittitas county, Washington. Besides these named, Margaret A., Jacob and Lucinda, all born in Missouri, and Curtis, born in Oregon, are now deceased. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Graves are: Florence Zeek, born in Marion county, Oregon, January 30, 1871; Jett, September 23, 1873, a seamstress and milliner of Spokane; George M., March 27, 1877; Burton, February 21, 1881; Clara G., March 13, 1885; and Ralph, October 21, 1886, all born in the Webfoot state. In religion, the parents are Seventh Day Adventists, and in politics, Mr. Graves affiliates with the Republican party. He owns a modern home, and his farm is well improved and amply stocked. He is prosperous and energetic, bears a good reputation and has a host of friends.

CHARLES R. BENSON, engaged in farming five miles south of Cle-Elum, Washington, was born in Hancock county, Maine, March 19, 1860. His father, Freeland H. Benson, was also a native of that state. His mother was Elizabeth H. (Sadler) Benson. Besides Charles, their children were: Edwin F., of Tacoma; Mrs. Mary E. Bettinger, of Seattle; Edna L. (deceased), and Harry C., of Seattle. Charles R. Benson was educated in Maine and graduated from the grammar school at the age of fourteen, at which time his parents moved to Lincoln county, Washington. He spent one year in the high school in Sprague, and when seventeen years old secured employment in the railroad shops located in that place. After one year of that work he returned to his father's farm for two years. He was then in the railway mail service one year; for twelve months he was a fireman on the Seattle & Lake Shore road, and was engineer of the White Star steam laundry for a period of eight months. In 1892 he went to Yakima county, where he engaged in farming and contracting for four years. The succeeding two years were spent in Douglas county; he then returned to Yakima county, and for two years was in the fish business with his father. The following two years he was engaged as land examiner by the Northern Pacific Railway Company. In 1900 he bought his present farm and moved there in 1902. He was married in North Yakima, July 28, 1899, to Miss Leona Vandermost, who was born in Holland, October 7, 1879. She is the daughter of Frank and Anna J. (Bushman) Vandermost, both natives of Holland and now farming in Oregon. Her brothers, Cornelius and Henry, and sister, Marie C., live in Oregon; her brother Frank lives in Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Benson have one child, Edna L., who was born in North Yakima, March 14, 1901. The father is a member of the Methodist church. He is a Republican in politics and belongs to the Modern Woodmen of America fraternity. He is a prosperous and successful farmer, has 200 acres of hay and grazing land and 165 acres of range land.

SAMUEL L. BATES, one of the men who constructed the first irrigation ditch in Kittitas county, Washington, is now engaged in farming, three and one-quarter miles south of Cle-Elum. He was born in Jefferson county, Missouri, March 5, 1830, the son of James C. Bates, a native of Virginia, who went to Missouri at the age of four, when that territory was under Spanish control. He there lived and died. Samuel's grandfather, Elias Bates, was married to a Miss Austin, daughter of the Austins who had a Spanish concession at the site where Austin, Texas, is now located, and who built a smelter in the Missouri lead mines for the Spanish government. Mr. Bates is self educated. When fourteen he became an apprentice at the blacksmith trade and after three years moved to Keokuk, Iowa, and conducted a shop for a year and one-half. He then made the ocean trip to San Francisco, engaged in gold mining twelve years; in farming and teaming eight years, and with his brother ran a store at the mines for an additional four years. In 1873 he went to the Swauk mines in Kittitas county, Washington, where he remained two years and then located a ranch near Tanum creek, where, with others, he constructed the first irrigation ditch in the county. He lived there four years, running a blacksmith shop part of the time, then sold out and rented a farm a year. Later he bought railroad land, on which he lived nearly four years, trading it for property in Cle-Elum. After five years in the latter place, he bought his present farm from an Indian, where he has since made his home. His brothers and sisters are: James (deceased), Clara A. Sanford, Mary C. Christy, Edward, William and Vincent (deceased).

He was married in Kittitas county in 1890, to Miss May Stewart, born in Maine, November 3, 1867, daughter of Hiram I. and Mary E. (Stewart) Stewart. Her mother is dead. Her sister is Mrs. Phedora C. Barnes. Her only brother, Hiram H. Stewart, is dead. Mr. and Mrs. Bates have one child, Lewis S., born June 30, 1894. Mr. Bates has been a faithful, active Odd Fellow since 1863. Politically, he is a Democrat, and served as county commissioner for one term. He has 161 acres of productive land.

ROBERT SIMPSON, outside foreman of the Cle-Elum coal mines, has worked in and about different mines ever since he came to the United States in 1881. He was born in Glasgow, Scotland, January 1, 1871, his father, Alexander Simpson, having also been a miner. The father was born in 1829 and died in 1876. Mr. Simpson's mother, May (Little) Simpson, died about 1887. When Mr. Simpson was a boy of ten years he came to the United States with his uncle, Archie Reed, and went to Rockville, Colorado, ten miles from Canyon City, where both found employment in the coal mines. The boy went to work on top of the ground and the uncle down in the mine. He remained there five years and then went alone to Wyoming and secured employment in the mines at Rock Springs. There he remained three years, driving mules in the mines, when, in 1890, he moved to Roslyn, Washington, and went to work as a driver in the mines. After one year he went to Wellington, British Columbia, where he worked two years as driver in the mines. He returned to Roslyn a few months prior to the strike of 1894, and drove, as before. May 5, 1894, he began work sinking the first shaft on the Cle-Elum mines on ground which James, Smith, Hamer and Davis had leased from Thos. L. Gamble. At a depth of 240 feet a four and one-half foot vein of bituminous coal was struck, of the same grade as in the Roslyn mine—the best coal on the coast. He then went to digging coal in the mines and has since continued to work in the same properties. In 1898 he was promoted to fire boss, but later quit the job and engaged in track laying in the mines. After two years he was made outside foreman, a position he has since continued to fill admirably.

Mr. Simpson was married May 24, 1896, to Maud Tuttle, who was born in Illinois in 1874. Her father, William W. Tuttle, is engaged in the transfer business at Cle-Elum. Mrs. Simpson has three brothers and one sister, all of whom reside at Cle-Elum. They are William W., Roy, Mabel and Lyle Tuttle. Mr. Simpson has three sisters, all residing in Scotland. They are Mary Simpson, Annie Simpson and Maggie Simpson. He is the father of four children—Orra Simpson, Mabel Simpson, Margaret Simpson and Jennette Simpson. Mr. Simpson is a member of the Foresters. He is a member of the Republican party, but does not take an active interest in politics.

CHARLES CONNELL, the weighmaster for the coal mines at Cle-Elum, Washington, was born in Ontario, Canada, April 13, 1872, and came to the United States with his parents when but a year old. His father, Edward Connell, was a native of Ireland, and was formerly engaged in the hotel business, but has now retired and is making his home at Cle-Elum. Mr. Connell's mother, Jennie (Geggie) Connell, is of Scotch descent. She was born in 1853 and still survives. When Mr. Connell was an infant, his parents moved from Canada to Wilbur, Nebraska, where the father engaged in the hotel business for fourteen years. There Charles attended common school and the high school. The family had relatives at Cle-Elum, and, after a visit to this state, they became much impressed with the country and moved to Cle-Elum, which has since been their home. The father engaged in the general merchandise business for three years. The subject of this sketch worked at the depot as car clerk for about five years and then was appointed to a position of clerk in the postoffice, when Mrs. Rebecca Smith was postmistress. He had charge of the office for some time after F. Seldon was appointed postmaster. Mr. Connell then began work with the Cle-Elum Coal Company as weighmaster, and continued in the same position when that company was absorbed by the Northwestern Improvement Company, his present employer. He was married in 1893 to Miss Maud Willis, daughter of Samuel and Mary Willis. Mrs. Connell was a native of Pennsylvania. Her father was formerly a telegraph operator, but is now engaged in farming near Cle-Elum. Her mother is dead. Mr. Connell has two brothers, Russell H. Connell, a plumber, and Frederick Connell, also a plumber, and one sister, Daisy M. Connell, all of whom reside at Cle-Elum. He has one child, Lester W. Connell, eight years old. While Mr. Connell was elected justice of the peace of Cle-Elum precinct on the Democratic ticket, succeeding Thomas Gamble, he does not believe in blindly voting a straight ticket. He always votes for whom he considers the best man, irrespective of party affiliations. Mr. Connell is a prominent and active member of the Knights of Pythias. He has been through all of the chairs and is now past chancellor. He owns considerable property at Cle-Elum and is an active and popular citizen.

JOSEPH T. CLARK, engineer at the Cle-Elum coal mines, Cle-Elum, is a native of Washington and learned engineering on Puget Sound. His father, Thomas J. V. Clark, a merchant, was born in Baltimore, Maryland, in 1848, and died in his native state in 1892. The elder Clark was a pioneer on Puget Sound, and in an early day owned twenty acres of land now in the heart of Seattle. He served during the Civil war and was wounded near the heart, but recovered. Later he served as a scout on the Plains for several years for the government. When he first went to Seattle it was a small village. He moved to North Yakima in 1884 and started the first store there, where he remained in business for a number of years. He was the first mayor of that city. Mr. Clark's mother, Maggie (Mann) Clark, was born in Pennsylvania in 1852, and is now a resident of Elgin, Illinois. Mr. Clark was born in Skagit county, Washington, September 2, 1876, and was six years old when his parents moved to Yakima county. He was educated in the common schools there until he was eighteen years old. Then he returned to the Sound and went to steambotting and learned engineering, which he followed at intervals until 1900, farming between times. He then moved to Cle-Elum and accepted the position he now fills so capably and well.

Mr. Clark was married July 10, 1899, to Jennie Lindsey, who was born in North Yakima, September, 1879. Her father, William Lindsey, who was born in Missouri in 1811, was one of the first settlers in the Yakima valley. He served in the Civil war and then moved to Yakima county in the late sixties, and is now engaged in farming there. Mrs. Clark's mother, Ada (Wright) Lindsey, was born in 1842 in Ohio and is still living. Mrs. Clark has two brothers and four sisters: Edward, Willis, Viola, Maud, Margaret and Della Lindsey. She is the mother of one child, Erman Clark, who was born in September, 1900. Mr. Clark's eldest brother, David Clark, is a brick mason and resides at Yakima, which is also the home of two married sisters, Grace Grant, wife of Sheriff Grant, and Mamie Simpson. Sarah McKivor, another sister, lives at Seattle. Ida Clark lives with her mother at Elgin, Illinois, and Anna Livingood, lives near Yakima City. Mr. Clark is a member of the Democratic party and takes an active interest in politics, attending all the conventions. He has been successful in business affairs and owns a nice home at Cle-Elum, and, in addition, has some property at Yakima.

JAMES C. BALL is engineer at the coal mines of the Northwestern Improvement Company at Cle-Elum, and is an experienced miner, having worked in the coal mines since he was eleven years old. His father, Robert Ball, born near Manchester, England, in 1843, was also a miner. The subject of this sketch was born in Manchester, England, July 22, 1865, and came to the United States with his parents in 1868. His mother, Eliza (Dale) Ball, was born in England in 1845 and still survives.

The family settled at Des Moines, Iowa, where the father found employment in the mines. The boy was the eldest child and secured but a limited education up to the time he was eleven years old, at which time he started to work in the mines to help support the family. He continued to work there until 1894, when he moved to the Indian Territory. After he had been there a short time he began firing, and worked from that time on to become an engineer, which he followed for seven years at Coalgate, Indian Territory, and returned to Iowa, where he remained at Des Moines for three years. In 1899 he moved to Cle-Elum and took his present position.

Mr. Ball was married March 1, 1890, in the Indian Territory, to Retta V. Hicklin, who was born in Warren county, Iowa, in 1865. Her father, Francis M. Hicklin, a farmer, was born June 21, 1832, and died August 22, 1903. Her mother, Marion (Roberts) Hicklin, was born in Indiana, June 8, 1829, and died January 5, 1899. Mrs. Ball has three brothers, Nelson, a carpenter; Newton, who is engaged in the livery business, and Nathan, all of them living in Iowa. Mr. Ball was one of a family of eight—four boys and four girls. His sisters are Ida, Minnie, Frances and Mabel; his brothers Robert, an engineer; Samuel and Leonard, both farmers, all of whom live in Iowa. Mr. and Mrs. Ball have two children, Leonard L., born February 5, 1891, in the Indian Territory, and Uressa Pearl, born May 18, 1892.

Mr. Ball is a member of the Democratic party, but does not take an active interest in politics. He owns his home at Cle-Elum.

ELMER E. SIMPSON is engaged as engineer at the coal mines at Cle-Elum, Washington, and is a native of Pennsylvania, having been born at Pittsburg, December 7, 1864. He was educated in the common schools of his home city, and when about seventeen years old went to work in the rolling mills there. Later he went to the oil diggings and worked in the wells from 1888 until 1893. During that time he was a member of the state militia of Pennsylvania. He came west in 1893 and engaged in farming for three years and then went to work for the Cle-Elum Coal Company, and after the first year became engineer, which position he has continued to fill. When he first started there were but few improvements at the mines, and there was only one small engine used. The company now uses two large engines, in addition to the large electric plant. Mr. Simpson's father was a native of Ireland, and came to the United States in 1858. The ship in which he made the voyage was nearly wrecked, and consumed three months in making the passage. He located first in Philadelphia, where he lived two years. Then he moved to Pittsburg. He was a farmer, and in former years was an iron worker. He belonged to the Home Guards of Pennsylvania for a time. Mr. Simpson's mother, Louisa (Steiner) Simpson, was a native of Pittsburg and of German and Scotch descent. Her grandparents, on the mother's side belonged to the Robbins family, which trace their ancestry back to Mayflower days. Mr.

Simpson has one half-brother and three half-sisters, named, respectively, John, Hannah, Mary and Bessie, all of whom still reside in Pennsylvania. In 1890, at Camden, New Jersey, Mr. Simpson was married to Mollie A. Porter, who was born in Butler county, Pennsylvania, in 1872. Her father, William Porter, was a farmer and carpenter, and was born about 1851, and still resides in Pennsylvania, his native state. His wife, mother of the subject of this sketch, Rachel (Wilson) Porter, was born in Pennsylvania in 1850, and died in 1897. Her mother was Mary Ann Small, a descendant of a Revolutionary family. Mrs. Simpson has four sisters, named, respectively, Eudora, Estella, Elizabeth and Clara, all of whom reside in their native state, Pennsylvania. She is the mother of five children: Muriel, born at Mars, Pennsylvania, September 20, 1892; Walter, born at Teanaway, Washington, October 21, 1894; died December 24, 1901; Porter, born March 31, 1897, at Teanaway, Washington; James and Barbara, born, respectively, February 7, 1900, and September 4, 1902, at Cle-Elum, Washington.

Mr. Simpson is a prominent member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He also belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and his wife is a member of the Reformed Presbyterian Church. Mr. Simpson is a Republican, and takes great interest in party matters, attending all conventions. He owns forty acres of timber land and property at Cle-Elum. His parents are very well-to-do.

G. P. SHORT, a lawyer and notary public of Cle-Elum, Washington, drew the papers for the incorporation of that town, and was its first city attorney. He is a native of New York. He was born in Honeoye, October 8, 1875. His father, Spencer B. Short, was born in the Empire State in 1832 and comes of an old English family which settled in that state in the seventeenth century. His mother, Lorida (Pitts) Short, was born in Honeoye, New York, in 1842, and came from the old Pitts stock of that county. Her grandfather was the original owner of Pittstown, since changed to Honeoye, which was named after him. His brother, Captain Peter Pitts, was in the Revolutionary war. G. P. Short grew up to manhood in his native state. He was educated in the Genesee Wesleyan seminary at Lima, New York, at Williams College, and at Cornell University and in the law schools. He graduated in 1899 and came West to the coast. He later went to Ellensburg, and was for two years with Kaufman & Frost. In 1902 he moved to Cle-Elum and engaged in the practice of his profession. Mr. Short was married at Seattle, Washington, November 16, 1900, to Mary Bostwick, also a native of Honeoye and a schoolmate of his. Her father, William Bostwick, was a farmer of New York State, of English descent. He died in 1865. His wife died when Mrs. Short was a small child. Mrs. Short was educated in the Genesee Wesleyan academy and at Mount Holyoke, Massachusetts. She taught in New York and at St. Catherine's College in Canada, just across the line from Buffalo. She has two sisters and two brothers in New York. Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Short are the parents of two interesting children. The older, Spencer D., was born November 14, 1901; baby of the family, Catherine Short, was born December 4, 1902. Mrs. Short is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Short is a Republican, and takes a leading part in political matters, attending all conventions of his party. In addition to his law practice, he finds time to devote to the real estate business.

JOHN H. CASH, head blacksmith at the coal mines of the Northwestern Improvement Company at Cle-Elum, learned the trade with his father and brothers at Lone Jack, Missouri, his native state. He was born at Kansas City in 1861. His father, William Cash, a blacksmith, was born in North Carolina in 1832, and was raised in Kentucky. He died June 13, 1891. The mother, Elizabeth (Duncan) Cash, was born in Kentucky in 1841, and died November 5, 1891. Her ancestors were Kentucky pioneers, and her father, Thornton Duncan, was a veteran in the Mexican war. Mr. Cash was educated in the common schools of Missouri, and when seventeen years old began to learn his trade. The following year he became self-supporting, and added to his knowledge the trade of horseshoer. He worked at Kansas City and did track shoeing for a number of years. He continued to work near Kansas City and at Lone Jack until October, 1900, when he moved west and located at Cle-Elum, where his brother Oscar had previously settled. He opened up a shop and operated it for about eighteen months. Finding shoeing too hard on him, he engaged with the coal company, where he has since remained. December 17, 1895, at Wheatland, Missouri, Mr. Cash was married to Ella Shields, who was born in Hickory county, Missouri, July 16, 1869. Her father, Jacob Shields, a native of Illinois, was a stage driver in Missouri in early days, running between Springfield and Sedalia. He was born in 1845 and is still living in Missouri. Mrs. Cash's mother, Melissa (Bird) Shields, was born in Missouri in 1847 and died in 1894. Mr. Cash has one brother, Oscar Cash, now a resident of Portland, Oregon. He has two sisters, both of whom are married—Ella (Cash) Koons and Mollie (Cash) Sapp. Mrs. Cash's only brother, Edwin Shields, lives at Cle-Elum. Her married sisters, Jennie (Shields) McLean and Cora (Shields) Simms, reside in Missouri. Mrs. Cash is a member of the Baptist Church. She and Mr. Cash have an adopted daughter, Opal Cash. Mr. Cash is a member of the Modern Brotherhood of America. He is a thorough Democrat and takes an active interest in the success of his party and in matters political. He

WILLIAM M. ADAM, now serving his third term as mayor of Roslyn, Washington, is a contractor and builder, and comes from a family of carpenters. It is worthy of note that during his fourteen years' residence at Roslyn, he has worked but fourteen days outside of his trade. He was born in St. Croix county, Wisconsin, January 6, 1859. His father, Christopher Adam, was born in Germany in 1825 and came to the United States when a young man to follow his trade of cabinet making. He served as a member of the Thirtieth Wisconsin regiment for three years and four months during the Civil war, and was wounded and later was granted a pension. The mother, Catherine (Deal) Adam, was a native of Germany, but came to the United States with her parents when she was a small child. Mr. Adam secured a good education in the common schools of his native state and when but a small boy began to work at the trade of carpenter and cabinet maker with his father, and virtually grew up in the business. He remained at home until he was twenty-one, but had begun taking outside work from the time he was nineteen years old. He worked more than two years at Burkhardt's on one job, putting in a dam and building a large flour-mill and elevator plant and planing-mill. He worked at St. Paul also for a long time, and in 1889 he moved West and opened up in the contracting business at Roslyn, which he has followed with marked success ever since. Mr. Adam was married in Wisconsin in 1882 to Mary E. Pakingham, who died in January, 1889. There were three children born to them: James H., who is following the trade of a carpenter; Jane G., living in St. Paul, and William T., who lives with his father at Roslyn. In February, 1893, Mr. Adam was married to Frances Alexander, who was born in Wisconsin in 1861. She was the daughter of Joseph and Bessie (Kelley) Alexander. Both of her parents are still living. By this marriage there is one child, Georgia, ten years old. Mr. Adam's brothers and sisters bear the following names: Helen, Louis, Mary, Charles, Jacob, Christopher, Lottie and Hattie. Three of the brothers are carpenters. Mr. Adam is an active Republican, and is county committeeman, a position he has filled for years. During his residence at Roslyn he served a term as city councilman. Then he was elected mayor for two consecutive terms. After a rest he consented that his name should be used again last fall, and he was chosen mayor for the third time over James Herron, a first class citizen, who had the endorsement of the coal company. Mr. Adam is a firm advocate of public ownership of public conveniences. He was instrumental as mayor in having the first water works system installed at Roslyn. The growth of the town having made further improvements necessary to the system, these will be made under his directions. He has given this matter much thought and study, and his advice on water systems has been sought by other municipalities. He is a member of the Woodmen of the World. Mr. Adam has been very successful in his business undertakings. He is one of twelve men who own the property of the Sampson Mining Company in Skagit county. The mine is a copper, gold and silver proposition, and is considered one of the best in the Northwest. Mr. Adam owns considerable town property in Roslyn, and is a partner with A. Stoves in the undertaking business.

WILLIAM P. MORGAN, station agent at Roslyn, Washington, a position he has filled since July 3, 1891, was born in Brecon, south Wales, October 16, 1864. His father, William Morgan, was a farmer in that country, born in 1837, and came to the United States in 1876, locating in Mifflin county, Pennsylvania. He died February 8, 1903. The mother, Annie (Parry) Morgan, was born in Wales in 1838 and died September 30, 1869. Mr. Morgan attended the national schools in Wales until he was sixteen years old. He took up the study of telegraphy when he was thirteen, and soon had charge of an office. He came to the United States, January 15, 1881, and found that he had to learn telegraphy all over again. He went to Pittsburg and secured employment under Andrew Carnegie, carrying pig iron, and was paid one dollar and twenty-five cents a day. He was also employed by the Pittsburg Steel Company and the Graft-Bennet Steel Company. Later he went to Wisconsin, where his brother, David E. Morgan, was employed. There he worked on a farm and learned telegraphy on the Milwaukee railroad at North Prairie. A few months afterward he secured regular employment as a telegraph operator. He was operator at Janesville, Wisconsin, for three years, and for two years at Darlington. In 1890 he came West and located at Easton, on the Northern Pacific, as operator. He moved to Roslyn that September and engaged as operator and bill clerk, from which he was promoted to his present position.

Mr. Morgan was married at Roslyn, August 21, 1900, to Emma W. Blunt, daughter of George and Ellen (Martin) Blunt. She was born in Maryland in 1877. Her father was a native of England and a coal miner. He is dead. Her mother was of Scotch parentage and still resides at Roslyn. Mr. Morgan has one brother and two sisters: Madge is wife of Thomas France; Ada M. and David E., the latter living in Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan have one child, Eleanor Louise, who was born June 5, 1901. Mr. Morgan was mayor of Roslyn for two terms, and his administration was most satisfactory. Three miles of sewers were put in, a road grader was purchased, and all the streets were graded, and other improvements were made during his terms. He is a staunch Republican. He is secretary of and a stockholder in the Imperial Mining Company and has other mining interests. He is the chairman of the Roslyn board of education, which position he has held for three years. He has been a member of the Knights of Pythias since 1888. He is a genial, pleasant gentleman, and has a host of friends.

ELIJAH BROOKS is the fire boss at the Cle-Elum mine No. 2, and was born in England, September 14, 1865, where he lived until he was fourteen years old. His father, Samuel Brooks, was a railroad man, and was killed in 1871 while crossing a bridge at Lye, near Storbridge, when the subject was then but five years old. Two years later young Brooks went to work in a brickyard. In 1873 he started to work in the coal mines, and continued that employment until 1880, when with his mother, Elizabeth (Hill) Brooks, and the rest of the family, he came to the United States. The mother returned to England in 1894, and still lives there. Mr. Brooks secured employment in the mines at Knightsville, Indiana, where he remained until 1888. In that year he went to the Indian Territory coal mines at Cribbs for the Osage Coal Mining Company, and was in McAlester until 1891. At the time of the great explosion in No. 11 there were one hundred and five men killed and fatally injured. Mr. Brooks was one of the few who escaped by the exercise of coolness and presence of mind. He and the others who escaped made their way to safety through the old workings of the mine, after being imprisoned four and one-half hours after the explosion. Mr. Brooks then went to Coalgate, where he worked until 1898, when he moved to Vancouver Island, B. C., and worked in the mines there until March, 1901. Then he moved to Cle-Elum and worked for a time in the mines, until he took up the duties of fire boss. It is his duty to enter the mines and inspect them every morning before the workmen come, to see there are no gases or other threatening indications.

Mr. Brooks was married in 1887, at Knightsville, Indiana, to Mary A. Davison, who was born in England, July 16, 1869. She was the daughter of Martin and Elizabeth (Proud) Davison. Her father, an English miner, came to the United States in 1881 and died in 1898 on Vancouver Island. Her mother is still living at Cle-Elum, Washington. Mrs. Brooks has two brothers and two sisters, named, respectively, Frank, Elizabeth A., Martin and Isabella. Mr. Brooks has two brothers, Samuel and Matthew, both of whom are miners. The former lives in Indiana and the latter in Indian Territory. Mr. and Mrs. Brooks have three children: Elijah, born July 31, 1888; Martin, born August 8, 1891, and Frank, born October 12, 1893. Mr. Brooks is a member of the Knights of Pythias, Red Men and Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is a Republican and has been twice nominated for membership in the city council. He owns his own home and lot at Cle-Elum. The house is a neat one and well furnished. Mrs. Brooks attends the Presbyterian church.

GEORGE SLOAN, M. D., physician and surgeon at Roslyn, Washington, is of Scotch ancestry. He is the son of Alexander and Sarah (Percy) Sloan, both natives of Scotland. The elder Sloan was a mine owner and manager in Allegany county, Maryland. He traces his ancestry back to the sixteenth century. Dr. Sloan was born at Pompey Smash, Allegany county, Maryland, June 20, 1856. He worked in his father's coal office and attended the common schools in his native state. He finished the high school in 1875 and went to Bellevue Hospital and Medical College, New York City, where he was graduated in medicine in 1878, at the age of about twenty-one years. He first practiced his profession at Moingonia, Iowa, and then was appointed surgeon for the coal company at the Fort Dodge mines. After four years in that position he took a vacation of one year and settled at Des Moines, Iowa. In November, 1888, he moved to Roslyn, where he became surgeon for the employees of the Northern Pacific Coal Company, now a part of the mining department of the Northwestern Improvement Company, with offices and interests at other points of the state and elsewhere. His business is to look after the employees of the company and their families, supplying all medical and surgical attention they require.

Dr. Sloan superseded Dr. W. H. Harris as mine physician, and has filled the position ever since. Dr. J. H. Lyon was for a time associated with him, and later Dr. L. L. Porter and Dr. A. C. Simonton also became associated in the work.

Dr. Sloan was married in 1890, in Maryland, to Elizabeth A. Bell, who was born in Lonaconing, that state, in 1857. Her father, John Bell, was a native of Scotland, a mining engineer, and died in 1877 at the age of forty-seven years. Her mother, Margaret (Hutchinson) Bell, was a native of Nova Scotia. Dr. Sloan had five brothers and five sisters, as follows: Agnes Whelan, Duncan J., Margaret R., Sarah M., and Jean McF. Sloan, living in North Baltimore, Ohio; Matthew H., of Cumberland; Alexander D., of North Yakima, Washington; Edwin R., residing in Jackson, Mississippi; Judge D. W. Sloan, of Cumberland, now deceased, and Mrs. Helen P. Schaidt, who has also passed away.

JAMES LANE came to the United States from England when twenty-two years of age, believing that better opportunities were offered here than in his native country to men of ambition and energy whose success in life must depend upon their individual efforts and resources. Prior to coming to this country he received his education in English schools, and after the completion of his studies spent a number of years in coal mining. After reaching the United States, he continued in the same occupation, settling in Braidwood, Illinois, July, 1879, whence he removed to Streator, Illinois, remaining there some ten years, or until his settlement in Roslyn, in 1880. Here he at once commenced to work in the mines, and continued in this employment until August 22, 1898, when he was appointed postmaster by President McKinley. In the past five years the office has advanced from fourth class to the presidential grade, the annual receipts now amounting to $3,900, and the money order receipts being greater than those of any town in the state having a like population. Mr. Lane was born in Clearwell, Dean Forest, Gloucestershire, England, during November, 1857. He is the son of Emanuel and Mary (Jones) Lane, his father being a native of England, where he died in 1839. The mother was of Welsh descent; she died in May, 1864. Emanuel Lane was a metal miner, and at the time of his death was a contractor in the mines at Dean Forest. James Lane has one brother, Thomas, a farmer living in Iowa.

Mr. Lane was married in Wigane, Lancashire, England, in June, 1876, to Miss Anna N. Clark, daughter of Henry and Mary (Cole) Clark, both natives of England, born, respectively, in 1835 and 1839. Mrs. Lane's father was a miner in his native country; crossed the water in 1870, and engaged in mining for a time in Pennsylvania; he is now a resident of Roslyn. His wife died August 22, 1900. Mrs. Lane has two brothers, William H., of Roslyn, and Charles Clark, of Seattle. She also has two sisters, Agnes Ellis, a resident of Illinois, and Mary A. Doer, living in Roslyn. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Lane are: James Lane, Junior, Florence Morrison and Cora McCulloch, all living in Roslyn. Mr. Lane is prominent in the I. O. O. F. society, having occupied all the chairs and being past grand of the order. He has been an active Republican ever since coming to this country; was nominee for county assessor in Kittitas county in 1896, but was defeated with his party, the entire ticket failing of election. Mr. Lane, however, came out second on the ticket. He has served here four years as a county central committeeman, and was last year a delegate to the Republican state convention; he was the first councilman at large in Roslyn and served four successive terms in this capacity. The city hall and city jail were built while he was a member of the council. Mr. Lane is regarded as one of the substantial and most successful citizens of Roslyn, and is an influential member of his political party. He enjoys the confidence and respect of all who know him.

SIMON R. JUSTHAM, a painter and paper-hanger of Roslyn and deputy game warden of Kittitas county, Washington, is a native of Northumberland county, England, born February 5, 1868. He is the son of Samuel R. and Laura (Tipitt) Justham, both natives of England, his father, a butcher, born in Devonshire, in 1834, now living in Pennsylvania, to which state he came from England in 1889. Simon R. Justham was educated in the schools of England and spent some time afterwards in the mines, coming to the United States at the age of eighteen, on account of an extensive strike among the miners of his locality. He was first employed in a tannery in Reynoldsville, Pennsylvania, going at the end of six months to Ishpeming, Michigan, where he was employed a like period in the iron mines. Leaving this locality, he went to the Sound country, and worked eighteen months in the Black Diamond mines, coming at the end of this time, March, 1899, to Roslyn, where he has since made his home. After one year spent in the mines, he entered the painting establishment of J. H. Calhoun, remaining there three years, during which time he learned the trade. He then went into business for himself, and has been successful in building up an extensive trade; he has been longer in the business than any one now living in the town, and practically controls the local trade. Mr. Justham has two children, Frederick and Laura, now attending the Roslyn public schools. He has brothers and sisters living in the eastern states, as follows: Thomas, James, William, Grace, Charlotte, Susan and Malora. Mr. Justham holds membership in the Knights of Pythias fraternity and in the Painters' Union of Seattle. He is an active worker in the Democratic party and a leader in the local party organization as well as a member of the county central committee. In 1902, he was a candidate for county auditor, being defeated, with his party, by only seven votes. He is at present a bailiff and has also served as constable. An enthusiastic sportsman, he takes a deep interest in the work of preserving the game. He is interested in the "Huckleberry" and other quartz mines of this section, and is a successful business man, popular, and highly esteemed as one of the substantial citizens of Roslyn.

ARCHIBALD S. PATRICK has been a resident of Kittitas county, Washington, almost continuously since 1886, and the greater part of the time a citizen of Roslyn. In the year named, Mr. Patrick came here from Montana, where for three years he had been in the service of the Northern Pacific Coal Company, and during this period located some of the best coal veins in that state. In 1886, he was sent to Kittitas county by the same company, now known as the Northwestern Improvement Company, and located for them the Roslyn mines, the finest coal fields in the great Northwest. Until 1890, he remained with the company as a mining engineer, going at this time to British Columbia, where he made an unsuccessful effort to locate coal fields for another company. He returned later to Kittitas county, and until 1898 was variously employed, at first spending some time prospecting in his own interests, and afterwards entering the service of the Roslyn water-works as a plumber, becoming at the same time general plumber for the city and looking after the city contracts. In 1898, Mr. Patrick and A.D. Hopper, of Spokane, organized the Roslyn Coal Company, now operating coal mines two miles northwest of the city. Mr. Patrick is an expert coal prospector and mining engineer, and has located and now owns extensive areas of coal lands in the Roslyn district, which are yearly becoming more valuable. Mr. Patrick was born in Lannerickshire, Scotland, October 28, 1862. He is the son of James and Jane (Stewart) Patrick, both natives of Scotland, and both born in 1827. His father came to Pennsylvania in 1868 and engaged in the mercantile business in the mining district about Pittsburg, also, at a later period, engaged in mining; he died in 1901. The subject of this biography came to the United States with his mother in 1869, his father having preceded them. He spent his early manhood in Trumbull county, Ohio, and here received his education in the common schools. He learned the trade of a machinist, and until 1881 spent his time at that trade and in mining in Ohio. In 1881, he began life on his own account, removing to Boone county, Iowa, and engaging in mining and the real estate business. His next move, in 1883, was to Montana, where he became associated with the Northern Pacific Coal Company, locating three years later in Kittitas county, as has been previously stated.

Mr. Patrick was married January 1, 1891, to Euphemia Simpson, who was born in Scotland in 1870, came to this country in 1871, and was educated in Ohio, where the marriage took place. She is the daughter of Henry and Jennie (Burrell) Simpson, both natives of Scotland; her father is a millwright. Both father and mother still live in Ohio. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Patrick are: Jennie Burrell, Mary Stewart, Nellie Simpson, James and Harvey Simpson Stewart. Mr. Patrick is a prominent member of both the Knights of Pythias and Masonic fraternities; is past master of the latter order in Roslyn. The family belongs to the Presbyterian church. Mr. Patrick is an enthusiastic Republican, attends local and state conventions, and has served as chairman of the local precinct committee. He takes considerable interest in school matters and was for several years a member of the school board, his term expiring in 1902. He is extensively interested both in Roslyn and in valley real estate, has one of the finest residences in Roslyn and takes special interest in the development of town and country. He is public spirited and progressive, holds the respect and confidence of all, and is known as one of the influential and substantial residents of central Washington.

ALLEN C. SIMONTON, M. D., the subject of this article, was born in Wabash county, Indiana, in 1841. His father, Jacob Simonton, was born in Ohio in 1810. He followed merchandizing for years and died in Iowa in 1894 at the ripe old age of eighty-four. His mother, who was Leah Calhoun in maiden life, was a native of Pennsylvania, born in 1812, and died in 1851. Dr. Simonton grew to young manhood in the land of tall sycamores and acquired his education in the Wabash high school. It was at the time when the seething, boiling caldron of national politics was bubbling over with hate and murderous thought, and the young man had imbibed the spirit of the time. He was indoctrinated with pronounced anti-slavery views, and, having the courage of his convictions, it is not surprising that he promptly responded to the first call "to arms" of his government. He enlisted in the War of the Rebellion, April 19, 1861, and served until 1864, holding a commission as a lieutenant. At the expiration of his army service, he at once began the study of medicine, attending a course of lectures. He entered the Chicago Medical College, from which he was graduated in 1863, and for a time followed the practice of his profession amid the scenes of his boyhood in Wabash county, Indiana. He then migrated to Iowa, where he lived and practiced medicine for twenty-one years with excellent success. In 1890, the tidal wave westward loosed him from his old moorings and landed him on the Pacific Coast in the state of orange blossoms and gold. He resided in California seven years, following his profession; then removed to Seattle, where he practiced for two years. He established a permanent home in Seattle, where his family still resides. Four years ago he came to Roslyn, formed a partnership with Drs. Sloan and Porter, and has remained here since. The firm is known as the "company physicians," for the reason that they hold almost the exclusive practice among the mining men and their families. The doctor has brothers and sisters living, as follows: Robert, Huntington, Indiana; Martha Butler, Iowa; Jennie Ward, Iowa; Olive Moore, Missouri, and Alice Townsend, Texas.

He was married in Iowa in 1871 to Miss Lillian Brandt, a native of Huntington, Ind., born February 4, 1852, and educated in the city of her birth, being a graduate of the high school. Her father, Martin B. Brandt, was of German descent, born in Pennsylvania in 1808. He was a business man of ability, following merchandizing for years, and was a county official for sixteen years. He died in 1892. The mother, Nancy (Free) Brandt, was of German extraction, and died in Indiana at the age of fifty-two. Dr. and Mrs. Simonton's children are: Edith, born in Iowa, May 24, 1872, and Helen, also born in Iowa, May 29, 1882.

Fraternally, the doctor is affiliated with the Masonic, A. O. U. W. and the G. A. R. orders. Politically, he is an active Republican, and has rendered valuable assistance in the defense of the principles of his party in many a heated campaign, being an exceptionally good public speaker. In former years he taught chemistry and physiology in eastern schools, and later held the chair of surgery in the Iowa College of Physicians, at Des Moines, Iowa. In the practice of his profession the doctor ranks high, but it is as a surgeon that he takes pre-eminence, and his counsel and advice are often called for in the consultation chamber of the professional brotherhood, and his conclusions are usually deferred to.

DR. ROSCOE N. JACKSON, of Spokane, is president of the Fortune Mining and Smelting Company, whose properties are located in Kittitas and Chelan counties, Washington. The valuable mines owned by this company are fully described in the portion of this volume devoted to the resources of Kittitas county.

Dr. Jackson is a native of Boonville, New York, born in 1856. His ancestors were Scotch-Irish and came to this country before the Revolutionary war; "Old Hickory" was one of the family. The doctor obtained his medical education in New York City, graduating in 1880. For twenty years, he had an extensive practice in New York and Minnesota, but for the last three years has devoted his time to the Fortune and to other mining interests, including the Gilt Edge mine, of which he is manager. Dr. Jackson is a man of method and energy, who believes in seeing things go, and is doing all in his power for the company he represents.

M. A. DEHUFF, a resident of Spokane, is secretary of the Fortune Mining and Smelting Company, whose properties are destined to add very materially to the wealth of Kittitas and Chelan counties, Washington, where they are located. A description of the mines belonging to this company will be found elsewhere in this volume.

Mr. Dehuff was born in Ottawa county, Ohio, in 1854. He is of German parentage and received his education in the German Wallace College, a suburb of Cleveland, Ohio. In 1895, he came to Spokane, and was for several years principal of the Spokane School of Assaying, connected with the Spokane Business College. Graduates from this school are now in all the principal mining camps of the Northwest. Mr. Dehuff's connection with this institution afforded him unexcelled opportunities to acquaint himself with the mining region of the Northwest, and, as a natural consequence, his mining interests have compelled him to abandon school work. For a number of years his entire time has been devoted to the business of mining, and he is now actively and successfully connected with several large companies.

GEORGE W. DAINES, of Spokane, is treasurer and general manager of the Fortune Mining and Smelting Company, which has large mining interests in Kittitas and Chelan counties, Washington; these are described in another portion of this volume.

Mr. Daines is a native of Indiana, born in 1846. His early education was received in the district schools of Indiana and Illinois. In later years he was for a time connected in a business way with the Standard Oil Company; afterwards building and operating large hominy mills at Danville, Illinois. During his school days he made a special study of the science of geology, and, being of an investigating turn of mind, he very naturally became interested in the mining business. In December, 1899, he connected himself with the Fortune Company, becoming one of the trustees. Since January 4, 1900, he has served as treasurer and general manager of this company. Besides his connection with the Fortune Company, he is actively associated with the Sure Thing and the Daines Companies.

CLARENCE E. CURTIS, D. D. S. Well up in the list of professional names accredited to the city of Roslyn is found that of Dr. Curtis, the young and popular dentist. While not an old resident of the city nor an old practitioner who has grown gray in his profession, he has, by his skill, tact and unflinching courtesy and gentlemanly bearing, won the confidence and esteem of the citizens of that community during his residence there; which regard, it is reasonable to predict, will continue to increase with the years.

Dr. Curtis was born September 16, 1875, in Menomonie, Wisconsin, and was there educated in the rudimentary branches, assisting a portion of the time in the mercantile establishment owned by his father. But not taking kindly to merchandizing, he determined to study dentistry and, with that decision well fixed in his mind, attended the Ann Arbor, Michigan, University, from which institution he was graduated with credit and, losing no time, he at once began the practice of the profession. He selected West Superior, Wisconsin, as the field of his labors; there opened an office and began work. He received much encouragement and his business prospered; but the Western fever was in his veins and he eventually, at the end of a year, 1902, determined to locate on the Pacific coast, and selected Roslyn as the point of venture, where he still resides.

WALTER STEELE is a mining man of Roslyn, Washington. Although he was born in Yorkshire, England, June 15, 1876, he has lived in the United States since he was three years old. He was educated in Illinois, where he did his first labor in the bottle works. In 1890 he came to Washington and went to work for the Northern Pacific Coal Company, trapping and switch throwing. At the time of the dreadful explosion in 1892, in which his father and uncle were among the victims, he luckily happened to be outside and beyond danger. He worked in the yards two months following the accident and then began driving a mule in the mine. After a year at that work, he met with an accident and was placed on outside labor. In September, 1893, he went to work on the tippie. For the last two years he has been weighmaster.

His father, Winyard Steele, was born in England, April 17, 1850. His mother was Agnes (Hale) Steele. Both are dead. Their other children were Emily Mansel, of Castle Rock, Washington, born in England in 1878; Sarah Steele, born in Illinois September 17, 1883; Winyard, born in Illinois in 1884, and Albert, born in Illinois, February 28, 1886, all of Roslyn; Alice, of Castle Rock, born in Illinois April 16, 1897; Agnes, born in Illinois, October, 1889; Washington, born in Roslyn, September 11, 1891, and Roslyn, deceased. George and Claude Gaze are subject's half-brothers.

Mr. Steele was married at Pineridge, Washington, December 28, 1898, to Hattie Stevens, then nineteen years old, a native of Illinois. Her parents were John and Ruth (Deems) Stevens, born respectively in 1830 and 1838, both natives of Ohio, now residing near Ellensburg. Her brothers, Thomas, Edgar and Willard, are dead. Her half-sister and half-brothers are William Stevens, Charles Stevens, George Stevens and Alice Davidson. Mr. and Mrs. Steele have two children: Walter A., born December 18, 1899, and John W., born January 8, 1903. Mr. Steele is a member of the Foresters of America and of the Knights of Pythias. He is an active Republican and belongs to the Baptist church. He is a hard-working and well-liked man.

JOSEPH F. MENZIES is a mechanical engineer of Roslyn, Washington, born in Portland, Oregon, September 10, 1870. His father, James Menzies, was a Scottish navigator, and came to Portland in the fifties; he died in 1885. The mother, Lucy (Taylor) Menzies, was born in New York in 1830, and is still living in Portland. Her son, Joseph F., was educated in Portland and when seventeen years old, began work for the Albina Light and Water Company. Four years later, he was employed by the Portland General Electric Company, and when twenty-five years old was appointed receiver for the La Grande Electric Light and Power Company in La Grande, Oregon. He held that position three years, and was then appointed general erecting engineer in Oregon of the General Electric Company of Schenectady, New York. He remained with that firm for three years and put in one year with the Cornucopia mines in Eastern Oregon. Since his arrival in Roslyn, in 1901, he has been master mechanic for the Northwestern Improvement Company. His brother, John W., lives in Lebanon, Oregon; his sister, Mrs. Harriet Davis, resides in Alaska.

Mr. Menzies was married in Portland, April 27, 1893, to Miss May Billings, born in the Evergreen state, January 1, 1870. Her father, Fred Billings, is a native of England, and has been sheriff of Thurston county, Washington, many years. His home is in Olympia. Her mother was Mary (Candle) Billings, a native of Ohio, and is deceased. Her brothers, William, Grant, Fred and Jake, reside in Olympia. Mr. and Mrs. Menzies have three children: Norman W., born in La Grande, January 28, 1898; Helen, born in La Grande, August 10, 1900, and Roderick, born in Roslyn, October 22, 1902. Mr. Menzies is a member of the Knights of Pythias. He is a Republican, and during his residence in La Grande served two years as member of the city council. He and his wife attend the Methodist church. He is a thoroughly capable and experienced engineer and has acquired considerable property in Seattle and Portland.

IRA A. KAUTZ is a photographer of Roslyn, Washington, and was born in Jefferson county, Pennsylvania, January 21, 1861. He is of German-Scotch ancestry. His parents, Peter and Louisa (Preston) Kautz, were natives of Pennsylvania. Mr. Kautz was educated in the common schools and Corsica academy of his native state, and when nineteen years old became a teacher. He followed that profession four years in his native state and three years in Minnesota. During vacation periods, he studied photography, serving an apprenticeship in a gallery. In 1888 he established a studio in Winnebago, Minnesota, and remained there a year. In the fall of 1889 he went to Tacoma, Washington, and after six months' work in that city moved to Seattle. He was in business in the latter city until February, 1886. He then spent three years in travel, revisiting his Pennsylvania home. He returned to Seattle, went from there to Ellensburg, thence moved to Roslyn and established his present business.

He was married in Tacoma, June 8, 1899, to Mrs. Eva D. Everman, daughter of Dr. George B. and Frances (Poppleton) Dana. His wife was born in Iowa in 1860, was there educated, and after graduating from the normal school became a teacher for several years. By her first marriage, Mrs. Kautz had two children: Claud Everman, of Seattle, and Frank D., of Roslyn. Mr. and Mrs. Kautz have one child, Homer D. Kautz, born April 9, 1900. The husband is an Odd Fellow and Woodman of the World, and has been clerk if the W. O. W. camp two years. He is a Republican, politically, and was elected to the council to fill a vacancy. He owns stock in several mines, has a growing business and is considered one of the best photographers in the state.

JOHN H. O'NEIL is engaged in the diamond drill business in Roslyn, Washington. He was born in Ottawa, Illinois, August 11, 1865, and is the son of Peter and Rose (Reihel) O'Neil, both natives of Ireland. His father is dead and the mother still resides in Ottawa. Mr. O'Neil has two half-sisters: Lizzie Bories, who was educated at a convent and is teaching in Ottawa, and Mary Cooper, a resident of Jackson, Michigan. Mr. O'Neil was educated in the common schools of his native state, and when a boy learned the trade of blacksmith, which he followed until he was twenty-one years old. He then took up diamond drilling, and opened a large field of coal at Tonica, Illinois. He moved to Vancouver Island, British Columbia, in 1888, where he prospected one year. In 1889, he moved to Roslyn, and has since made that place his headquarters. In 1902 he made a trip to South Africa, twelve months being consumed on the journey. He is at present engaged in drilling for the Northwestern Improvement Company.

Mr. O'Neil was married in Roslyn, September, 1891, to Miss Agnes Wilmot, who was born in Illinois in 1873. Her father, James Wilmot, was born in Louisiana, where he lost his parents when a young boy. They were killed by the Indians. An uncle took him to England, where he lived with his grandparents. He was there educated, and remained with them until arriving at manhood. He now resides in Seattle. Mrs. O'Neil's mother, Eliza (Brown) Wilmot, was born in England. Mrs. O'Neil has one brother and three sisters: Arthur and Grace, of Seattle; Mrs. Anna Lindth, of Seattle, and Mrs. Clara Bignay, of Arizona. Mr. and Mrs. O'Neil have four children: Zeta, born July 26, 1892; John, born in 1896; Charles, born in 1897, and Helen, born in 1900. The father is a Catholic and his wife is an Episcopalian. He belongs to the A. O. U. W., and is a Roosevelt supporter. Mr. O'Neil is a well-posted and capable mining man, an expert in his peculiar calling. The family home is at Seattle.

ROBERT MONTAGUE is engaged in farming, one mile west of Roslyn, Washington. He was born August 16, 1840, in England, being the son of John and Jane (Quay) Montague, both now dead. His father was of English and his mother of Scotch parentage. Their other children were: James, John and Margaret, who are dead; Hugh, living in Australia, and Mrs. Mary J. Kane of Roslyn. Robert was educated in the English schools, and when nineteen began work as a machinist. When twenty-one, he took up coal mining and worked in the coal mines of his native land until 1888, when he came to the United States and settled in Roslyn, Washington. He worked in the Roslyn mines five years, and then took up the farm upon which he has since made his home. He was married in England, October 21, 1873, to Miss Mary Ann Armstrong, who was born in Durham county, England, April 20, 1854. Her parents were James and Jane (Scott) Armstrong, and her father is dead. Her brothers and sisters are: Jane Hall and Isabella Smith, of Australia; Rachel Lonsdale, Jessie and William Armstrong, all of England. Mr. and Mrs. Montague have two children. John was born in England December 14, 1874, and lives in Roslyn. Mary J. Glynn, born March 25, 1876, lives near Roslyn. The father is a Red Man and a member of the Church of England. He is a supporter of President Roosevelt. He owns a productive farm of one hundred and forty-five acres, including some coal lands, and has about forty-five head of cattle. He is of high standing in the community as a man of good judgment and probity.

JERRY GLYNN is a native of Ohio, born March 24, 1868, and lives on a farm one mile west of Roslyn, Washington. His parents, Pat and Hanora (Crow) Glynn, were born in Ireland. Both are dead, the mother passing away when Jerry was but three years old. He was educated in the common schools of Ohio, and when a boy started to work in the coal mines. When he was nineteen years old, he came to Roslyn and worked some twelve years in the mines; then went to California for a year. On his return he located on his present farm. Mr. Glynn has four brothers: Dan and John, of Tennessee; Denny, of Ohio, and Pat, of Washington. He was married in Roslyn, June 3, 1902, to Mrs. Mary J. Justham, daughter of Robert and Mary (Armstrong) Montague. Mrs. Glynn was born March 25, 1876. She had two children by her first marriage: Fred, born February 21, 1892, and Laura, born October 18, 1894, both living with their mother. Her only brother, John Montague, lives in Roslyn. Mr. Glynn is a Catholic, and his wife belongs to the Episcopal church. He is a Democrat, politically. In addition to his farm, he has property in Tacoma and a timber claim in Kittitas county. He is a hard-working, industrious man, respected by his fellow citizens.

EDWIN L. SIMMONS, foreman of mine number five, in Roslyn, Washington, was born in Akron, Ohio, April 15, 1863. His father, Adam L. Simmons, is a native of Pennsylvania, and a practicing physician for forty-three years. His mother, Margaret (Scheidler) Simmons, is deceased. His brothers and sisters are: James B., Erwin, Louise Wilson, Mary Weaver, Ellen Mathews and Effa B., all natives and residents of Ohio. After studying in the common schools and one year in the normal school of his native state, Mr. Simmons, when nineteen years old, went to Leadville, Colorado, where he found employment in the quartz mines. He later worked in the mines of Utah and Wyoming, and in 1888 came to Roslyn. After three months, he returned to Utah, where he remained until 1891; then came to Roslyn once more. He was employed in Roslyn one year and then spent eight months prospecting in Okanogan county. He then came back to the Roslyn mines and remained until April 15, 1896, at which time he returned to Park City, Utah, to develop a mine in which he was interested. In January, 1898, he again returned to Roslyn and has since engaged in his present work.

He was married in Grass Creek, Utah, in 1884, to Miss Flora Murchie, who was born in Scotland February 27, 1865, and there educated. She is the daughter of Daniel M. and Anna (Calderwood) Murchie, both Scotch, and now residents of Salt Lake. Her brother and sisters are: Thomas, Mary Jones and Lizzie, all living in Utah. Mr. and Mrs. Simmons have the following children: Anna, born May 6, 1886; Edwin A., May 31, 1890; Flora, August 23, 1892; Effie B., November 11, 1896, and Pearl, April 3, 1899. Mr. Simmons is a Mason of the blue lodge, and has been through all the chairs in the Odd Fellows order. He is an active Republican, has been fairly successful in his business undertakings and owns a nice home in Roslyn. He is a thorough mining man and is filling his present position successfully.

WILLIAM REES is a prosperous farmer of Roslyn, Washington. He was born in Wales, October 8, 1859, and he was educated in his native land, his instructor being his maternal grandfather. When fifteen years old, he engaged in mining and followed that until 1881, when he came to America. He engaged in mining, in turn, at Raton, New Mexico, in Indian Territory, Illinois and Texas, and in 1883 moved to Renton, Washington. From there, he went to the mines at Black Diamond, and in 1887 established himself in Roslyn. In 1893 he opened a paint and oil store, but continued at mining, adding to his stock from time to time, until 1899, when he purchased a complete line of stoves and hardware and gave his entire attention to his mercantile business. Mr. Rees is the son of John Rees, a native of England, born in 1827, now deceased, and of Elizabeth (Bowen) Rees, who was born in England in 1830, and is also now dead. His brothers and sisters are: Katherine, who is married and living in England; Mary (Rees) Evans, of England, and David Rees and Jane Rees. Mr. Rees is a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He has gone through all the chairs, and was elected a representative to the Grand Lodge in 1807. He is very popular, as is evidenced by the fact that in 1883 he was elected to the council on the citizens' ticket and refused renomination. For five consecutive terms, he has been appointed water commissioner, a position he now fills most acceptably. He has been very successful in his business undertakings. One of his two stores is rented, the other well stocked. He owns twenty-seven lots in Seattle, and is a stockholder in the Pacific Paint and Oil Company of Tacoma, and in the Dutch Miller and the Yakima Canning Companies. He is also the owner of two lots in Ellensburg, and was one of the organizers of the Unity Hall Association, in which he is a heavy stockholder, and for fifteen years has been manager of the local opera house. In addition to these property interests he owns fourteen residences which are rented. As will be seen, Mr. Rees' property holdings are extensive, and to his credit it may be said that all has been accumulated largely through his energy and business ability.

EDWARD K. HERON is in the bakery, confectionery and ice cream business at Roslyn, Washington. He was born in Allegany county, Maryland, July 14, 1878. His father, James Heron, was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, in 1842, and has been in Kittitas county since 1886. He was for many years weigh-master at the coal mines, and is now deputy county assessor. Mr. Heron's mother, Mary C. (Michal) Heron, was born in Maryland of German parentage, November 15, 1852. She was the mother of the following children: John, Charles, George and the subject of this biography, all living in Roslyn. Edward K. Heron was educated in Kittitas county, and worked two years in the company store before taking a business course in college, which he completed in 1895. He then started for Butte, Montana, but met with an accident en route, by which he lost his right arm and left leg; they were crushed by a train of cars under which he fell. After a season in the hospital and some time spent at home, where he was tenderly cared for, he went East and secured artificial limbs. Returning to Roslyn, he engaged for a time in the printing business; then went to Alaska for a period, eventually returning to Roslyn, and starting his present business in which he has been very successful. A feature of his place of business is an ice cream factory with a capacity of eighty gallons per day.

Mr. Heron was married in Tacoma July 8, 1899, to Miss Lavina Harrison, daughter of George and Elizabeth (Buxtom) Harrison. Her father was born in England May 1, 1850, and was drowned in Cle-Elum lake August 11, 1895. Her mother was born in England, July 1, 1851, and lives in Seattle. Her brothers and sisters are Florence (Harrison) Brown, of Tacoma; Hannah (Harrison) Smith, Jennie (Harrison) Goss, George and May, all residents of Seattle. Mr. and Mrs. Heron have one child, Clifford M., who was born in Roslyn September 22, 1900. Mr. Heron is a supporter of President Roosevelt, although a Democrat. He was reared a Methodist, and Mrs. Heron belongs to the Presbyterian church. Mr. Heron has established a fine business, which is rapidly growing.

ASHER ALLEN, engaged in the dairy business in Roslyn, Washington, was born in Yorkshire, England, August 18, 1847. His father, Thomas R. Allen, was born in England in 1820, and is now residing in Decatur county, Iowa. The mother, Betty (Hollows) Allen, was born in England about 1823, and is now dead. The other children include: Joseph Allen, who was killed during the Civil war; Hannah (Allen) Green, John R. Allen and Mrs. Mary (Allen) Taylor, all now residents in Iowa. Mr. Allen is self-educated, and has derived much of his knowledge from the perusal of newspapers and scientific publications. Though the benefits of higher education have been denied him, to his credit it may be said that he is able to converse intelligently upon almost any leading topic. At the early age of nine, he began work as a coal-miner in Illinois and worked in mines until he was thirty-two years old. By this time he had learned engineering and took charge of an engine in St. Clair county, Illinois. He followed that vocation until he came to Roslyn in June, 1889. After spending a year in the mines he went to Salt Lake and was employed as conductor and motorman on an electric road for four years. His last move was back to Roslyn, where he worked in the mines until March, 1899, then establishing himself in his present business.

On September 17, 1881, Mr. Allen married Miss Elizabeth Kinghorn, who was born in St. Louis, Missouri, October 22, 1857. Her father, William Kinghorn, was born in Scotland, December 8, 1829, and died in 1903, at Roslyn. The mother, Margaret (Campbell) Kinghorn, was born in Scotland, November 22, 1833. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Allen are George, James, John and Isabell (Kinghorn) Grieve, and two sisters and three brothers who are dead. Mr.

and Mrs. Allen have two daughters, Mrs. Sarah J. (Allen) Fram, born in Illinois, October 15, 1883, and Mabel, born August 30, 1900. They also have an adopted son, William Kinghorn Allen, whom they have raised since infancy. Mr. Allen is a member of the Odd Fellows, and on all national issues is a thorough Democrat. In religion, Mrs. Allen is affiliated with the church of the Latter Day Saints. They have a fine home, have accumulated property which safely assures a livelihood to the family, and take a well-directed interest in social and business affairs of a public nature, which makes them valuable to the community in which they reside.

GEORGE FORSYTH, foreman at the Roslyn coal mine, is an Englishman, born in the old country, September 21, 1851. His father, George Forsyth, also native of England, was born in 1818, and is living in the land of his nativity. He is a farmer. The mother, Ellen (Thompson) Forsyth, was born in England in 1828, and is now deceased. Mr. Forsyth had three sisters and one brother, all now deceased. They were Job Forsyth, Mrs. Sarah (Forsyth) Gillia, Mrs. Mary (Forsyth) Atkinson, and Mrs. Ellen (Forsyth) Watson. When a lad of twelve, George left school and began work on his father's farm. This occupation he followed for two years. The following seven years he was employed in making fire-brick, and for the next ten years worked in a coal mine. After coming to the United States, he followed mining in Illinois for eight years, and in 1889 came to Roslyn, there for a time to act as superintendent of mine No. 3. He was one of the first to enter the mine after the great accident to help take out the forty-five dead.

Mr. Forsyth was married at New Castle, England, February 7, 1871, to Katherine Shipley, who was born in England, September 25, 1851. Her father, Edward Shipley, was born in England about 1823, and died in 1901. The mother, Mary (Mounsey) Shipley, was born in England about 1823, and now lives there. Mrs. Forsyth has two brothers, Edward and Robert, who are living in England. William, the other, is deceased. Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth have had two children, Mrs. Mary S. (Forsyth) Charlton, the one living, was born in England, December 21, 1871, and now resides there. Edward, the other, died in infancy. Fraternally, Mr. Forsyth is associated with the Masons and the Odd Fellows, and in politics, is a Republican. His wife is a member of the Episcopal church. He is energetic, and as follows when energy is well directed, is successful. Besides his interests in Roslyn, he owns three lots in Seattle, and has property interests in San Francisco.

WILLIAM MILBY was born in England, February 22, 1845, and is now a mining man of Roslyn, Washington. His father, James Milby, was born in England near the year 1824. He was killed by a mine explosion in England in 1848. The mother, Jane (Woodward) Milby, was born in England about 1825, and is now dead. There were but two children in the family, John and William, the former of whom is deceased. William, our subject left school when he was ten years old and for the subsequent ten years worked in an iron mine. He then came to Calumet, Michigan, and engaged in coal mining for four years, later working in the coal mines of Pennsylvania and Maryland for four years. He worked in Illinois a few years, and later spent eighteen months in lead mining in Missouri. He then went to England and mined for three years. Thence he returned to Ohio, and again went to England, from there to go to France, where he stayed for four years. Following this, he was employed for a year as a mining expert in Spain by an English company. When the year was up he rested for a year, and then came to the United States, remaining a short time in Illinois and in Iowa, thence coming to Roslyn. He mined here until 1900, and since has been engaged in prospecting, and has located claims on Swauk creek, which he intends to develop extensively.

Mr. Milby was married in England, October 4, 1871, to Miss Dinah Leece, who was born in England, February 5, 1850. Her father, John Leece, and her mother, Deborah (Head) Leece, are dead. Her brother and sisters are: Anthony, Mary, Anna, Jane and Hannah. Mr. and Mrs. Milby have six children. They are: Marion J. (Milby) Bowen, born July 31, 1872; William G., born October 3, 1874; Hannah D. (Milby) Booth, born July 3, 1877; Mary Ann (Milby) McDonald, born February 11, 1881; Samuel Milby, born July 24, 1882; and Fanny (Milby) Adams, born March 24, 1884. Mr. Milby is a member of the Federation of Labor and of the Improved Order of Red Men. He is a Democrat, and has served three terms as justice of the peace at Roslyn. He and his wife are members of the Episcopal church. His property consists of an elegant residence, and five houses and lots in Roslyn. Besides these holdings he owns four lots in Seattle. Wherever known, he is well spoken of, and by industry and good business judgment has accumulated property interests of no inconsiderable value.

JOHN W. HOLMES, a miner and blacksmith, whose home is in Roslyn, Washington, was born in Hartford City, West Virginia, March 10, 1864. His father, Richard Holmes, was born in England November 26, 1826, and his mother, Donna (Singer) Holmes, was born in England

March 21, 1835. He was the sixth of a family of twelve children. The others and the dates of their birth follow: Mary A., July 24, 1856; Barbara E., January 5, 1858; Ralph, January 7, 1860, now dead; Susan J., January 24, 1861, deceased; Thomas S., June 20, 1862; Ella M., March 26, 1866; Donna M., April 21, 1859; Enoch H., February 2, 1871, dead; James R., January 7, 1872; Edward F., October 3, 1876, and Etta L., March 22, 1880. After receiving an education in the schools of Illinois Mr. Holmes, when thirteen years old, began work in the mines. This he followed seven years. Then he went to Missouri and ran pumps, fired and mined about five years. From there he moved to Roslyn and entered the employ of the company as a miner, in which work he has since been engaged.

He was married in Rich Hill, Missouri, August 15, 1888, to Miss Mary D. Strokes, born in Michigan, May 9, 1866, and who died October 14, 1899. Her father was John Strokes, native of Germany. The first wife's brother and sisters were: Anna, Fred, Lena and Bessie Strokes. By the first marriage there was one child, J. Richard Holmes, who was born in Rich Hill, Missouri, June 4, 1889. Mr. Holmes was married again at Tacoma, June 24, 1901, to Aimee D. Cole, by whom he had one child, Edris F. Holmes, born February 28, 1902, who died in infancy. Mr. Holmes is a Democrat, and in religion supports the orthodoxy of the Reorganized Church of Latter-Day Saints. He is industrious and frugal, and has accumulated property interests which include a nice five-room house and a lot in Roslyn.

He is an honest, industrious and successful business man, and commands the respect of all who meet him.

JAMES J. FALKNER, a mine engineer, whose home is at Roslyn, was born at Catlettsburg, Kentucky, May 21, 1873, at which place he received his early education. He afterwards took a course in engineering at Scranton and in the Hawkins school, New York, and when eighteen years old entered the machine shops as apprentice. This occupation he followed for two years, and then went back to school for a year. He has since followed the engineering profession in Colorado and Old Mexico. On October 13, 1896, he enlisted at Mare Island, California, in the United States navy, and served in the Asiatic squadron as water tender. He engaged in battles against the Filipinos and served with the land forces part of the time. He received an honorable discharge, October 13, 1899, with a standing of 4.95 as against a maximum possible standing of five. Then he came to Roslyn and entered the employ of the Northwestern Improvement Company as engineer, a position he has since retained. James Falkner, the father of James J., was born in Hamburg, Germany, in 1832, and, after coming to the United States, served during the Civil war in the navy. The mother was Georgia (Moore) Falkner, who was born in Virginia in 1838, and is now dead. Besides James J., the other children were: John, a lawyer; Samuel, a farmer; Henry, a physician; William, a stock raiser; Fred, who is in South Africa; Mrs. Lizzie Fullingham, wife of a merchant; a half-brother, Frank, now living in South America, and a half-sister, Mrs. Ella Armit, living in Kentucky. Mr. Falkner was married at Ellensburg, June 2, 1881, to Miss Clara Morgan, who was born in Germany, November 10, 1881. Her father, Frank Morgan, was born in Germany, October 1, 1852, and was a farmer. The mother, Anna (Hoffman) Morgan was born in Germany, July 11, 1856, and is dead. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Falkner are Frank, Anna, Emma and William Morgan, all residents of Kittitas county. Mr. Falkner is a member of the Odd Fellows and Woodmen of the World, and in politics stands for the Democratic platform. He is well educated and is said to be a master of his profession. Besides his property in Roslyn, he has valuable holdings in California.

JOHN ADAMS is a well known miner of Roslyn, Washington. He was born in Iowa, February 24, 1882, and is of Scottish parentage. His father, Peter Adams, was born in Scotland in 1853, and is now a resident of Roslyn. The mother, Agnes (Mather) Adams, is also a native of Scotland, and now residing with her husband at Roslyn. They are the parents of ten children, of whom John is the fourth. When but five years of age, our subject came to Roslyn with his parents. Up to the age of twelve he attended school in Kittitas county, and at that age began to work in the mines. This vocation he has followed since with no deviation to any other line of employment. He was married at Roslyn, July 29, 1903, to Miss Fanny Milby, who was born in England, March 24, 1884. She is the daughter of William and Dinah (Leece) Milby. Her father was born in England in 1845, and is now engaged in mining at Roslyn. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Adams are Marion J. (Milby) Bowen, William G. Milby, Hannah D. (Milby) Booth, Mary Ann (Milby) McDonald and Samuel Milby. Mr. Adams is a young man, of energy, and has formed habits of industry which are certain to meet with commensurate reward, and wring from Dame Fortune more than ordinary success.

JAMES Y. PATON, a well known resident of Roslyn, Washington, is a miner. He was born at Mary Hill, Glasgow, Scotland, August 19, 1864. His father, George T. Paton, was a native of Scotland, born in Lennoxshire, September 13, 1841, and came to the United States March 7, 1868. He was a lineal descendant of Captain John Paton, who was executed in Edinburgh, May 8, 1684, and of Adam

Duncan, the famous Scotch admiral of the eighteenth century. His mother was Margaret L. (Wilson) Paton, who was born near Glasgow, April 24, 1838. The brothers and sisters of Mr. Paton are: Marion, now Mrs. John Notman, wife of a deputy sheriff at Joliet, Illinois; Jean, now Mrs. Henry Moneypenny; Elizabeth W., now Mrs. G. F. Howkly, and George, an adopted brother, who was born in Illinois in 1864. Mr. Paton was educated in the common schools at Streator, Illinois, and further took a course in mining in the International Correspondence school of Scranton, Pennsylvania. He came to Kittitas county, October 21, 1891, and went to work in the mines. He was made fire boss after several years of faithful work. He was married April 21, 1887, in Streator, to Miss Ruth Fram, who was born in Clopperhowel, Scotland, April 15, 1865. The bride's father, John Fram, and her mother, Matilda (Dunlop) Fram, were natives of Scotland. Mr. and Mrs. Paton now have two sons, Walter Grant Paton, born March 16, 1888, in Streator, and James Earl Paton, born in Roslyn, March 16, 1893. Both husband and wife are members of the Presbyterian church. Mr. Paton is an Odd Fellow, and was for years secretary of the Roslyn lodge; he also holds membership in the Knights of Pythias. Mrs. Paton has membership in the Rebekahs, and is Mistress of Correspondence of the Rathbone Sisters. Mr. Paton, by frugality and hard work and the able assistance of his wife, has accumulated considerable property, including a nice home in Roslyn. During his residence there he has served as night marshal. He is unassuming and well spoken of by all his acquaintances.

JAMES ASH, fire boss at shaft No. 4 in the Roslyn coal mine, was born near Albert mines, New Brunswick, Canada, in 1863. His father and mother, Peter and Sarah (McCann) Ash, were natives of Scotland. His father was a mine owner and was president of the co-operative mines at Neelyville, Illinois. Mr. Ash has two brothers and two sisters, Patrick and John Ash, who are coal miners at Roslyn. Ellen, now Mrs. W. Halpin, is wife of a railroad man, and Rose A. is the wife of William Marshall, of Mystic, Iowa. Mr. Ash was educated at Neelyville, and remained there until 1883, when he moved to Centerville, Iowa, where he mined coal five years. Then he moved to Roslyn, and after two months as nurse in the company hospital, accepted employment in the mines. In 1892 he engaged in the saloon business, but two years later resumed mining. After two years he went to Cokedale and was employed by the Skagit Coal and Coke Company for twenty-one months. In April, 1898, he returned to work as a miner for the company at Roslyn. In August, 1900, he was appointed timber man, and the following November was promoted to his present position of fire boss.

Mr. Ash was married in Centerville, Iowa, June

4, 1885, to Miss Minnie C. Norris, who was born in Tuscarora, Pennsylvania, March, 1866. Her parents, Samuel and Marcia (Lord) Norris, were natives of England, but came to the United States in 1863. Mr. and Mrs. Ash have the following children: Simon H., born May 18, 1889; Mary C., born June 20, 1890; James E., born January 7, 1892; Annie M., born September 20, 1897, and Sarah E., born August 2, 1900. Annie was born in Cokedale and the others in Roslyn. Mr. Ash is one of the charter members of Roslyn Lodge, Foresters of America. He has served two terms as city councilman. He is enterprising and successful. He has taken a course in mine engineering in the Scranton, Pennsylvania, correspondence school, and has a diploma of graduation, dated December 17, 1901. His library is well stocked with works on mine engineering, written by standard authors. He has accumulated considerable property, including a fine home, and is well deserving of the success by which he is now favored.

JOHN GRAHAM, of Roslyn, holds the responsible position of fire boss in mine No. 2. He is a native of Cumberland county, England, born January 22, 1859, the son of John and Mary (Smallwood) Graham, both of England, where the elder Graham followed mining. John Graham, of whom we write, received a common school education in his native country, beginning his attendance in school at the age of twelve. Later, in 1883, coming to the United States, he entered the mines at Lucas, Iowa, remaining there for four years. He then came to Roslyn and accepted employment with the Northwestern Improvement Company. He has now been with this company for sixteen years, having held different positions in and about the mines, from night foreman up to his present station. His appointment to the latter dates from April 8, 1895. His service has invariably been satisfactory. During his tenure as fire boss, it has seldom been necessary to close any portion of the mine, and not an accident has occurred since his assuming the position. Robert Graham, brother of John, our subject, was lost in the memorable explosion of 1892. Mr. Graham was a member of the committee appointed to enter the mine after the explosion.

John Graham was married at Lucas, Iowa, April 25, 1885, to Miss Emily Howell, a native of Cumberland county, England, born January 27, 1861. She is the daughter of John C. Howell, native of London, a mine carpenter. Jane (Farrah) Howell, the mother, was also a native of Britain. The children of Mr. and Mrs. Graham are: Robert, born in Lucas, Iowa, January 26, 1886; Mary, born January 7, 1888; John C., born January 10, 1890; William, born April 22, 1892; and Beatrice E., born October 31, 1895. All save the first named, Robert, were born in Roslyn. Mr. Graham is a member of Welcome Lodge, No. 30, Knights of Pythias. Both he and his wife were reared under the influence of the Church of England, though at the present time they claim membership in no particular denomination. They believe in education, and have given their children the advantage of the best the grammar school affords. Mary, the eldest daughter, was graduated from the Roslyn schools; she is at present the organist in the Presbyterian Sunday school of her home town. The family is one of the best known and worthiest of any in its community.

EDWARD HOLLAND is a resident of Roslyn, Washington, where he is employed as engineer in the coal mines, shaft No. 4. He was born in Yorkshire, England, July 29, 1858. When he was three years old his parents, John and Anna (Sligh-ton) Holland, moved to the United States and located in St. Clair county, Illinois, where Edward attended school. When he was fourteen years old he began to learn engineering under his father at Huntsville, Missouri. He remained there eight years, then removed to Alma, Illinois, where he engaged in general engineering for eleven years. His next move was to Rich Hill, Missouri, and there, for seven years, he was employed by the Rich Hill Mining Company. In 1890, he moved to Roslyn, and there accepted a position as engineer, which he has now filled without an accident for thirteen years.

Mr. Holland was married in Alma, Illinois, September 9, 1882, to Miss Ella M. Holmes, who was born in Hartford, West Virginia, March 26, 1866. Her parents were Richard Holmes of England, and Donney M. (Singer) Holmes, of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Holland's brothers and sisters are: Mary, now Mrs. T. F. Richey; Barbara, now Mrs. F. Fitter, of Roslyn; Thomas S., of Snohomish county, Washington, a millman; John W., a miner at Roslyn; Donney M., wife of H. P. Hansen, a grocer; James R., a trackman in the Roslyn mines; E. Frank, mine driver at Roslyn, and Etta I., wife of Mr. Owens, a butcher. Mr. and Mrs. Holland have five children: Annie M., born September 20, 1883; Donna M., now Mrs. A. R. Smith, wife of a Roslyn miner and farmer; John E., born October 17, 1887, a graduate from the Roslyn grammar school; Barbara E., born December 10, 1892, and Selma M., born October 20, 1894. Mr. Holland is an Odd Fellow and a Knight of Pythias. He has occupied all the chairs in both lodges. He and his wife are members of the Rebekahs and Rathbone Sisters, and are members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Holland served four years as city councilman and resigned after another election. He is one of the most popular laboring men in Roslyn and is highly esteemed by his employers. His home is comfortable and well adapted to the needs of one of his calling. Besides owning his present dwelling, he has property holdings in Seattle, and considerable money now on deposit.

AUGUST KLAVON is a native of Prussia, Germany, born August 8, 1853. He is a blacksmith and resides in Roslyn, Washington. His parents, Jacob and Elizabeth (Mehl) Klavon, were natives of Prussia. In the country of his birth Mr. Klavon attended school, and, when fourteen years old, began learning his trade, serving a four years' apprenticeship. He came to the United States in 1871, and for a time worked as a farm hand in Belleville, Illinois. Following this he worked at his trade until 1887, when he moved to Roslyn and engaged with the coal company. He now has nine men under his supervision, and with this force does all the work for the different mines, at Roslyn, Cle-Elum and Ravondale.

Mr. Klavon was married in Belleville, Illinois, November 8, 1877, to Annie Rockmann, who was born in Michigan, October 31, 1858, and who died at Roslyn, December 26, 1889. Her parents were Christopher and Annie Rockmann. Louisa D. Diener, a sister of the deceased wife of Mr. Klavon, is the wife of C. F. Diener, living near Easton, Washington. The two sisters of Mr. Klavon are Bertha (Klavon) Ross, of Belleville, Illinois, and Nellie (Klavon) Selna, of Milwaukee. Mr. Klavon has four children: Annie, now Mrs. Theo. Chadwick, of Lowell, Washington; Augusta, born October 5, 1880, who is keeping house for her father; Louisa, now Mrs. P. H. Adams, of Renton, Washington; August W., who is learning the trade of blacksmith under his father in the company shops, and Charlie, who was born in Roslyn, October 28, 1888. All the children have been educated in the Roslyn schools. Mr. Klavon was brought up as a member of the Lutheran church. During his sixteen years of continuous service with the company he has accumulated a comfortable home and landed property in Seattle, with a good bank account held in reserve.

SAMUEL E. CRAIG is a brickmason, who resides at Roslyn, Washington. He was born in Grant county, Wisconsin, September 6, 1861. His father, William H. Craig, was born in England, and came to the United States when young. He was just in time to serve in the Civil war, following which he fought against the Indians of the Southwest. The mother of Samuel E. Craig was Jane (Cox) Craig, a native of Pennsylvania. There were six children in the family, namely, Britton E., who now operates a ferry-boat on the Columbia river; Edward W., now farming in Yakima county; William H., a bricklayer of Spokane; Hortense, now Mrs. Arthur Sanford of South Dakota; Augusta, now Mrs. William Al-sop, wife of a contractor and builder; and Samuel E., of whom this article is written. Mr. Craig was educated in Webster City, Iowa, where he began to learn his trade when eighteen years old, under the instruction of his father. He moved to Washington in 1888, and settled in Ellensburg, where he remained eight years, then helping to rebuild the city after the great fire of July 4, 1889. Thence he moved to Roslyn and has since worked with the coal company. He is mason for the camp and city, and has charge of the company brickyard. In 1883 he married Miss Agnes Rose, who died in 1888, leaving two children, Robert, born January 17, 1886, and Gertrude, born January 7, 1888. Robert is a graduate of the Ellensburg high school. He was again married in 1903 to Miss Carrie George, who was born in Little Rock, Iowa, February 23, 1872. She is a daughter of Ellis and Deboerah (Pickering) George, residents of Kittitas county, Washington. Her brothers and sisters are, John G., a miner; Julia, now Mrs. Charles Duark; Eva E., now Mrs. Thomas Early, of Ballard, Washington; Rachel E., wife of John C. Barton, a civil engineer with the Santa Fe railroad. This sister is now on the stage as Mrs. George. Two others, a brother and a sister, are Enos George, a farmer of this county, and Lucy J., now Mrs. Charles Bridgeham, of Kangley. Mr. Craig is a member of the Congregational church. He owns a neat home in Roslyn, and possesses other property in Cle-Elum. He is energetic and progressive, and said to be a master of his trade.

FRANK X. KARRER, of Roslyn, was born in Kufstein, Tyrol, Austria, in 1852, and was educated in his native land. Before coming to this country he served in Franz Joseph Empire regiment, of Austria. For two years he was a private, and the last year a sergeant. He took a two-year course in field telegraphy in Innsbruck, Tyrol. In 1878 he came to Bartow, Pennsylvania, and after staying a few years in that place moved to Weir City, Kansas. Later, in 1881, he married Miss Theresia Braun, who was born in Belleville, St. Clair county, Illinois. Her parents were John and Theresia Braun, natives of Germany, who came to the United States when young. After marriage Mr. Karrer moved to Rich Hill, Missouri, in 1884, and thence to Kittitas county, in 1890, where he accepted employment with a coal company as carpenter. He is now carpenter boss for the Northwestern Improvement Company, at Roslyn. Mr. and Mrs. Karrer are now the parents of eight children, of whom they are deservedly proud. Anna M., the elder, was born October 16, 1883; Frank X., Jr., born November 27, 1884, and Matilda W., born January 31, 1886. Matilda graduated from the Ellensburg high school in 1902, and Frank, upon graduation, was valedictorian of his class. The two girls are now attending the State Normal School, at Ellensburg, and their brother, Frank, is taking a collegiate course in Seattle. The younger children are: Enoch, born May 23, 1887, Sebastian S., born April 10, 1889, both of whom are now in attendance at the Ellensburg high school; Clara Z., born November 25, 1892; Hannah V., born May 20, 1895, and Rosella, born August 9, 1897. Mr. Karrer is a member of the Foresters' court. He possesses a fine residence in Roslyn. He is giving his children every advantage of education and the results are most satisfactory to him. One and all, his children are studious and appreciative of the help he is giving them. Both he and his family are held in the highest esteem wherever known.

PETER BAGLEY, foreman in the Northwestern Improvement Company's coal mines at Roslyn, was born in the County of Armagh, Ireland, December 26, 1862. His father, James Bagley, was a native of Ireland, as was also his mother, Catherine. The father came with his family to the United States in 1863, and settled in Illinois. Thence he moved to New Castle, Washington Territory, there to engage in mining, and in 1869 sent for his family. He later met his death by an accident in the mines. Peter Bagley, of whom we write, after attending the public schools for a time, followed in the footsteps of his father, and at the age of sixteen began work in the mines near Seattle. After five years he engaged with a civil engineering corps in surveying lines for the railroads from Renton to Black Diamond, and, two years later, entered the Seattle bottling works, where he was employed for some time. He was engaged in the liquor business for a time at New Castle, but this not being to his liking, he returned to mining, engaging with the Northwestern Improvement Company, at Roslyn. Since then he has held steadily to this occupation, rising from a coal digger to the foremanship, which position he now holds. Mr. Bagley has brothers and sisters as follows: John, Mrs. Mary Wood, Rosa, Agnes and James, all living in Seattle; Mrs. Kate Cameron, Westminster, British Columbia; Thomas, Nellie and Lizzie, living in Alaska.

Mr. Bagley was married in 1887, at New Castle, Washington, to Mary Barrett, living near Renton, where her father is now engaged in farming. Mrs. Bagley has three sisters: Kate, wife of a railroad conductor, William McGuire, of Tacoma; Maggie, wife of William Wadham, Westminster, British Columbia, and Mrs. Ella King, of Seattle. Mr. and Mrs. Bagley have six children: Nellie, Maggie, Rosa, Katie, Mae and Edward J. Mr. Bagley is a member of Lake Valley Lodge No. 112, Independent Order of Odd Fellows, and the Foresters of America. He was raised under Catholic influence in church matters. The position he holds in the mines is one of responsibility, and he is said never to have violated the confidence placed in him by his principals.

ISAAC M. SALLY, who has held a position of trust with the Northwestern Improvement Company for many years, having served the company as engineer in the mines since 1888, was born in Chesterfield county, Virginia, June 16, 1852. He received his early education in his native state, and was then employed in a sawmill for two years. Afterwards, for a year he worked in the coal mines at Murphysboro, Illinois, and still later worked for a time on the river steamer A. J. White, plying on the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. Not liking this employment, he returned to the mines at St. Johns, Illinois, and there secured a position as fireman, which he held for eight years. He also worked at other points in Illinois mining districts until 1888, when he came to Roslyn, and engaged in the mines as coal loader. Being trustworthy, he was soon advanced to the position of fireman, and in January, 1889, to that of engineer. This position he has held ever since. Mr. Sally was married in 1889, at Roslyn, to Miss Lucy Clark, of Manchester, Kentucky, who was born in Clay county, that state, in 1858. Both Mr. and Mrs. Sally are members of the Baptist church. They own their home in Roslyn and have property holdings in Seattle. They suffered the loss of one house by fire since living in Roslyn, but by frugality and economy have since then quite recovered from this reverse. Mr. and Mrs. Sally are highly esteemed members of the community.

CARTER NICHOLAS, who holds the position of engineer in the Roslyn mines, was born in Charlottesville, Virginia, April 29, 1865, and was educated in the public schools of that state. Later, he went to Illinois and accepted employment in the roller mills at Joliet, where he remained for a number of years, and during which time he learned the trade of engineer. In 1889 he came to Roslyn and at once secured charge of an engine in the coal mines of the Northwestern Improvement Company, which position he has held continuously for fourteen years. He commenced working here at a wage of two dollars per day, but as a result of faithfulness and proficiency in his work, has had his salary materially increased. Mr. Nicholas was married in Illinois in 1883 to Miss Levia Jones, who was born in Manchester, Clay county, Kentucky. Five children have since been born to them: Bertha, Nettie, Marv, Estella and Albert. The father is a member of the Masonic Order, and also, with his family, has membership in the Baptist church. He has been honored by his fellow citizens with election to the office of city councilman, which position he now holds. He owns property in Roslyn, and takes a patriotic interest in the upbuilding of the city.

MATT. COLLET, employed in the Roslyn coal mines as a "shot-lighter," is a native of Germany, where he was born in 1876. When he was nine years old he came with his mother to the United States, and the two took up their residence in Fayette, Missouri. Here young Collet grew to manhood, during the period attending the public schools of that town. After a residence there of twelve years he, in 1897, decided to try his fortune in the far Northwest and made Roslyn, the great coal-mining center, his objective point. At this place he secured employment in the company mines, and has since been given the position of shot-lighter. His duty is to fire the charges of powder set by the miners, and examine whether or not gas has accumulated in the mine before the shots are fired, thus by care avoiding a general explosion. He was married in Roslyn, January 21, 1902, to Margaret Renton, daughter of William Renton, a Roslyn miner, and Martha (Watson) Renton. They have one child, Mildred Ione, born November 15, 1902. Two brothers of Mr. Collet are now living, John in Renton, and Frank in Montana; both are miners. Mrs. Collet has one brother, George W., who is now living in Roslyn. The subject of this biography was raised under the influence of the Catholic church. He owns a home in Roslyn, and though a young man, is making good progress in life.

WILLIAM HARRISON, a Roslyn miner, is a native of Pennsylvania, born at Mansfield, that state, November 17, 1868. His father, Ralph Harrison, miner and horticulturist, was born in England and came to the United States in 1861. His mother, Mary Harrison, also a native of England, came to this country with her husband. She died at Cle-Elum, July 12, 1903. William Harrison received his education in the public schools of Illinois, where his parents moved when he was six years old. He made that state his home until 1883, at which time he and his parents moved to Dakota. He engaged in mining at Sims, for what is now known as the Northwestern Improvement Company. Later he went into Montana and was employed in the company's mines in that state. In 1885 he moved to Roslyn and began work in the mines at that place, where he has continued ever since. He has now been with the company at various places for almost twenty years. He has five brothers, namely: Ralph, Edward, Robert, James J. and George, all now residing at Cle-Elum, Washington. His only sister, Mrs. Annie Graham, is living in Bellingham.

Mr. Harrison was married at Roslyn, in 1894, to Mrs. Mary (Turner) Wright, whose husband lost his life in the Roslyn mine explosion in 1892. Mrs. Harrison is a native of England. Her father, William Turner, died there several years ago. Her mother, now Mrs. Elizabeth Cloughlyn, of Silver Plume, Colorado, is also of English nativity. By her first marriage Mrs. Harrison had three children: Sidney H., Willie and Albert. Children by her second marriage are Robert W., Frank E., Nettie E., Edward A. and Bertha F. Fraternally, Mr. Harrison is affiliated with Welcome Lodge No. 30, Knights of Pythias, and with the Improved Order of Red Men. He was raised under the influence of the Church of England. He owns town property both in Roslyn and in Cle-Elum, and is a respected citizen of the former town.

ARTHUR W. HODDER, connected with the Roslyn coal mines in the capacity of fire boss, is a native of England, born October 3, 1868. One year after his birth his parents immigrated to the United States, and thus young Hodder grew up on American soil. He has imbibed the ideas and principles of this country completely, since he knows nothing of his birthplace excepting such knowledge as he has acquired by reading, and through family traditions. His father, Jacob Hodder, and his mother, Anna (Barnes) Hodder, were born in England, and came to the United States in 1869, settling in Iowa, where the father is now engaged in the coal business. Arthur Hodder grew to young manhood in Iowa, where he received his education in the public schools of Oskaloosa. At the age of sixteen he began work in the coal mines of that state, and this occupation he followed for a number of years. In 1898, hearing of the attractive opportunities offered to coal-miners in the great Northwest, he came to Roslyn and accepted employment with the coal company of that place in the capacity of a common miner. He has since been promoted to his present position of fire boss, one duty of which is to daily inspect the portion of the mine under his supervision to see that there is no accumulation of gases or other unfavorable condition existing, endangering the lives of the miners. He has one sister, Elsie, who is living in Norris, Illinois.

On June 24, 1903, at Roslyn, Mr. Hodder was united in marriage to Miss Hannah Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Stewart, both natives of England and now residing at Roslyn, where Mr. Stewart is engaged in mining. Mrs. Hodder, the bride's mother, was born in Deerham, England, July 17, 1877, and came to this country with her parents when she was but four years of age. She has three sisters: Eliza, living in Roslyn; Maggie and Mary, in Streator, Illinois; a brother, Joseph, also lives in Streator. Mr. Hodder is a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the Improved Order of Red Men. While he has followed mining for a number of years he has met with none of the accidents common to those of his calling, which exemption is due largely to his proficiency and good judgment. He owns property in Roslyn, acquired through the industry and careful management characteristic of the man. He is one of the trusted employees of the mining company and a respected citizen of the town.

JOSEPH J. HARTLEY was born in Bradford, Yorkshire, England, in 1857, where he grew to manhood and was educated. He served his apprenticeship as a printer and worked at that trade until he left England. His father, Joseph Hartford Hartley, was a printer and a dealer in stationery. His mother, Sarah (Gill) Hartley, was a native of England. After arriving at manhood's estate the younger Hartley decided to leave the tight little island of his nativity and seek a wider field of action. Accordingly he took passage to the United States. In June, 1881, he reached this country and settled in Bandera county, Texas. Here he engaged in the stock business until 1890, when he determined to try the Pacific coast country. After one year in Oregon he came to Kittitas county, settling on Teanaway creek, where he bought a half-interest in one hundred and sixty acres of land. After one year he sold and homesteaded another quarter in the same vicinity. This he improved and farmed for five years. An opening then offered itself with the Northwestern Improvement Company, which he accepted, and later became stock boss at the company stables, having the management of all the stock used in and about the mines. This position he now holds, having several helpers under him. He has one sister, living in Bandera county, Texas.

Mr. Hartley was married in Kittitas county, November 22, 1891, to Alice Gibb, daughter of Thomas and Fannie (Davis) Gibb, both natives of England. Mrs. Hartley has one sister, Mrs. Richard Walsh, living in Kittitas county. Husband and wife are of the Episcopal communion. Mr. Hartley is an active member of Welcome lodge, No. 30, Knights of Pythias, in which he now holds the office of treasurer. Mrs. Hartley is a prominent member of the Rathbone Sisters, having passed through all the chairs of that order. Mr. Hartley owns a home in Roslyn and while, for the time being, he has abandoned agricultural pursuits, he still owns a farm of one hundred and sixty acres on the Yakima river. He enjoys the confidence and respect of his fellow citizens.

CHRISTOPHER F. DIENER is a retired carpenter, now engaged in farming about three and one-half miles east of Easton, Washington. He was born in Wurtemberg, Germany, July 7, 1849. His parents, John and Elizabeth (Schiverle) Diener, were both Germans and are dead. Mr. Diener was educated and learned his trade in Germany, and in 1868 came to the United States and located in Stratford, Fairfield county, Connecticut, working as gardener. Later he worked at his trade at Pittsburg for five years; then resided for a time in Youngstown, Ohio, and in St. Clair county, Illinois. He was in the mines at the latter place and also in Kentucky. Later he revisited Illinois, Pennsylvania and Ohio, and located again in Illinois for nine years. From Illinois he moved to Roslyn, and for sixteen months was employed by the coal company, quitting at the end of this period and locating on his present farm, which he took up as a homestead in 1888. He was married November 13, 1880, at Belleville, Illinois, to Miss Louisa Rockmann, who was born in Michigan, April 25, 1863. Her parents were Christian and Annie (Dressler) Rockmann. Her brothers and sisters are: Frank, of St. Louis; August, Mrs. Caroline Herr, Mrs. Minnie Walter and William Rockmann, the last five named all living in Belleville, Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Diener have four children: John H., born March 25, 1883; Fred, born December 26, 1890; Susie E., born November 10, 1895, and Maudie, born September 26, 1901. Mr. Diener is a Knight of Pythias. He was brought up under the influence of the Lutheran church. He has a fine farm of one hundred and sixty acres and as much more pasture lands. He is a well posted and prosperous farmer, well esteemed by his neighbors.

CARL ENENKEL is the manager and part owner of the Swack Creek Mining & Development Company. His home is one mile east of Liberty, Kittitas county, Washington. He was born in Vienna, Austria, June 8, 1864. His father, Carl Enenkel, was also a native of Vienna, born May 10, 1834. The elder Enenkel served eleven years in the Austrian army as a corporal, and took part in the battles of Mantua, Badna and Solferino, receiving a very bad wound in the chin and breast from shrapnel, which would have killed him instantly had it not been for the protection afforded by a breast-plate that he wore. This wound prevented his further service and he received an honorable discharge. Mr. Enenkel's mother, Julia (Schindler) Enenkel, was born in Austria, February 20, 1845. Her father has been engaged in the manufacture of woolen, linen and tapestry for the past thirty years. Mr. Enenkel received his early education in Vienna, and took a three years' course in the textile branch, at Gumpendorf Textile Institute. He graduated in 1884 and afterwards took charge of the factory of Phillip Haas & Sons. He served one year in the Austrian army and December 20, 1885, received an honorable discharge. He then moved to the United States with the intention of following his profession, but found so much competition that he abandoned that idea. He, with a fellow countryman, then started a spinning and weaving establishment in Baltimore, Maryland, but met with poor success. Mr. Enenkel sold his interests in the business to his partner and moved to Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, where he engaged in designing for tapestry and upholstery. In 1898, he received the appointment of assistant manager for the mining company with which he is now connected, and moved to Washington. Buying a group of quartz and placer claims and locating another group, the company operated the placer properties for about three years and then sold them to Hans Weniger, a member of the company. Since this sale he has been in charge as manager and part owner. Mr. Enenkel has a brother and sister, both natives of Austria, where they reside. The brother, Herman, born November 29, 1868, is manager of a factory. The sister, Julia, was born in May, 1880.

Mr. Enenkel was married in Philadelphia, November 30, 1890, to Miss Eva Krupp, daughter of Jacob and Anna (Hens) Krupp. Her father, born in Germany in 1843, was a butcher. Her mother was born in Bavaria. Mrs. Enenkel was born in Bavaria, May 12, 1873, and was educated in that country. She was one of four children, and her eldest brother, Jacob, was born in Bavaria, in 1868. Her other brother, William, born in Bavaria in 1870, is now a resident of Philadelphia, as is also her sister, Mrs. Barbara Muhler, born in Bavaria in 1878. Mr. Enenkel was brought up in the Catholic church, of which his wife is also a member. In matters of politics, he is a Democrat. He is achieving success as manager of the mining interests under his control, and is a well known and respected citizen.

THOMAS CADWELL, until recently engaged in business in Roslyn, Washington, as a jeweler and watchmaker, was born in England, February 6, 1850, and received his early education there. He worked in the mines until he was twenty-three years old, when he entered upon an apprenticeship at Durham, England, in the trade of jeweler and watchmaker. He later opened a store in Leadgate, England, which he conducted until 1881, when he came to the United States. He found employment in the mines at Riverton and Barton, Illinois, and Rich Hill, Missouri, for about two years, and moved then to Roslyn, Washington. In 1890 he opened a jewelry store here and conducted it until 1903, when he retired from the business. He is now devoting his attention to his farm on the Yakima river, near Cle-Elum. Thomas Cadwell is the son of Joseph and Jane H. (Thompson) Cadwell, both natives of England, and both deceased. He is the fourth in a family of eight children.

Mr. Cadwell was married in England, April 19, 1873, to Miss Mary Ann Burrill, who was born in England, November 4, 1851. Her parents were Francis and Jane (Gaines) Burrill, both natives of England. Her only brother, Thomas Burrill, is an English farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Cadwell have the following children: Joseph Cadwell, born April 17, 1876; Thomas Henry, born October 1, 1880; Jane Hannah Cadwell, born December 22, 1886; John G. Cadwell, born December 17, 1889, and Laura M. Cadwell, born April 20, 1891. Husband and wife attend the Episcopal church. Mr. Cadwell is an ardent Republican. For thirteen years he was a member of the Independent Order of Odd Fellows. He is an industrious, capable and successful business man and has accumulated considerable property. He owns two business blocks in Roslyn in addition to his residence, and has a fine farm of one hundred and sixty-two and seven-tenths acres on the Yakima river.

GEORGE D. VIRDEN is a farmer and mining man, who lives at Liberty postoffice, twelve miles east of Cle-Elum, Washington. He was born in Illinois, February 23, 1847. His father, Oscar Virden, was born in Kentucky, June 19, 1819, and is now farming in Iowa. The mother, Love C. (Powel) Virden, was born in Vermont in 1821, and is still living. In addition to the son George, there are in the family one son and two daughters: Charles Virden, an Iowa farmer; Lizzie (Virden) Blye and Emily (Virden) Coons, wives of Minnesota farmers. George D. Virden, of whom we write, attended the schools of Black Hawk county, Iowa, until he was nineteen years old, and then spent two years on his father's farm. He afterwards moved to Kansas and engaged in farming for himself for five years, but, on account of drought and grasshoppers, again moved, this time to Washington. He arrived in Kittitas county in September, 1876, and two years later moved on his present farm.

Mr. Virden was married in Iowa, April 9, 1868, to Miss Rebecca Walker, who was born in Ohio, April 20, 1849. Her father and mother, David and Leah (Mohl) Walker, were natives of Pennsylvania and of German descent; both are now deceased. The brothers and sisters of Mrs. Virden are as follows: Sarah (Walker) Wakeman and Lizzie (Walker) Zartman, both deceased; John Walker, a farmer, now residing at Frederick, Kansas; Frank Walker, a Kansas carpenter; Josiah Walker, Hattie (Walker) Rugg, and Jennie (Walker) Saunders, the three last named now deceased; David Walker, of Kansas City, Missouri; Clara (Walker) Rugg (deceased) and Milton Walker, a farmer of Kansas. Another sister, Mrs. Johanna (Walker) Schuffell, is now residing in Ohio, and a brother, Byron Walker, is a music teacher at Hutchinson, Kansas. Eight children have been born to Mr. and Mrs. Virden. Mabel, the first child, died. The others are: William, born November 6, 1871; Della (Virden) Piland, born September 17, 1873, both of Kittitas county; Leah (Virden) Crowley, born March 24, 1875, of Ellensburg; Ida (Virden) Lundberg, born April 10, 1880 (deceased); George Virden, born May 15, 1883; Norman Virden, born September 18, 1887, and Chester Virden, born September 7, 1892. Mr. Virden was intimately associated with pioneer mining in the county. He took out the first sack of coal from Roslyn, and brought it to Ellensburg, where a blacksmith test showed its value. He located one hundred and sixty acres of coal land and intended to file on it, but found the land was unsurveyed, so let it go. He now has one of the most valuable coal deposits in the county. He also hauled the first wagon load of coal from the Roslyn mine for use in his own blacksmith shop. He was one of the early locaters in the Swauk Creek gold district, where he now has three mines, the Gold Hill, Summit and Gold Bug. He has three hundred and twenty acres of land, of which one-third is under cultivation. His farm is equipped with stock and machinery necessary for its proper cultivation, and in addition, with a good barn, machinery sheds, and a comfortable nine-room dwelling house. Mr. Virden is one of the leading farmers of the county, and has a wide circle of friends.

GUSTAF NILSON is a mining man, living four and one-half miles southwest of Liberty, Washington. He was born in Sweden, April 5, 1830. His parents, Nils Nilson and Engebord (Gro) Nilson, were born in Sweden in 1817 and 1818, respectively, and are now both deceased. Mr. Nilson attended school in his native land until he was seventeen years old. He then engaged in railroad work and mining, which occupations he followed until he was twenty-two years old. Next, he followed a seafaring life for two years and a half. When the life of a sailor was no longer to his liking he came to the United States, where, in Illinois, he engaged in farming. Later, feeling a revival of nautical tendencies, he worked on a Mississippi river steamboat, after which he railroaded until 1880, since which time he has devoted most of his attention to mining. He has been a resident of Washington since 1870. He was the first postmaster at Liberty, and took out the first copper and silver ore from the Fish Lake country. He located placer claims on Liberty bar and took out $19,000 before selling his holdings in 1899. He now owns quartz properties in the Swauk district. Mr. Nilson has two sisters and two brothers. The sisters are Mrs. Engelborg (Nilson) Swanson, of Cle-Elum, and Mrs. Anna (Nilson) Anderson, of Klickitat county; the brothers are Axel Nilson, a minister in Sweden, and Olaf Nilson, a manufacturer, also in the old country. Mr. Nilson is the owner of about four hundred acres of farm land, upon which is a good house and a large barn. He has plenty of live stock and farming implements. Fraternaly, he is associated with the Knights of Pythias, and, in religion, he is an adherent of the German Lutheran church. He is a prosperous and well-informed mining man whose success is fully merited.

THOMAS LIVINGSTON is a native of the state of Washington, born in Seattle, March 1, 1874. He is engaged in mining, and resides a half mile southeast of Liberty, Washington. He is a son of Jacob Livingston, one of the pioneers of the state. His mother, Elizabeth (Brown) Livingston, was born in Washington, in 1853, and died when Thomas was but two years old. The father is of Holland Dutch and Scotch descent, and was born in Pennsylvania, June 22, 1837. Thomas Livingston studied in the common schools of Ellensburg until he was eighteen years old. He then engaged in prospecting and placer mining, which he has since followed with considerable success. His two brothers reside in this state. They are James Livingston, born in Seattle, June, 1876, now engaged in mining in Kittitas county, and George W., born at Liberty, March 23, 1881. Mr. Livingston was married in Everett, Washington, November 17, 1898, to Miss Estella King, who was born in Illinois, February 18, 1883. The parents of the bride were William and Alice King, who, with their three other children, Robert, Rosie and Mary, now reside in Loomis, Washington. Mr. and Mrs. Livingston have one child, Ruby M., born in Neighborsville, Washington, October 2, 1901. Mr. Livingston is a Republican. He is said to be one of the best posted mining men of the county in which he resides, and is the owner of a number of paying mining properties. He is one of the progressive citizens of the county.

TORKEL TWEET is a mining man whose home is one mile north of Liberty, Washington. He was born in Norway, February 14, 1855, and has been in the United States since he was thirteen years old. His parents were John and Anna (Frolin) Tweet, both born in Norway about the year 1812. The elder Tweet is now deceased. Torkel Tweet attended school in his native land and later finished his education in the common schools of Minnesota and Wisconsin. When seventeen years of age he engaged in farming in Minnesota, and was thus employed ten years. Then he took up railroad contracting in Wisconsin, Minnesota and Montana. From 1883 to 1885 he prospected in the Coeur d'Alene mining district of Idaho. Thence he moved to the Liberty district, where he has since prospected and mined, excepting two years, during which time he was in Alaska. He is now operating the Selma mine, which is owned by Mr. Jenzer and himself. The two partners have extracted about $14,000 worth of ore from other mining property they own, which claims are the Phoenix and Little York. Mr. Tweet has two brothers and one sister, natives of Norway. The brothers are Thomas and John Tweet, and the sister is Mrs. Borney (Tweet) Knutson. The two last named reside in Minnesota. Mr. Tweet is a Republican, and in religion, is connected with the German Lutheran church. His mining properties are considered among the best in the state, and he handles them to the best advantage, being thor-

JOHN JENZER is a mining man living at Liberty, Washington. He is a native of Switzerland, born in Melchman, Canton Berne, August 15, 1860, and is the son of Andreas and Elizabeth Jenzer, natives of Switzerland, both born in the year 1831. The parents are dead. The son John spent his youth and early manhood in his native country, coming to the United States in 1887, in his twenty-seventh year. Upon arrival in this country he located first in California, where he followed mining in various parts of the state for a number of years. He went to Alaska prior to the rush of miners to that place, and while there met with fair success, facing the dangers and enduring the hardships of the earliest pioneer days. He also spent seven winters and eight summers in the Yukon country. Returning to the states in the fall of 1902, he settled at Liberty, Kittitas county, Washington. Since that time he has purchased a half interest with Torkel Tweet in five mines which promise excellent returns when thoroughly developed. Like all prospectors and miners, he has experienced many "ups and downs" in the search for the hidden treasures of the earth, but with the true grit and determination of the native mountaineer, he has persevered, has faced many dangers and overcome many difficulties, and has faith that the future will yet crown his efforts with success. Born among the mountains of his native country, he is nowhere more at home than among the mountains of his adopted land. Mr. Jenzer was third in a family of five children, two of whom have passed away. In political matters, he adheres to the principles of the Republican party and takes an active interest in political campaigns. He was reared in the German Lutheran church. He is energetic and ambitious, and is working hard to make his mining properties take rank with the great producers of the Northwest. He is a man highly respected and esteemed by all who know him.

JOHN BLOMQUIST, a mining man and miller of Liberty, Washington, was born in Sweden, June 12, 1840. He is the son of Carl and Elizabeth Blomquist, both born in Sweden, where his father, a farmer by occupation, died. Mr. Blomquist's career has been one of work and activity, during which, as a sailor, he managed to see a goodly portion of the world. He worked on his father's farm and attended the common schools of his native country until seventeen years of age. In 1858 he came to the United States, landed at Boston, and from that port shipped as a sailor on a vessel bound for China. During the voyage his ship was wrecked, her cargo lost, and it was with difficulty that the crew were saved from watery graves. After four years spent as a seaman, he came to California, in 1861. Determined to leave the sea, he secured employment in a shipbuilding yard, where he remained four years, at the expiration of which time he again shipped for China. In that country he remained three years, then came to Puget Sound and again took work in a shipbuilding yard. In 1871 he came to Kittitas county and took up a ranch eight miles from Ellensburg. He was the first settler to make filings on a homestead in the Yakima land office. He lived on this claim for a number of years, a portion of which time he also ran a brewery. In 1873 he removed to Swauk Prairie and opened a mine near the Discovery claim. Seven years ago he established a sawmill on the prairie, and has made this his home up to the present time. His firm is styled the Blomquist Mining & Milling Company.

Mr. Blomquist was married in Seattle, in 1871, to Miss Eliza Jordan, to which union four children were born: Gustave, August 28, 1875; Emma White, July 6, 1877; Charley, June, 1879, and Frank, April, 1882; all were born in Kittitas county, and are still living, with the exception of the last named. Mr. Blomquist's first wife died sixteen years ago, and ten years subsequent to her death Mr. Blomquist was married to Mrs. Mortsen, who was born in Norway in 1863, and educated in that country. To this union, also, four children have been born: Francis, Victor, Cisciel and Helmer, all natives of Kittitas county, and born in 1897, 1899, 1900 and 1902, respectively. Mr. Blomquist is a Democrat in politics, but not a rabid partisan. He has a sawmill on Williams creek, which is doing a profitable business. He is also interested in a number of mines, and is opening up some promising quartz properties in the vicinity of his home. He is one of the well-to-do business men of his county, and one of the most popular citizens, both in business and social circles.

R. A. BARRY lives one and one-half miles north of Liberty, Washington, where he is engaged in mining. He was born in Olympia, Washington, April 18, 1875, being the son of Jerome and Hellen (Merced) Barry. Both of his parents were natives of Maine, where the father was born in 1829 and the mother in 1848. Mr. Barry is now deceased. R. A. Barry, of whom we write, attended the common schools and high school at Olympia until he was seventeen years old. Then in July, 1892, he moved to Liberty and engaged in prospecting and mining. He has charge of mining work for several companies. The Getchell Mining Company was organized to develop some of his prospects in July, 1901, and Mr. Barry is now in charge of the work as manager, and is also one of the heaviest stockholders of the company. The company has four claims on a contact lead, and four on a fissure vein, the prospects in view being most flattering. Thus far about twenty thousand dollars has been expended in development work, and it is claimed there are ten million dollars in ore in sight in the main tunnel. This tunnel taps the ledge at a depth of two hundred feet. The ledge is sixty feet wide.

Mr. Barry was married in Olympia, January 5, 1902, to Miss Fanny Early, who was born in Kansas City, July 21, 1882. Her father is William Early; the mother died when Mrs. Barry was three years of age. She has but one brother, Robert, born in 1880. Mr. Barry also has but one brother, Earl, now residing at Olympia. Mr. and Mrs. Barry have one child, Wallace, born August 7, 1903. Politically, Mr. Barry affiliates with the Republican party, and fraternally, with the Modern Woodmen of America. By economy he has accumulated considerable property in addition to his mining interests. The Getchell mine was located in 1900. A complete two-stamp mill has been erected and will start steady operation this year. Mr. Barry is president and general manager of the company, which is capitalized at one million dollars. He is one of the successful and respected citizens of the county.

EDGAR McCALLUM is a farmer who lives five and one-half miles south of Liberty, Washington. He was born in Iowa, September 7, 1878. He is the son of Peter and Sarah B. (Harrison) McCallum. His father, born in Scotland, January 12, 1849, is at present located at Cle-Elum, Washington. The elder McCallum was the son of Robert and Annie (McKay) McCallum, both natives of Scotland. Robert McCallum was foreman ship carpenter for Dewey Brothers for twenty-one years. He died in 1863. Peter McCallum accompanied his parents to Canada when he was an infant. His father died there and his mother then moved to Iowa, where Peter was educated, and where he worked on farms, thus supporting his mother until 1872, when he went to California. After two years spent in farming and mining, he returned to Iowa, where he was married, in 1874, to Sarah B. Harrison, daughter of W. H. and Milla (Strowbridge) Harrison. He lived in Iowa six years, going at the end of this period to Olympia, Washington, where for nine months he engaged in logging. In August, 1882, he moved to Kittitas county, took up one hundred and sixty acres of land as a homestead, and bought as much more railroad land eighteen miles north of Ellensburg. He lived on this place fifteen years and brought the land into a high state of cultivation. He still owns this land, as well as one hundred and sixty acres adjoining, which he purchased in 1891. In 1897 he went to Seattle and engaged in the grocery business. In February, 1902, he sold out and returned to Cle-Elum, which has since been his home. His first wife died after they had lived together many years. His second wife is Julia Eldred, daughter of Henry W. and Julia (Ryan) Eldred, now of Ellensburg. Mrs. McCallum was born in Wisconsin, and was educated there and in Iowa. She was twenty-two years of age at the time of her marriage to Mr. McCallum. A brother, George, lives in Ellensburg, and Leslie, another brother, is dead. Mr. McCallum's brothers and sisters are: Mrs. Anna Shaw, of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Margaret McConnell, of St. Louis; Catherine and Rebecca, both of Dakota; of the two brothers, Lewis resides in Dakota, and Robert has passed away. By his first wife Peter McCallum had five children: Edgar, the subject of this article; Jessie (McCallum) Dunford, Lewis, Peter and William. He is a Democrat. For sixteen years he was postmaster at McCallum, Washington, and for two years was county commissioner. He is an active member of the Presbyterian church. In addition to his four hundred and eighty acres of farm land, he owns a large amount of valuable property in Cle-Elum.

Edgar McCallum was educated in Kittitas county, and when nineteen years old began farm work, which he has since followed. He was married in Ellensburg, April 12, 1890, to Miss Jessie Lundberg, who was born in Wisconsin, March 8, 1878. He has been working his father's farm, which he has leased for five years, and has been very successful. He has some live stock and all needed farming implements, and is recognized as one of the most competent young farmers of his locality.

ELLING OLSEN, a farmer living six miles south of Liberty, Washington, was born in Norway, October 6, 1851. His parents were Ole and Ingebor (Johnson) Elefson, both natives of Norway. The father is now dead, and the mother resides in this country. Mr. Olsen was educated in Norway, and when twenty-two years old came to the United States and located in Michigan. There he worked in the iron mines for three years. Later he visited Wisconsin for a short time, and then came to Washington, arriving at Tacoma in the fall of 1876. There he stayed for two years, and in July, 1878, came to Kittitas county. After a few years spent in prospecting and mining he bought the farm where he now lives. He moved on the place in 1886, and has since cultivated it. His brothers and sisters are: John Olsen, of this state; Martin Olsen, of Norway; Gus; and Lasse, twins, who are farmers; Mrs. Cecelia (Olsen) Johnson, of Minnesota, and Julia Olsen, of this county. Politically, Mr. Olsen affiliates with the Republican party, and in religion, with the German Lutheran church. He has eighty acres of land, sixty acres of which are well cultivated. In addition to this, jointly with his three brothers, he owns a section of grazing land. He has a good house and barn, and of cattle and horses about thirty-five head. He is doing well, is a capable farmer, progressive in his ideas and well esteemed by his fellow citizens.

GUST and LASSE OLSEN, living six miles south of Liberty, Washington, are twin brothers, born in Norway, September 9, 1859. They are the sons of Ole and Ingebor (Jensen) Elefson, both natives of Norway, Mr. Elefson having been a farmer. The father died in Norway, while the mother is still living with her sons. She was born August 6, 1827, and was married when twenty-one years of age. Until their tenth year, Gust and Lasse Olsen attended the common schools of Norway. At the age mentioned they were hired out to herd sheep and cattle, and continued in that vocation until fifteen years old. At sixteen they took men's places in the field and followed agriculture until their twenty-second year, when they came to the United States. Arriving in this country, they went to Minneapolis, Minnesota, where they worked in a sawmill for seven years. They then removed to Blewett, Chelan county, Washington, where for a period of three years they worked in the mines of that region. In the fall of 1893 they purchased one hundred and sixty acres of land in Kittitas county, where they are now living, and afterwards added, by purchase, three hundred and eighty acres to their holdings. Since 1893 they have been farming; their land is in a high state of cultivation and at the present time they have eighty acres in grain. Elling and John Olsen, living in this state, are their brothers, and Julia, living at the home place, is a sister. There is also a brother, Jens, and a sister, Cecelia Johnson, living in Minnesota, and another brother, Martimus, resides in Norway. All were born in Norway. Gust and Lasse Olsen are Republicans in politics, and members of the Lutheran church. Their farm is one of the best in the county, being well stocked with blooded Durham cattle and with a sufficient number of horses to carry on their work successfully. The brothers are doing exceptionally well in a business way, they enjoy the esteem and confidence of all, and are surrounded by a large circle of social and business friends.

SAMUEL I. RHODES, a mining man living two and one-half miles north of Liberty, Washington, was born in Pennsylvania, January 7, 1863. He is the son of Christ C. and Elizabeth (Uping) Rhodes, both born in Pennsylvania, 1831 and 1834, respectively. Mr. Rhodes' father is a lumberman in business life. He is of English descent, and is still living in the state of his birth, as is also the mother. Until arriving at the age of twenty, Samuel worked on the home farm and attended the public schools of Pennsylvania. He then went to work running a sawmill, doing contract work, following this vocation until the fall of 1889, when he came to Washington. In this state he located in Gray's Harbor, where he followed the lumbering business for two years. His next move was to Prosser, where he engaged in ditch work, which he followed until the spring of 1896, at which time he came to the Swauk mining region, where he came into possession of a promising placer and quartz claim. On one of his claims, the Red Jacket, he has about seven hundred feet of tunnel and shaft work completed, and the group is one of great promise, and has been bonded for a large sum. Mr. Rhodes has three brothers, all born and still living in Pennsylvania. Their names are: Evert H., Nathan T. and Wilbert E. Rhodes.

In Ellensburg, August 28, 1902, Mr. Rhodes was married to Mrs. May B. Haas, daughter of Emery and Kathren (Patterson) Carter. The father of Mrs. Rhodes, born in Kentucky, was a railroad man, and died in 1872. Mrs. Carter was born in Ohio, in 1837, and is now living in Batavia, Illinois. Mrs. Rhodes was born in Springfield, Ohio, August 4, 1865. She received a finished education in the Ohio schools and later took a musical course in Oberlin conservatory. She taught music for eight years, and in 1881 was married to C. Haas. By this union three children were born. Mr. Haas died in 1893, and in 1902 Mrs. Haas was married to her present husband. She has one brother, John P. Carter, born in Ohio, 1858, now living in Chicago. Fraternally, Mr. Rhodes is a member of the Odd Fellows and of the Modern Woodmen of America. Both he and his wife belong to the Protestant church. Both Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes are social leaders in their locality. Her husband is doing well in business, and is rated as being one of the leading business men of Kittitas county.
